Preface

This volume cumulates and replaces the 2013 edition of Volume 15 of the Official Code of Georgia Annotated, as supplemented by the 2019 Cumulative Supplement. The 2013 Volume 15 and its supplement may be recycled or, if so desired, retained for historical purposes.

This volume contains all laws specifically codified in Title 17 by the General Assembly through the 2020 Session. This volume also contains case annotations reflecting decisions posted to LexisNexis® through August 7, 2020. These annotations will appear in the following traditional reporter sources: Georgia Supreme Court Opinions; Georgia Appeals Court Opinions; Southeastern Reporter, Second Series; Supreme Court Reporter; Federal Reporter, Third Series; Federal Supplement, Second Series; Federal Rules Decisions; and Bankruptcy Reporter. As official and traditional citations become available, substitutions for the LexisNexis® citations will be made.

Additionally, LexisNexis® has prepared annotations and references to Attorney General Opinions, law reviews, and other research sources that we hope will be beneficial as you utilize this product. A complete listing of those sources is as follows: Official and Unofficial Attorney General Opinions; Opinions of the Judicial Qualifications Commission; Advisory Opinions of the State Disciplinary Board of the State Bar; Formal Advisory Opinions of the State Disciplinary Board of the State Bar, issued by the Supreme Court of Georgia; Emory Law Journal; Georgia Law Review; Georgia State University Law Review; Mercer Law Review; Georgia State Bar Journal; American Law Reports; American Jurisprudence 2d; American Jurisprudence Pleading and Practice Forms, American Jurisprudence Proof of Facts; American Jurisprudence Trials; Corpus Juris Secundum; and Uniform Laws Annotated. Also included, where appropriate, are cross references to the Official Code of Georgia Annotated.

This volume retains amendment notes and effective date notes for Acts passed during the 2018, 2019, and 2020 Sessions of the General Assembly. In order to determine the changes which were made or the effective date applied to a Code section by an Act passed prior to the 2018 Session of the General Assembly, the user should consult the Georgia Laws.

17-1-1. Filing and service of pleadings, motions, and other papers.

(a) Unless otherwise provided by law or by order of the court, every pleading subsequent to the entry of the initial indictment or accusation upon which the defendant is to be tried; every order not entered in open court; every written motion, unless it is one as to which a hearing ex parte is authorized; and every written notice, demand, and similar paper shall be served upon each party.

(b)(1) Where service is required to be made, the service shall be made upon the party's attorney unless service upon the party himself is ordered by the court. Service upon the attorney or upon a party shall be made by delivering a copy to him or by mailing it to him at his last known address or, if no address is known, by leaving it with the clerk of the court.

(2) As used in this subsection, delivering a copy means:

(A) Handing it to the attorney or to the party;

(B) Leaving it at his office with his clerk or other person in charge thereof; or

(C) If the office is closed or the person to be served has no office, leaving it at his dwelling house or usual place of abode with some person of suitable age and discretion then residing therein.

(c) All original papers, copies of which are required to be served upon parties, shall be filed with the court either before service or immediately thereafter.

(3) The certificate of service provided for in this subsection shall read substantially as follows:

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

"Similar paper" defined. — Copies of indictments and appropriate responses to constitutionally and statutorily authorized discovery requests constitute "similar paper" under O.C.G.A. § 17-1-1(a) and, consequently, must be served upon a defendant and not merely furnished to the defendant by notifying the defendant of the presence of the documents in the clerk's office. Driver v. State, 188 Ga. App. 301, 372 S.E.2d 841 (1988).

Timely filing of service. — There was no authority indicating that untimely filing negated service and notice of the state's witness list in a felony case, especially since service was not disputed. Carter v. State, 253 Ga. App. 795, 560 S.E.2d 697 (2002).

Service by mail. — When it is undisputed that service of notice is properly made by mail in accordance with the statutory provisions, actual notice is not required, and it is immaterial that the notice was not received. Stubbs v. State, 202 Ga. App. 670, 415 S.E.2d 486 (1992).

Notice under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-2 sent to defense attorney held sufficient. — Trial court did not err in imposing a life sentence against the defendant as: (1) the state satisfied the notice requirement under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-2(a) by providing notice to the defendant's attorney; (2) the appeals court presumed that such information was communicated to the defendant; and (3) the defendant failed to contend otherwise. Blevins v. State, 283 Ga. App. 694, 642 S.E.2d 373 (2007).

Service on state by pro se defendant. — When a pro se defendant filed motions to suppress, those motions which the defendant failed to serve on the state could not be considered, and any order which would have been entered as a result of those motions would have been of no effect. Owens v. State, 258 Ga. App. 647, 575 S.E.2d 14 (2002).

Prosecutorial immunity. — District attorney's failure to serve arrestee or arrestee's counsel with a copy of a motion and order resulting in the dead-docketing of charges, while not involving the exercise of any prosecutorial discretion or judgment, was intimately associated with the judicial phase of the criminal process, and therefore within the scope of the district attorney's absolute prosecutorial immunity. Holsey v. Hind, 189 Ga. App. 656, 377 S.E.2d 200 (1988).

In a proceeding on an ex parte motion to correct alleged clerical errors in the court's records of defendant's sentence, failure of the defendant to provide the state with notice or the opportunity made the court's order a nullity. Prater v. State, 222 Ga. App. 486, 474 S.E.2d 684 (1996).

17-1-2. Maintenance of penal actions.

A "penal action" is an action allowed in pursuance of public justice under particular laws. If no special officer is authorized to be the plaintiff therein, the state, the Governor, the Attorney General, or the prosecuting attorney may be the plaintiff.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

State, not victim, has interest in criminal prosecutions. — Because the purpose of criminal law is to serve the public functions of deterrence, rehabilitation, and retribution, it is the state, not the victim, that has an interest in criminal prosecutions. Ambles v. State, 259 Ga. 406, 383 S.E.2d 555 (1989).

Trial court abused the court's discretion by dismissing charges alleging that the defendant violated state statutes prohibiting affrays, disrupting a public school, and criminal trespass by fighting on school grounds, over the state's objection, after defense counsel told the court that school officials wanted the charges dismissed. State v. Perry, 261 Ga. App. 886, 583 S.E.2d 909 (2003).

Action by informer generally impermissible. — Qui tam action, in accordance with this section, cannot be brought and prosecuted in the name of the informer unless a right thus to sue shall have been given distinctly by statute. O'Kelly v. Athens Mfg. Co., 36 Ga. 51 (1867).

No inherent right of informant to forfeiture in criminal case. — Informer who commences a qui tam action under a penal statute does not acquire thereby a vested right to the forfeiture. Bank of St. Mary's v. State, 12 Ga. 475 (1853); Robison v. Beall, 26 Ga. 1 (1858); Hargroves v. Chambers, 30 Ga. 580 (1860).

Court may correct clerk's sentencing error with notice to defendant. — When, due to clerical error on the part of the clerk of the court and inadvertence on the part of the judge in signing the paper without discovering the error, a sentence is in part illegal, the court may, after notice and opportunity to be heard on the part of the defendant, order the error corrected. Wyatt v. State, 113 Ga. App. 857, 149 S.E.2d 837 (1966).

Order valid if error merely clerical. — If the error is merely clerical in nature and does not follow the oral sentence pronounced by the court at the time, then the order as entered nunc pro tunc is a valid and proper sentence. Wyatt v. State, 113 Ga. App. 857, 149 S.E.2d 837 (1966).

17-1-4. Vacation of judgments, verdicts, rules, or orders obtained by perjury.

Any judgment, verdict, rule, or order of court which may have been obtained or entered shall be set aside and be of no effect if it appears that the same was entered in consequence of corrupt and willful perjury. It shall be the duty of the court in which the verdict, judgment, rule, or order was obtained or entered to cause the same to be vacated upon motion and notice to the adverse party; but it shall not be lawful for the court to do so unless the person charged with perjury shall have been duly convicted thereof and unless it appears to the court that the verdict, judgment, rule, or order could not have been obtained and entered without the evidence of the perjured person, saving always to third persons innocent of such perjury the rights which they may lawfully have acquired under the verdict, judgment, rule, or order before the same shall have been actually vacated.

Analysis

General Consideration
Perjury Conviction
Motions

General Consideration

Section does not deny equal protection. — This section applied to all persons alike, and hence, does not deny equal protection to anyone. Burke v. State, 205 Ga. 656, 54 S.E.2d 350 (1949).

Section does not deny due process. — Even though a conviction for crime, procured by perjured evidence and known to be such by the state's prosecuting attorneys, amounts to a denial of due process of law, yet this section, which authorized a new trial when a conviction was based upon perjury and requires that proof of such perjury be made by a judgment of conviction, was not unconstitutional in that the conviction denied due process and equal protection of the law. Chatterton v. State, 221 Ga. 424, 144 S.E.2d 726 (1965), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 1015, 86 S. Ct. 1964, 16 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1966).

Section shows how to prove perjury and requires that judgment be set aside. — This section not only required the setting aside of a judgment procured by perjured testimony, but prescribed the evidence by which the fact of perjury may be proved, thus affording due process. Burke v. State, 205 Ga. 656, 54 S.E.2d 350 (1949).

Former Code 1933, § 110-706 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-1-4) was but the exercise of the sovereign right of the state to fix rules of evidence and was in harmony with former Code 1933, § 38-101 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-1-1). Burke v. State, 205 Ga. 656, 54 S.E.2d 350 (1949).

Judgment overturned only if rights injured. — "Any judgment, verdict, rule, or order of court" refers only to those judgments or orders which go directly in support or defeat of the rights of the parties injuriously affected thereby. Price v. Cobb, 63 Ga. App. 694, 11 S.E.2d 822 (1940).

Conviction based on perjured testimony of which prosecutor had knowledge. — When it is shown and not denied that a conviction was procured by perjured testimony, which testimony the state's prosecuting attorney knew to be perjured at the time the testimony was introduced, due process as guaranteed by U.S. Const., amend. 14 is denied, regardless of whether such testimony is merely impeaching in character or has probative force. Burke v. State, 205 Ga. 656, 54 S.E. 350 (1949).

Perjured exculpatory testimony versus inculpatory. — Trial court could not conclude that the jury's guilty verdicts could not have been obtained without the victim's admittedly perjured exculpatory testimony for the defense because even treating the battery victim's guilty plea and receipt of probation as a first offender conviction, the victim pled guilty to committing perjury with respect to exculpatory trial testimony, not inculpatory testimony during the state's case-in-chief. Walker v. State, 348 Ga. App. 273, 821 S.E.2d 567 (2018).

Witnesses are not judges of truth of testimony. — Witnesses themselves, whoever the witnesses may be, are not the legal judges of the truth of testimony delivered on the original trial, or on an extraordinary motion for a new trial, even though the testimony in controversy is the witnesses' own testimony and was contradictory on two occasions. The laws of the land have put this responsibility upon the judges and the courts, and have laid down certain rules which judges and the courts are to follow in determining this matter. Moore v. State, 59 Ga. App. 456, 1 S.E.2d 230 (1939).

When there was no allegation of indictment and conviction of any witnesses who allegedly testified falsely, the trial court did not err in dismissing the defendant's claim seeking to set aside the judgment against the defendant. Sun v. Bush, 179 Ga. App. 140, 345 S.E.2d 873 (1986).

Grounds for setting judgment aside generally. — Motion, whether the motion be construed as one to arrest or as one to set aside, did not show a proper cause for the relief sought because nowhere in the motion was it alleged that the judgment sought to be set aside or arrested was procured by accident, mistake, or fraud or through any defect not amendable appearing on the face of the record or pleadings or by perjury or any other irregularity. Chambless v. Oates Plumbing & Heating Co., 97 Ga. App. 80, 102 S.E.2d 83 (1958).

Judgment may be set aside even when defect not apparent on record. — This section provides clear recognition of the right to set aside a judgment for a defect not apparent on the record. Ford v. Clark, 129 Ga. 292, 58 S.E. 818 (1907); Lyons v. State, 7 Ga. App. 50, 66 S.E. 149 (1909).

Successful party's admissions may be grounds to set aside. — A new trial may be granted for newly discovered evidence of material admissions of the successful party, which is not cumulative to other evidence offered at the trial. Evidence of admissions made by the successful party after the trial, or subsequent declarations inconsistent with that party's testimony on the trial, may be ground for setting aside the verdict, at least in the interest of justice. Perry v. Hammock, 75 Ga. App. 171, 42 S.E.2d 651 (1947).

Fraud must be extrinsic, not just fraud in procuring judgment. — Frauds for which the court may set aside a former judgment between the same parties are limited to matters which are extrinsic and collateral to the issue tried in the former case, and do not include fraud in procuring a judgment by false testimony unless it is shown, among other things, that the witness has been convicted of perjury. Elliott v. Marshall, 182 Ga. 513, 185 S.E. 831 (1936).

Perjury Conviction

Section requires perjury conviction as purest proof. — This section required evidence which was convincing and which came from the purest source, to wit, a conviction for perjury. Burke v. State, 205 Ga. 656, 54 S.E.2d 350 (1949).

In order not to burden court with choice between contradictory statements. — This section sought the purest source from which proof of perjury could be obtained. It recognized that when one and the same person, speaking under the solemnity of an oath, testified to a state of facts and subsequently, speaking under the solemnity of an oath, gave testimony which completely contradict that previous testimony and assert that the person committed perjury, the court, seeking the discovery of the truth, ought not to be called upon to say whether or not one of such statements is enough reliable evidence to authorize disbelief of the other. Burke v. State, 205 Ga. 656, 54 S.E.2d 350 (1949).

Verdict not set aside without perjury conviction. — Verdict will not be set aside because of the false testimony of a witness unless and until the witness has been convicted of perjury. Stephens v. Pickering, 192 Ga. 199, 15 S.E.2d 202 (1941); Parsons v. Georgia Power Co., 67 Ga. App. 517, 21 S.E.2d 257 (1942); Chandler v. Chandler, 107 Ga. App. 124, 129 S.E.2d 370 (1962); Marshall v. Russell, 222 Ga. 490, 150 S.E.2d 667 (1966), cert. denied, 386 U.S. 911, 87 S. Ct. 857, 17 L. Ed. 2d 783 (1967); Day v. State, 242 Ga. App. 899, 531 S.E.2d 781 (2000).

New trial was not warranted by the fact that a witness executed an affidavit stating that the witness lied when the witness said the defendant admitted to the witness that the defendant killed the victim since there was no evidence that the witness was convicted of perjury or that the defendant's conviction could not have been obtained without the witness's testimony. Ashley v. State, 263 Ga. 820, 439 S.E.2d 914 (1994).

Witness recants under oath. — Evidence that one of the state's witnesses, since the trial, has made declarations, even though under oath, that the witness's testimony given upon the trial was false, is not cause for a new trial. Hall v. State, 117 Ga. 263, 43 S.E. 718 (1903); Clark v. State, 117 Ga. 254, 43 S.E. 853 (1903); Jordan v. State, 124 Ga. 417, 52 S.E. 768 (1905); Hinsman v. State, 14 Ga. App. 481, 81 S.E. 367 (1914); Smarr v. Kerlin, 21 Ga. App. 813, 95 S.E. 306 (1918).

Recanting witness is sole witness. — Perjury of a witness is not a ground which requires the grant of a new trial unless it is made to appear that the witness has been duly convicted thereof, even though the witness who later declares the witness's testimony was false was the sole witness against the defendant. Morrow v. State, 36 Ga. App. 217, 136 S.E. 92 (1926); Moore v. State, 59 Ga. App. 456, 1 S.E.2d 230 (1939); Thompson v. State, 84 Ga. App. 419, 65 S.E.2d 925 (1951).

Perjury conviction not sufficient justification when judgment obtainable without perjured evidence. — Conviction of a perjured witness is not itself sufficient to justify a court in setting aside a verdict and judgment in a case in which the witness testified, unless the verdict or judgment could not have been obtained and entered without the evidence of such perjured person. Richardson v. Roberts, 25 Ga. 671 (1858); Munro v. Moody & Fry, 78 Ga. 127, 2 S.E. 688 (1886); Gant v. State, 115 Ga. 205, 41 S.E. 698 (1902); Thomason v. Thompson, 129 Ga. 440, 59 S.E. 236, 26 L.R.A. (n.s.) 536 (1907); Morgan v. State, 16 Ga. App. 559, 85 S.E. 827 (1915); Massie v. State, 24 Ga. App. 548, 101 S.E. 703 (1919); Tanner v. Wilson, 58 Ga. App. 229, 198 S.E. 77 (1938); Aycock v. State, 188 Ga. 551, 4 S.E.2d 221 (1939); Stephens v. Pickering, 192 Ga. 199, 15 S.E.2d 202 (1941).

Defendant's convictions were not obtained by the use of perjured testimony because there was no showing that any perjury actually occurred or that the witness was ever charged with or convicted of perjury; even assuming that the witness committed perjury, the guilty verdicts and consequent judgments could have been obtained without such evidence because there was testimony from other witnesses at the crime scene portraying the defendant's unjustified shooting of the victim. Nations v. State, 290 Ga. 39, 717 S.E.2d 634 (2011).

Perjured testimony as a turning point in the minds of the jurors. — When the verdict could have been obtained without the evidence of the perjured witness, the appellate court is without power to reverse the trial court which denied the motion for new trial, even though the testimony of the perjured witness may have constituted the turning point in the minds of the jurors bringing about the conviction. Harris v. State, 99 Ga. App. 717, 109 S.E.2d 912 (1959).

Court of equity will not set aside such judgment based on perjured testimony. — Court of equity will not set aside a judgment, although obtained by willful and corrupt perjury, unless it appears that the perjurer has been convicted of such perjury, and unless it appears that a judgment could not have been rendered without the perjured testimony. Hutchings v. Roquemore, 171 Ga. 359, 155 S.E. 675 (1930); Elliott v. Marshall, 182 Ga. 513, 185 S.E. 831 (1936).

No evidence of defendant's perjury conviction. — Although the state argued that the order discharging the defendant from probation resulted from perjury and, thus, the trial court had jurisdiction, the state came forward with no evidence showing that the state had convicted the defendant of perjury and the trial court erred in granting the state's motion to set aside the discharge order. Whipkey v. State, 352 Ga. App. 746, 835 S.E.2d 740 (2019).

Grant of new trial is in judge's discretion. — Fact that a witness for the prevailing party has been afterwards convicted of perjury in respect to testimony given in the trial of the case will not absolutely require the grant of a new trial or a setting aside of the verdict rendered unless it also appears that such verdict could not have been rendered or returned except for such perjured testimony. The fact, however, that the testimony of such witness does not require, as a matter of law, the grant of a new trial will not prevent the trial judge in using judicial discretion from granting such a motion although the judge is not required by law so to do. Geo. A. Hormel & Co. v. Ramsey, 62 Ga. App. 343, 7 S.E.2d 789 (1940).

Not error to refuse to consider perjury evidence without conviction. — No verdict or judgment may be set aside on the grounds of corrupt and willful perjury unless it appears to the court that the person charged with such perjury has been thereof duly convicted. Consequently, there is no error when, on motion for new trial, the trial court refuses to consider any evidence of perjury which would not comply with this section. Mitchell v. State, 120 Ga. App. 447, 170 S.E.2d 765 (1969).

Section may help defendant under certain phases of case. — This section, under certain phases of a case, might operate in favor of a defendant, for irrespective of what the trial judge might think as to whether a new trial should be granted on an extraordinary motion, if it appears that the verdict was entered up on consequence of corrupt and willful perjury, and the persons charged with such perjury have been duly convicted thereof, the verdict should be set aside, unless it appears to the court that the verdict or judgment could have been obtained and entered up without the evidence of such perjured person or persons. Moore v. State, 59 Ga. App. 456, 1 S.E.2d 230 (1939).

Motions

Essential elements of affidavit of illegality. — In order to support an affidavit of illegality based on perjury, two things must appear: (1) there must have been a conviction of perjury; and (2) it must appear that the judgment could not have been obtained without this perjured evidence. Lewis v. Wall, 70 Ga. 646 (1883).

Essential elements of petition to have verdict set aside. — Petition asking that a verdict and decree be set aside because the verdict and decree were rendered on the perjured testimony of a named witness does not set forth a cause of action for that reason when the petition fails to allege that the witness has been duly convicted of perjury with respect to such testimony and that the verdict and decree were based on that testimony alone. Hubbard v. Whatley, 200 Ga. 751, 38 S.E.2d 738 (1946); Day v. Day, 210 Ga. 454, 81 S.E.2d 6 (1954).

Motion in arrest of judgment must allege grounds. — If nowhere in the motion for arrest of judgment it is alleged that the judgment sought to be arrested was procured by accident, mistake, or fraud, through any defect not amendable appearing on the face of the record or pleadings, by perjury, or any other irregularity, the motion is without merit. Stefanick v. Ouellette, 97 Ga. App. 644, 104 S.E.2d 156 (1958).

When motion to vacate fails. — Motion to vacate, presented to the judge at the trial term, wholly fails to meet the requirements of a proceeding to set aside a judgment when it is not addressed to some unamendable defect appearing on the face of the record, as is required of a motion in arrest of judgment and of a statutory motion to set aside, nor if it is founded upon a charge of perjury, and does not seek relief against a judgment irregularly or improperly obtained. East Side Lumber & Coal Co. v. Barfield, 193 Ga. 273, 18 S.E.2d 492 (1942).

Motion to set aside due to alleged perjured testimony. — Defendant was not entitled to have the defendant's convictions set aside due to alleged perjured testimony as the defendant made no showing any perjury actually occurred. Coggins v. State, 293 Ga. 864, 750 S.E.2d 331 (2013).

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

Sec.
17-2-1. Jurisdiction over crimes and persons charged with commission of crimes generally.
17-2-2. Venue generally.
17-2-3. Jurisdiction and venue as to crimes committed on boundary lines between this state and other states.
17-2-4. Defendant arrested, held, or present in county other than that in which indictment or accusation is pending.

17-2-1. Jurisdiction over crimes and persons charged with commission of crimes generally.

(a) It is the policy of this state to exercise its jurisdiction over crime and persons charged with the commission of crime to the fullest extent allowable under, and consistent with, the Constitution of this state and the Constitution of the United States.

(b) Pursuant to this policy, a person shall be subject to prosecution in this state for a crime which he commits, while either within or outside the state, by his own conduct or that of another for which he is legally accountable, if:

(1) The crime is committed either wholly or partly within the state;

(2) The conduct outside the state constitutes an attempt to commit a crime within the state; or

(3) The conduct within the state constitutes an attempt to commit in another jurisdiction a crime under the laws of both this state and the other jurisdiction.

(c) A crime is committed partly within this state if either the conduct which is an element of the crime or the result which is such an element occurs within the state. In homicide, the "result" is either the act which causes death or the death itself; and, if the body of a homicide victim is found within this state, the death is presumed to have occurred within the state.

(d) A crime which is based on an omission to perform a duty imposed by the law of this state is committed within the state, regardless of the location of the accused at the time of the omission.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Circumstantial evidence cannot equivocate on jurisdiction. — Venue may be proved by circumstantial evidence; but circumstances which render it possible that an alleged crime was committed within the jurisdiction of the court are insufficient to establish the jurisdictional element of venue when, from the circumstances adduced, it is as reasonable and possible that the crime was committed beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Brown v. State, 52 Ga. App. 536, 183 S.E. 848 (1936).

Jurisdiction held established by record. — When there was undisputed testimony that the misdemeanor crimes with which the defendant was charged and convicted occurred in DeKalb County, Georgia, and that the defendant was identified as the perpetrator of the offenses, the record affirmatively established that the state court of DeKalb County exercised both personal and subject matter jurisdiction over the defendant. Freeman v. State, 194 Ga. App. 905, 392 S.E.2d 330 (1990).

Under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-1(b)(1), Georgia had subject matter jurisdiction over a kidnapping case even though the victim was killed in South Carolina. As the victim was abducted in Georgia, the kidnapping occurred there; when the victim was later injured in South Carolina, it was nevertheless a bodily injury for purposes of the Georgia kidnapping. Hunsberger v. State, 299 Ga. App. 593, 683 S.E.2d 150 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of concealing the death of another because, notwithstanding that the victim was killed and placed in the trunk of a car in South Carolina, the undisputed evidence showed that the car was set on fire in Georgia with the intent to conceal the victim's death. Clary v. State, 344 Ga. App. 710, 812 S.E.2d 31 (2018).

Venue established by defendant's residence from which crime committed. — Because a police officer testified that the defendant sold methamphetamine from the defendant's residence, the state met the state's burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that venue of the crimes charged was properly in the county in which the defendant was tried; therefore, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a new trial. Borders v. State, 299 Ga. App. 100, 682 S.E.2d 148 (2009).

Jurisdiction established. — State had jurisdiction to prosecute the defendant for computer child exploitation because the evidence showed that after being told that the person the defendant thought was a 14-year-old girl lived in Georgia, the defendant violated O.C.G.A. § 16-12-100.2 by utilizing computer on-line services to communicate with the purported child and entice the child to meet the defendant to engage in sexual activity. Brown v. State, 321 Ga. App. 798, 743 S.E.2d 474 (2013).

State had jurisdiction to prosecute the defendant for attempted child molestation because the defendant committed the crime at least partly within Georgia when the defendant took a substantial step in Georgia toward committing child molestation, namely by traveling to Georgia to meet with a person the defendant thought was a 14-year-old girl for the purpose of engaging in sexual activity. Brown v. State, 321 Ga. App. 798, 743 S.E.2d 474 (2013).

Because it was undisputed that the defendant's crimes took place in Fulton County and that the defendant was tried in Fulton County, the defendant failed to demonstrate that the convictions were void for lack of jurisdiction or improper venue. Brown v. State, 346 Ga. App. 245, 816 S.E.2d 111 (2018).

Because the undisputed evidence presented at trial showed that the child was present in Georgia for at least some period of time after suffering an older bone break, even if the charged conduct occurred outside of Georgia, the result occurred in Georgia, and the defendant's jurisdictional challenge was without merit. Hines v. State, 353 Ga. App. 710, 839 S.E.2d 208 (2020).

High speed chase. — Because a police officer was involved in a high-speed chase with the defendant through two counties and because the officer kept the defendant in sight throughout the entire chase, venue was proper in the county in which the chase began. Ryan v. State, 277 Ga. App. 490, 627 S.E.2d 128 (2006).

17-2-2. Venue generally.

(a) In general. Criminal actions shall be tried in the county where the crime was committed, except as otherwise provided by law.

(b) Crime committed on boundary line of two counties. If a crime is committed on, or immediately adjacent to, the boundary line between two counties, the crime shall be considered as having been committed in either county.

(c) Criminal homicide. Criminal homicide shall be considered as having been committed in the county in which the cause of death was inflicted. If it cannot be determined in which county the cause of death was inflicted, it shall be considered that it was inflicted in the county in which the death occurred. If a dead body is discovered in this state and it cannot be readily determined in what county the cause of death was inflicted, it shall be considered that the cause of death was inflicted in the county in which the dead body was discovered.

(d) Crime commenced outside the state. If the commission of a crime under the laws of this state commenced outside the state is consummated within this state, the crime shall be considered as having been committed in the county where it is consummated.

(e) Crime committed while in transit. If a crime is committed upon any railroad car, vehicle, watercraft, or aircraft traveling within this state and it cannot readily be determined in which county the crime was committed, the crime shall be considered as having been committed in any county in which the crime could have been committed through which the railroad car, vehicle, watercraft, or aircraft has traveled.

(f) Crime committed on water boundaries of two counties. Whenever a stream or body of water is the boundary between two counties, the jurisdiction of each county shall extend to the center of the main channel of the stream or the center of the body of water; and, if a crime is committed on the stream or body of water and it cannot be readily determined in which county the crime was committed, the crime shall be considered as having been committed in either county.

(g) Crime committed on water boundaries of two states. Whenever a crime is committed on any river or body of water which forms a boundary between this state and another state, the accused shall be tried in the county of this state which is situated opposite the point where the crime is committed. If it cannot be readily determined on which side of the line a crime was committed between two counties which border the river or body of water, the crime shall be considered as having been committed in either county.

(h) Crime in more than one county. If in any case it cannot be determined in what county a crime was committed, it shall be considered to have been committed in any county in which the evidence shows beyond a reasonable doubt that it might have been committed.

(i) Cumulative effect of Code section. This Code section is cumulative and shall not supersede venue provisions found in other parts of this Code.

Analysis

General Consideration
Proof of Venue

General Consideration

Section abrogates rule at common law. — At common law, jurisdiction attached in the county where death occurred, but by this section jurisdiction attached in the county where the mortal blow was given. Roach v. State, 34 Ga. 78 (1864).

Section does not violate due process. — O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2 is not unconstitutionally vague or indefinite so as to violate state and federal concepts of due process. Rather, the statute adequately provides a mechanism to carry into effect the mandate of the state's constitution that criminal trials be held in the county in which the crime was committed. Adsitt v. State, 248 Ga. 237, 282 S.E.2d 305 (1981).

Constitutional requirement that case be tried where crime committed not violated. — O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2 does not conflict with state constitutional requirement that all criminal cases be tried in the county where the crime was committed. Miller v. State, 174 Ga. App. 42, 329 S.E.2d 252 (1985).

Subsection (b) of O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2 does not violate Ga. Const. 1976, Art. VI, Sec. XIV, Para. VI (Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. VI), providing that criminal trials be held in the county in which the crime was committed. Adsitt v. State, 248 Ga. 237, 282 S.E.2d 305 (1981).

Under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. VI and O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2, venue in all criminal cases must be laid in the county in which the crime was allegedly committed. Walker v. State, 258 Ga. App. 354, 574 S.E.2d 317 (2002).

Purpose of O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2 is to provide for establishment of venue in situations where there is either some doubt as to which county was the scene of the crime or where the crime in fact occurred in more than one county. Its purpose is the same as O.C.G.A. § 16-8-11. Bundren v. State, 247 Ga. 180, 274 S.E.2d 455 (1981).

Section provides proper jurisdiction where location of crime unclear. — O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2 provides a mechanism by which the mandate of Ga. Const. 1976, Art. VI, Sec. XIV, Para. VI (Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. VI) can be carried out when the place in which the crime is committed cannot be determined with certainty. Bundren v. State, 247 Ga. 180, 274 S.E.2d 455 (1981).

Under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30(j)(1), it was unlawful for any person to possess marijuana, and since the marijuana was found in defendant's pocket when the defendant was arrested, and defendant was observed traveling in Newton County before the defendant's arrest in Rockdale County, the evidence was sufficient to conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of possession of less than one ounce of marijuana since O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e) provided that if a crime was committed upon any vehicle traveling within the state and it cannot readily be determined in which county the crime was committed, the crime shall be considered as having been committed in any county in which the crime could have been committed through which the vehicle has traveled. Johnson v. State, 299 Ga. App. 706, 683 S.E.2d 659 (2009).

Location of crime is clear. — For purposes of the aggravated battery — family violence offense and other offenses occurring in the parties' home, venue was proper in Athens-Clarke County because one of the responding officers of the Athens-Clarke County Police Department directly testified that the house where the defendant and the victim lived was located in Athens-Clarke County. Jones v. State, 329 Ga. App. 439, 765 S.E.2d 639 (2014).

Because the victim's body was discovered in Douglas County, Georgia, and the county in which the cause of death was inflicted could not be determined, venue for the murder charge against both of the defendants was proper in Douglas County. Perera v. State, 295 Ga. 880, 763 S.E.2d 687 (2014).

Effect on jurisdiction of change of venue. — Upon a change of venue in a criminal case, the county from which the case is transferred loses all jurisdiction to try the accused upon the indictment transferred at the time of the change, or any other indictment charging the same offense. Johnston v. State, 118 Ga. 310, 45 S.E. 381 (1903).

Venue of crime is jurisdictional fact. — Venue must be proved as part of the general case. Dempsey v. State, 52 Ga. App. 35, 182 S.E. 56 (1935); Wright v. State, 219 Ga. App. 119, 464 S.E.2d 216 (1995).

After a defendant was granted a directed verdict on the basis that the state failed to prove venue in a criminal prosecution for driving under the influence per se, retrial was not barred under U.S. Const. amend. V and O.C.G.A. § 16-1-8 because, while venue had to be laid in the county in which the crime was allegedly committed under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. VI and O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2 and venue was a jurisdictional fact, failure to prove venue was a procedural error that implied nothing as to the defendant's guilt or innocence. Hudson v. State, 296 Ga. App. 758, 675 S.E.2d 603, cert. denied, No. S09C1163, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 413 (Ga. 2009), cert. denied, 558 U.S. 1076, 130 S. Ct. 799, 175 L. Ed. 2d 559 (2009).

Venue determination reserved for finder of fact. — Trial court erred by making a per se determination of venue and granting the defendant's motion to transfer the case to a different county within the response to the defendant's motion to suppress because a determination of venue was reserved for the finder of fact at trial. State v. Hasson, 334 Ga. App. 1, 778 S.E.2d 15 (2015).

Criminal defendant cannot require bill of exceptions when venue change denied. — Defendant in a criminal case is not entitled to a direct bill of exceptions (see O.C.G.A. §§ 5-6-49, 5-6-50) to a judgment denying a motion for change of venue on the ground that the defendant cannot obtain a fair trial in the county where the case is then pending. Hubbard v. State, 208 Ga. 472, 67 S.E.2d 562 (1951).

Place of occurrence of homicide. — Use of O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h) to determine venue in a homicide case is not precluded by § 17-2-2(c). Felker v. State, 252 Ga. 351, 314 S.E.2d 621, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 873, 105 S. Ct. 229, 83 L. Ed. 2d 158 (1984).

Prosecution venue for enticing child for immoral purposes. — Venue lies in the county where the child was first enticed. Cornelius v. State, 213 Ga. App. 766, 445 S.E.2d 800 (1994).

Venue in cases of kidnapping. — Venue is proper in the county where the victim was seized. Harris v. State, 165 Ga. App. 249, 299 S.E.2d 924 (1983).

Kidnapping is not a continuing offense, and the crime is consummated when the victim is seized; thus, the prosecution in an attempt to prove kidnapping failed to prove venue in a state county when the evidence showed that the victim was seized in another state. Miller v. State, 174 Ga. App. 42, 329 S.E.2d 252 (1985); Jordan v. State, 242 Ga. App. 408, 530 S.E.2d 42 (2000), overruled on other grounds, Shields v. State, 276 Ga. 669, 581 S.E.2d 536 (2003).

Because the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that a kidnapping might have been committed in Douglas County, there was no ground for reversal. A police officer testified that a bar and all the buildings surrounding the bar, from which a victim was abducted, were in Douglas County, although the bar was situated near the county line with Cobb County; while the victim was driven to an ATM in Cobb County, there was no evidence of the route taken between the bar and that ATM. Epps v. State, 297 Ga. App. 66, 676 S.E.2d 791 (2009).

Because a defendant forced the victim to drive to an abandoned house and then drove the victim through other neighborhoods before forcing the victim out of the car and refusing to return the victim's personal belongings, the defendant's convictions for kidnapping and robbery by intimidation under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-40(a) and 16-8-40 did not merge; pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e), venue was proper in any county through which the vehicle traveled. Aldridge v. State, 310 Ga. App. 502, 713 S.E.2d 682 (2011).

Venue in RICO cases governed by RICO venue provision. — Venue for charges under the Georgia Racketeer and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), O.C.G.A. § 16-14-1 et seq., was proper against one of the three defendants in Cobb County pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-14-11, even though the defendant was acquitted of a conspiracy charge and the defendant personally committed no acts in Cobb County. Lowery v. State, 347 Ga. App. 26, 815 S.E.2d 625 (2018).

Venue in cases of Medicaid fraud. — Venue was proper in the county where a false report is submitted and processed in an attempt to fraudulently obtain medical assistance. Culver v. State, 254 Ga. App. 297, 562 S.E.2d 201 (2002).

In a Medicaid fraud case committed by a fraudulent scheme or device under O.C.G.A. § 49-4-146.1(b)(1)(C) of the Georgia Medical Assistance Act, O.C.G.A. § 49-4-140 et seq., pursuant to Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. VI and O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(a), venue is proper in any county where an act was committed in furtherance of the fraudulent transaction. Because defendants committed acts in furtherance of the fraud in counties in which the defendants were tried and convicted, venue in those counties was proper and the appellate court improperly reversed the defendants' convictions. State v. Kell, 276 Ga. 423, 577 S.E.2d 551 (2003).

Venue in robbery case. — When the victim was given a ride by appellant at the Fort Gordon bus station, the victim was robbed in Augusta, which is in Richmond County, and the victim was let out about one mile from the Augusta airport, the evidence established beyond a reasonable doubt that the offense might have been committed in Richmond County, and is sufficient to show venue in Richmond County. Harper v. State, 172 Ga. App. 69, 321 S.E.2d 805 (1984).

Court of appeals erred in reversing the defendant's conviction for armed robbery because the trial court properly declined to instruct the jury on the lesser included offense of theft by taking since there was no evidence that the included crime was committed in the county in which the defendant was being tried; although the state was unwilling to allow the defendant to waive venue or stipulate that what occurred was a theft by taking that happened entirely in Clayton County, the defendant was free to present evidence and argue to the jury that while the defendant was guilty of committing theft by taking in Clayton County, the defendant was not guilty of armed robbery in DeKalb County. But the defendant could not require the state to agree that the defendant committed theft by taking in Clayton County or require the trial court to instruct the jury on a lesser included offense over which the court lacked venue. State v. Dixon, 286 Ga. 706, 691 S.E.2d 207 (2010).

Venue in a conspiracy case. — Venue is properly laid in the county in which the substantive offense is committed, even though the defendant may never have entered that county. Osborn v. State, 161 Ga. App. 132, 291 S.E.2d 22 (1982).

County where vehicle first spotted is county of venue. — County where a defendant was arrested was not the proper venue since an officer spotted the defendant driving in another county and followed the defendant across the county line to make the arrest; the county in which the defendant was first driving was the proper venue. Pippins v. State, 204 Ga. App. 318, 419 S.E.2d 28, cert. denied, 204 Ga. App. 922, 419 S.E.2d 28 (1992).

With respect to the offenses relating to or arising out of the police chase, including the offense of fleeing and attempting to elude police officers, venue was proper in Athens-Clarke County because, although the defendant drove through other counties, the police chase began in Athens-Clarke County, and there was testimony that the defendant's vehicle traveled in Athens-Clarke County during the course of the police chase. Jones v. State, 329 Ga. App. 439, 765 S.E.2d 639 (2014).

Venue for crime in vehicle anywhere vehicle traverses. — When a crime is committed in a vehicle traveling within this state, it may be considered to have been committed in any county traversed. Polk v. State, 142 Ga. App. 785, 236 S.E.2d 926 (1977).

When the crime occurred in a car traveling across several counties and continued as the car headed "back into town," and the evidence showed that the crime might have been committed in the forum county, venue was appropriate in that county under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2 (e) and (h). Hendrix v. State, 242 Ga. App. 678, 530 S.E.2d 804 (2000).

Venue was proper in the county where the defendant committed several moving violations, although an arrest was effectuated in a neighboring county due to the officer's hot pursuit; the officer had legal authority to initiate pursuit and arrest, and the arrest was not invalid merely because the officer was outside the officer's jurisdiction. Page v. State, 250 Ga. App. 795, 553 S.E.2d 176 (2001).

When the defendant committed the offense in the defendant's vehicle while taking the victim to a car repair shop, and all of the roads to the repair shop were in the county where the defendant's trial occurred, under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e), the trial court had jurisdiction to try the defendant as the defendant could have been tried in any county through which defendant's vehicle traveled. Gearin v. State, 255 Ga. App. 329, 565 S.E.2d 540 (2002).

Evidence of venue in fleeing and eluding case. — In a fleeing and eluding case under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-395, the evidence was sufficient to establish venue as required by Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. VI and O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(a), based on evidence that the chase originated in the county and continued there, including an eyewitness's testimony, dash cam footage, and a map. Payne v. State, 338 Ga. App. 677, 791 S.E.2d 451 (2016), overruled on other grounds by Worthen v. State, 2019 Ga. LEXIS 22 (Ga. 2019).

Venue for receiving stolen goods in county received. — Venue of a charge of receiving stolen goods, knowing the goods to be stolen, is the county where such goods are received. Dempsey v. State, 52 Ga. App. 35, 182 S.E. 56 (1935).

Venue for the crime of making a false statement. — Venue was in the county where the defendant signed a form falsely attesting to the use being made of government property, not the location of the office to which the form was sent. Spray v. State, 223 Ga. App. 154, 476 S.E.2d 878 (1996).

Trial court committed reversible error as a result of convicting a defendant for making false statements to a state or local government agency or department in a case wherein the state failed to prove venue in the jurisdiction that the defendant was tried. The state was obligated to prove that the defendant's false statements to Federal Bureau of Investigation officers occurred in Fulton County wherein the defendant was tried; thus, the defendant's conviction required reversal. Tesler v. State, 295 Ga. App. 569, 672 S.E.2d 522 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0810, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 334 (Ga. 2009).

No venue when police trick defendant into county for venue. — Police officers' activities in maneuvering appellant into a county for the sole purpose of obtaining venue constituted a subterfuge and impermissibly conferred apparent venue over the defendant in that county. McCarty v. State, 152 Ga. App. 726, 263 S.E.2d 700 (1979).

Venue when custody unlawfully retained. — When a parent lawfully removes the child from the state, but unlawfully retains custody out of state, the legislature intended that the victim's domicile, i.e., the custodial parent, should be the venue of any criminal prosecution. State v. Evans, 212 Ga. App. 415, 442 S.E.2d 287 (1994).

Proving venue in cruelty to children case. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for new trial because the state did not fail to prove venue beyond a reasonable doubt as to the counts of cruelty to children in the second degree for fracturing the second victim's ribs and cruelty to children in the first degree for fracturing the first victim's ribs and a leg because the evidence showed that the defendant and the children's mother moved with their children to an apartment in Clayton County in April 2009 and that they were the children's sole caretakers; that the victims' injuries were discovered in July 2009; and a doctor testified that the bone fractures had to have occurred at least one to two weeks in the past and at most a few months in the past. Freeman v. State, 333 Ga. App. 6, 775 S.E.2d 258 (2015).

Venue in drug possession charge cases. — O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h) applies when a drug possession charge results from the detection of metabolites that can remain in a defendant's urine two to four days after the drug is ingested, and venue is appropriate in the county where the defendant is present immediately before being asked to provide the urine sample. Pruitt v. State, 264 Ga. App. 44, 589 S.E.2d 864 (2003).

Venue is a question to be decided by the jury and the jury's decision will not be set aside as long as there is any evidence to support the decision. Jones v. State, 245 Ga. 592, 266 S.E.2d 201 (1980); Davis v. State, 203 Ga. App. 106, 416 S.E.2d 375 (1992).

Venue a jury question when no concrete evidence presented as to where rape committed. — When there is evidence that the victim was with the defendant in numerous counties, but there is no concrete evidence as to in which county she was raped and assaulted, the issue is properly submitted to the jury as to venue. Moss v. State, 160 Ga. App. 42, 285 S.E.2d 776 (1981).

Jury instruction on venue in homicide cases. — Jury instruction in a murder case under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(c), that, if it could not be determined where the cause of death was inflicted, it "shall be considered" that it was inflicted in the county where the body was discovered, did not impermissibly shift the burden of proof to the defendant. As a result, the following cases are disapproved: Napier v. State, 276 Ga. 769(2), 583 S.E.2d 825 (2003), Owens v. State, 286 Ga. 821, 827(3), 693 S.E.2d 490 (2010), and Owens v. McLaughlin, 733 F.3d 320, 327 (11th Cir. 2013). Shelton v. Lee, 299 Ga. 350, 788 S.E.2d 369 (2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 1066, 197 L. Ed. 2d 187 (U.S. 2017).

Venue in violation of state ethics law. — When the defendants were indicted under O.C.G.A. § 21-5-9 for failing to file documents with the state ethics commission under O.C.G.A. § 21-5-34, venue was in the county where the commission was exclusively located; the place fixed for performance of the required act fixed the situs of the alleged crime. McKinney v. State, 282 Ga. 230, 647 S.E.2d 44 (2007).

Venue not relevant to motion to suppress. — Grant of the defendant's motion to suppress on the basis of venue was reversed because the state did not need to establish venue at the pretrial hearing on the defendant's motion to suppress as it was not relevant to the issues raised in the motion, which challenged the reasonable basis for the traffic stop or whether the resulting search of the defendant and the defendant's vehicle were supported by probable cause. State v. Wallace, 338 Ga. App. 611, 791 S.E.2d 187 (2016).

Jury is not obliged to accept opinion evidence. — Jury may accept evidence from surveyors and reject opinion evidence of law enforcement officers relating to the location of a county line. Adsitt v. State, 248 Ga. 237, 282 S.E.2d 305 (1981).

Special instructions. — When the case against the defendant is based upon the defendant's activities as a party or conspirator to the crime charged in the indictment and these activities took place in a county other than the one in which the prosecution is brought, a special instruction on venue is necessary to clarify the nature of the criminal activity for which the defendant is on trial. Osborn v. State, 161 Ga. App. 132, 291 S.E.2d 22 (1982).

Failure to instruct on venue. — Although the trial court did not instruct the jury on venue, and neither party requested an instruction on venue, its complete charge on reasonable doubt, and instruction that the crimes as alleged in the indictment had to be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, when coupled with an indictment which specified that the crimes were committed in Fulton County, was sufficient such that the trial court's failure to instruct the jury on venue provided no basis for reversal. Watson v. State, 263 Ga. App. 95, 587 S.E.2d 243 (2003).

Because the trial court properly instructed the jury that venue was a jurisdictional fact that had to be proven beyond a reasonable doubt as to each crime charged in the indictment, no reversible error resulted from the charge. Clark v. State, 283 Ga. 234, 657 S.E.2d 872 (2008).

Jury instruction. — Supreme Court of Georgia has urged trial courts to give a separate charge on venue to encourage prosecutors to prove venue and to alert juries to the juries' specific role in determining venue, and also has recommended language to use in instructing the jury on venue; although the Court has encouraged the giving of the instruction, the Supreme Court has declined to reverse a conviction and require a new trial based on the trial court's failure to sua sponte instruct the jury on venue. Lanham v. State, 291 Ga. 625, 732 S.E.2d 72 (2012).

Former jeopardy. — If a defendant is tried in one county in a court having jurisdiction of the offense, but the crime occurred in another county, no jeopardy attaches. Schiefelbein v. State, 258 Ga. 623, 373 S.E.2d 354 (1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1026, 109 S. Ct. 1156, 103 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1989).

Effect of judgment on determination of venue issue. — Litigation of the issue of venue in a second prosecution of defendant for a rape that allegedly occurred on a boundary lake was subject to collateral estoppel as defendant had been acquitted in an earlier proceeding at which the state had the opportunity to present evidence on the issue. Ganong v. State, 223 Ga. App. 163, 477 S.E.2d 324 (1996).

Court assumes county in evidence is county within state. — If a county is named in the evidence, the state will indulge the presumption that it is a county of this state, and if the name mentioned in the evidence is the county of the trial, the court will assume that the county at trial is the county in the evidence. Gibson v. State, 52 Ga. App. 297, 183 S.E. 83 (1935).

Court would take judicial notice. — Court would take notice that named municipality was site of county wherein defendant was prosecuted and wholly within such county, and if all the evidence strongly tends to show that the crime was committed in the county where the trial was had, and if there is no evidence warranting even a bare conjecture that it was committed elsewhere, then venue is satisfactorily established. Hubbard v. State, 208 Ga. 472, 67 S.E.2d 562 (1951).

Court could take judicial notice that a city was located wholly within the county in which the defendant was tried. Gilmer v. State, 234 Ga. App. 309, 506 S.E.2d 452 (1998), overruled on other grounds by State v. Burns, 829 S.E.2d 367, 2019 Ga. LEXIS 400 (Ga. 2019).

Testimony that crime committed in certain county proves committed within state. — On an indictment tried in Putnam County, testimony that the crime was committed in Putnam County is sufficient proof that the crime was committed in Putnam County, Georgia. Dennis v. State, 51 Ga. App. 538, 180 S.E. 909 (1935).

Defendant was arrested for obstruction of a police officer for refusing to obey an officer's order to move the defendant's vehicle which was stopped on a public road. The officer's testimony that the road was located in Dawson County was sufficient to prove venue in Dawson County beyond a reasonable doubt. West v. State, 296 Ga. App. 58, 673 S.E.2d 558 (2009), overruled on other grounds, 2019 Ga. LEXIS 22 (Ga. 2019).

Testimony that crime committed in certain county. — With regard to the defendant's murder conviction, the state established venue by proof beyond a reasonable doubt via testimony of the chief investigator, who used aerial photographs obtained from the tax assessor's office in Bryan County, Georgia, and identified the location of the residences of the defendant, the defendant's parents, the victim, and the place where the victim's body was found. Lanham v. State, 291 Ga. 625, 732 S.E.2d 72 (2012).

Georgia Supreme Court corrected the Court's prior holdings of Gosha v. State, 56 Ga. 36 (1876) that a jury can never reasonably infer that a crime committed near a location in one county was committed in the same county and the same holding in Jones v. State, 272 Ga. 900 (2000) and expressly overruled all cases following those holdings in Gosha and Jones and disapproved all cases that have cited those holdings favorably. Worthen v. State, 304 Ga. 862, 823 S.E.2d 291 (2019).

Evidence was sufficient to support the jury's finding that venue for a murder count (and the associated firearm count) was proved beyond a reasonable doubt to be Fulton County, Georgia as the record showed that police witnesses testified that 490 Angier Avenue was in Fulton County, which included the crime scene of the sidewalk or the street in front of the building where the appellant shot and killed the victim. Worthen v. State, 304 Ga. 862, 823 S.E.2d 291 (2019).

Proof crime committed in municipality does not prove venue in state's county. — Proof that an offense was committed in a designated municipality is not of itself sufficient to show venue in any particular county of this state. Gibson v. State, 52 Ga. App. 297, 183 S.E. 83 (1935).

Trial of defendant in the Atlanta Traffic Court, a city court which sits in the Fulton County portion of Atlanta, was improper, after the state proved that the alleged offense took place in the city of Atlanta but did not offer any proof that the offense occurred in Fulton County; the defendant is entitled to be tried in the county in which the offense was alleged to have occurred. Waller v. State, 231 Ga. App. 323, 498 S.E.2d 362 (1998).

Venue in multi-county crime spree. — State failed to prove venue for armed robbery and hijacking a motor vehicle since the facts showed that the victim was forced at gunpoint into the victim's car in a parking lot in one county and then was ordered to drive into a second county (the place of trial) where the victim was taken from the car and shot; both offenses were complete in the first county, and neither O.C.G.A. § 16-8-11 nor O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2 were applicable to confer venue in the second county. Bradley v. State, 272 Ga. 740, 533 S.E.2d 727 (2000).

Venue was proper in the county in which the victim's body was discovered because it could not be readily determined in which county the cause of death was inflicted. Shelton v. State, 279 Ga. 161, 611 S.E.2d 11 (2005).

In general, criminal actions are tried in the county where the crime was committed; the victim's testimony that the defendant committed sexual assault offenses in Colquitt County, even though the defendant also committed some of the offenses in other counties, was sufficient to establish venue. Henry v. State, 274 Ga. App. 139, 616 S.E.2d 883 (2005).

Venue demonstrable by circumstantial evidence. — Venue in a criminal case, like any other fact, may be shown by circumstantial as well as direct evidence. Shi v. State, 52 Ga. App. 358, 183 S.E. 331 (1936); Hancock v. State, 196 Ga. 351, 26 S.E.2d 760 (1943); Jones v. State, 245 Ga. 592, 266 S.E.2d 201 (1980); McCord v. State, 248 Ga. 765, 285 S.E.2d 724 (1982); Parrott v. State, 190 Ga. App. 784, 380 S.E.2d 343 (1989).

Circumstantial, as well as direct evidence, may be used to establish venue. Levitt v. State, 201 Ga. App. 63, 410 S.E.2d 170 (1991).

Evidence that the arresting officer worked for the county in which the offenses occurred and was on duty on the day the officer made the arrest was sufficient to support a finding that the offenses of which the defendant was accused occurred in the county in which the defendant was tried. Joiner v. State, 231 Ga. App. 61, 497 S.E.2d 642 (1998), overruled on other grounds, Jones v. State, 272 Ga. 900, 537 S.E.2d 80 (2000), overruling Perry v. State, 154 Ga. App. 559, 269 S.E.2d 63 (1980); Mega v. State, 220 Ga. App. 481, 469 S.E.2d 771 (1996); Calloway v. State, 227 Ga. App. 775, 490 S.E.2d 521 (1997).

Trial court properly found that venue existed in Jones County, Georgia as: (1) the last time the victim was seen alive, the victim was involved in an altercation with defendant at their Jones County home; and (2) if defendant did kill the victim during that altercation, the defendant killed the victim in a moment of passion, as the jury necessarily found, then the death of the victim at the victim's Jones County home was consistent with this finding. Glidewell v. State, 279 Ga. App. 114, 630 S.E.2d 621 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Reynolds v. State, 285 Ga. 70, 673 S.E.2d 854 (2009).

In a murder prosecution where the victim's body was never found, the evidence established that the defendant and the victim had left a ball park where they worked within five minutes of each other, that the victim's car was found abandoned at a gas station adjacent to the park, that a person whose voice characteristics matched the defendant's said on the telephone that the defendant took the victim at "the station," and that the park and the gas station were in DeKalb County was sufficient evidence to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the murder might have been committed in DeKalb County; thus, the proper trial venue under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h) was proved to be in that county. Hinton v. State, 280 Ga. 811, 631 S.E.2d 365 (2006).

In a child molestation case, venue in McIntosh County was proper; the victim testified that the crime occurred in the home of the victim's aunt, where the victim currently lived, and the aunt testified that she currently lived in McIntosh County. Flanders v. State, 285 Ga. App. 805, 648 S.E.2d 97 (2007).

Sufficient evidence supported that venue was properly established in Bibb County, Georgia, with regard to the defendant's aggravated assault, kidnapping, and rape convictions because although the two women were not sure where the defendant had driven them, the testimony of the camper whom one victim had found upon escaping established venue in Bibb County and the second area where the other victim was raped was only three minutes from the first. Howard v. State, 340 Ga. App. 133, 796 S.E.2d 757 (2017).

In the defendant's murder trial, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could find that venue was properly laid in Upson County pursuant to Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. VI, and O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(c), including evidence that the crime occurred in Thomaston and the admission of evidence bags marked "Upson." Raines v. State, 304 Ga. 582, 820 S.E.2d 679 (2018).

Evidence as to venue, though slight, may be sufficient. — Evidence may be sufficient when there is no conflicting evidence. Baker v. State, 55 Ga. App. 159, 189 S.E. 364 (1937); Ellard v. State, 233 Ga. 640, 212 S.E.2d 816 (1975); Rutledge v. State, 152 Ga. App. 755, 264 S.E.2d 244 (1979); Jones v. State, 245 Ga. 592, 266 S.E.2d 201 (1980); Arthur v. State, 154 Ga. App. 735, 269 S.E.2d 887 (1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1088, 101 S. Ct. 880, 66 L. Ed. 2d 815 (1981); Adcock v. State, 194 Ga. App. 627, 391 S.E.2d 438, aff'd, 260 Ga. 302, 392 S.E.2d 886 (1990); Sawyer v. State, 217 Ga. App. 406, 457 S.E.2d 685 (1995).

Venue must be established beyond a reasonable doubt. However, when the evidence is not conflicting and when no challenge to venue is raised at trial, slight evidence is sufficient to prove venue. Davis v. State, 203 Ga. App. 106, 416 S.E.2d 375 (1992).

With regard to the defendant's murder conviction, sufficient evidence was submitted to support the conclusion that the cause of the victim's death was a beating involving blows to the head and while no direct evidence was presented establishing where the beating was committed, sufficient indirect or circumstantial evidence was presented from which the jury could conclude the victim was beaten at the pull-off on a road in Harris County, Georgia, where the victim was found. Bulloch v. State, 293 Ga. 179, 744 S.E.2d 763 (2013).

Venue proved where evidence indicates crime committed in trial county. — When all of the evidence introduced on the trial of a criminal case strongly and decidedly tended to show that the offense was committed in the county where the trial was had, and there was no evidence warranting even a bare conjecture that the crime was committed elsewhere, the venue was sufficiently proved. Roberson v. State, 69 Ga. App. 541, 26 S.E.2d 142 (1943).

When the victim testified that the movant took a car from the victim at gunpoint in Chatham County, Georgia, a reasonable trier of fact was authorized to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the movant committed the crimes of armed robbery and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony in Chatham County, making that county the appropriate venue for the movant's trial pursuant to Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. VI and O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(a); thus, the convictions and sentences were not void and the trial court properly dismissed, based on a lack of subject matter jurisdiction, the movant's post-conviction motion to vacate the convictions and sentences. Green v. State, 259 Ga. App. 195, 575 S.E.2d 921 (2002).

Venue was proven by testimony that the DVD-player that the defendant was accused of shoplifting from a store would not have come up on a scanner if it had not come from the particular store. Walker v. State, 268 Ga. App. 669, 602 S.E.2d 351 (2004).

Defendant's conviction for underaged drinking of an alcoholic beverage was upheld on appeal since the police officer smelled alcohol on the defendant's breath in the county wherein the defendant was arrested, which was enough to establish venue, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h). Burchett v. State, 283 Ga. App. 271, 641 S.E.2d 262 (2007).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for child molestation, the victim's testimony that the victim lived in a particular city, which was located in Spalding County, and that the incident occurred at another apartment, which the evidence revealed through the testimony was also located in that particular city, there was sufficient evidence to prove venue in Spalding County beyond a reasonable doubt. Mahone v. State, 293 Ga. App. 790, 668 S.E.2d 303 (2008).

State did not fail to prove venue beyond a reasonable doubt because the proof was that the crime was committed in the County of Clayton; that the trial court was sitting in the County of Clayton and the State of Georgia was a fact known to the trial court from the court's own records and the public law, and when therefore it was proven that the crime was committed in the County of Clayton it was proven that the crime was committed in the county in which the trial court entertained jurisdiction over the crime. Gresham v. State, 289 Ga. 103, 709 S.E.2d 780 (2011).

Since there was no clear evidence that the fatal injury was inflicted anywhere other than Harris County, where the victim was found, and where the victim died, the state sufficiently proved venue. Walton v. State, 293 Ga. 607, 748 S.E.2d 866 (2013).

Contrary to the appellant's contention, venue for the murder committed was properly established in DeKalb County, Georgia, because the victim's body was found there and it was not readily determinable where the appellant shot and killed the victim; thus, O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(c) applied. Hernandez v. State, 304 Ga. 895, 823 S.E.2d 272 (2019).

O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e) allows for venue for crimes committed while in transit to lie in any county in which the crime could have been committed through which the vehicle has traveled. Hernandez v. State, 304 Ga. 895, 823 S.E.2d 272 (2019).

Since it was not readily determinable in a murder case where the cause of death was inflicted or where the death occurred, then the appellate court must sustain the verdict if the evidence was sufficient to permit a rational trier of fact to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the body was found in the county where the defendant was indicted. Hernandez v. State, 304 Ga. 895, 823 S.E.2d 272 (2019).

Proving venue in child molestation cases. — Statements by the victim of a child molestation that the defendant inserted a finger into the victim's private area and that the incident occurred in the bedroom of the victim's home, and a second statement that the incident occurred in the grandparent's house, where the child in fact lived, coupled with the fact that the grandparent's house was in the county where the defendant's trial was conducted, was sufficient to allow a rational juror to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime occurred in the county where the trial was held. Chalifoux v. State, 262 Ga. App. 895, 587 S.E.2d 62 (2003).

State proved venue in Cobb County beyond a reasonable doubt, with direct and circumstantial evidence, which showed that the defendant committed aggravated sexual battery upon the child victim while traveling from the victim's home in Cobb County to a bus stop. Harris v. State, 279 Ga. App. 570, 631 S.E.2d 772 (2006).

In a case where the defendant was convicted of aggravated child molestation and aggravated sodomy, there was sufficient evidence to establish venue under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e); the evidence that the defendant, the defendant's parents, and the victim, who were traveling, stopped in Houston County, that the defendant entered the camper where the victim was sleeping, and that the defendant soon thereafter performed sex acts on the victim was sufficient to establish that the crimes could have been committed in Houston County. Boileau v. State, 285 Ga. App. 221, 645 S.E.2d 577 (2007).

Even though the victim was unable to testify with precision as to which county the attack took place, such was not required in order to establish the proper venue as the evidence showed beyond a reasonable doubt that the rape and aggravated sexual battery might have been committed in Fulton County, this evidence was sufficient to establish Fulton County as the proper venue. Arnold v. State, 284 Ga. App. 598, 645 S.E.2d 68 (2007).

Although the defendant argued that the state failed to prove venue beyond a reasonable doubt, pursuant to Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. VI and O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(a) generally, a criminal case had to be tried in the county in which the crime was committed. The state had the burden of proving venue, which the state could do using either direct or circumstantial evidence, and whether the evidence as to venue satisfied the reasonable-doubt standard was a question for the jury, and the state's decision will not be set aside if there is any evidence to support the decision; therefore, because in the defendant's case, the victim testified that the defendant molested the victim in their residence and that the residence was located in Grady County, Georgia, venue was established beyond a reasonable doubt. Bynum v. State, 300 Ga. App. 163, 684 S.E.2d 330 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0225, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 300 (Ga. 2010).

Body found in county, although shooting site unconfirmed. — Even when the evidence as to where the fatal shot was fired was inconclusive, if the evidence that the body was found in a particular county in the state was not contradicted, the contention that venue was not proven was without merit. Aldridge v. State, 236 Ga. 773, 225 S.E.2d 421 (1976).

Even though circumstances pointed to another county as the place of death, when no actual evidence of the murder was ever found in that county, the place of death could not be readily determined; thus, venue was appropriate in the county where the body was found. Kidwell v. State, 264 Ga. 427, 444 S.E.2d 789 (1994); Cook v. State, 273 Ga. 828, 546 S.E.2d 487 (2001).

Location of burning car supported venue. — Police officer's testimony that the burning car in which the victim's body was found was located in Fulton County was sufficient to establish venue in that county. Jackson v. State, 292 Ga. 685, 740 S.E.2d 609 (2013).

Confession of crime location to witness. — Statement by defendant to a witness, during the investigation of a case, that the defendant committed the offense at a certain geographically located spot, plus the sworn testimony of the witness during the trial that such spot is in the county of the court taking jurisdiction, is sufficient proof of venue, when there are no circumstances tending to prove that the venue was in fact in some other county. Austin v. State, 89 Ga. App. 866, 81 S.E.2d 508 (1954).

Lottery documents found at defendant's home in county with lottery. — Contention that the state failed to show jurisdictional venue in lottery prosecution was without merit since the lottery documents were seized at the defendant's home on the date defendant was arrested, and the jury was authorized to find that the exhibited documents were current, even though no dates were shown, and that the documents were being used in the numbers games which the evidence showed was at that time in full operation in the county. Mills v. State, 71 Ga. App. 353, 30 S.E.2d 824 (1944).

Statement showing murder in decedent's home in trial county. — When the uncontradicted evidence and the defendant's statement showed that the accused did the killing as alleged in the indictment for murder without justification or mitigation, and that the killing was at the home of the deceased who lived on a named person's place in Clay County, and the trial was in Clay County, the verdict of guilt of murder without recommendation was supported by the evidence, and the venue was shown to be in Clay County, the place of trial. Jones v. State, 197 Ga. 604, 30 S.E.2d 192 (1944).

Venue in a murder case was proper. — Venue proper in Columbia County, where the victim was shot in Columbia County, but the victim's body was discovered in a car in a lake in Lincoln County, and the medical examiner listed drowning, secondary to a bullet wound to the head, as the cause of death. Tankersley v. State, 261 Ga. 318, 404 S.E.2d 564 (1991).

Jury could properly find that venue of a murder trial was proper under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(c) as the victim's body was discovered in the county of the proceedings and the county in which the cause of death was inflicted could not be readily determined; the mere fact that some circumstances pointed to another county as the place of death did not mean that there was a fatal variance between the allegata and probata since there was no actual evidence of the place of the murder. Watson v. State, 278 Ga. 763, 604 S.E.2d 804 (2004), overruled on other grounds by State v. Lane, 308 Ga. 10, 838 S.E.2d 808 (2020).

Since the defendant conceded that the homicide was committed in a moving vehicle and the victim's body was found in Houston County, and there was no evidence that the fatal injury was inflicted anywhere other than Houston County, the state sufficiently proved venue as to the murder. Faulkner v. State, 295 Ga. 321, 758 S.E.2d 817 (2014).

In a murder case, although there may have been conflicting evidence regarding in which county the victim's injuries were inflicted, it was undisputed that the victim's body was found in Pike County, and the jury was therefore authorized to find beyond a reasonable doubt that venue was proper in Pike County, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(c). Crawford v. State, 297 Ga. 680, 777 S.E.2d 463 (2015).

Evidence established beyond a reasonable doubt that venue was properly in Houston County because the state presented testimony at trial establishing that the crimes against the victim culminating in the victim's murder were committed in Houston County as the place where the victim was severely beaten was in Houston County, the place where the victim was strangled to death was in Houston County, and the place where the victim's body was discovered was in Houston County; thus, the failure to prove venue was not a meritorious basis for granting directed verdicts of acquittal. Pike v. State, 302 Ga. 795, 809 S.E.2d 756 (2018).

Georgia Supreme Court held that if a body is discovered in Georgia and it cannot be readily determined in what county the cause of death was inflicted, it shall be considered that the cause of death was inflicted in the county in which the dead body was discovered. Hernandez v. State, 304 Ga. 895, 823 S.E.2d 272 (2019).

Evidence that victim gave funds to embezzler in trial county. — When the evidence authorized the jury to infer that at the time the money was entrusted for a specific purpose in Fulton County, the defendant intended to convert the money to defendant's own use and not to apply the money to the benefit and use of the owner so entrusting it, then venue could be laid in Fulton County. Price v. State, 76 Ga. App. 283, 45 S.E.2d 462 (1947).

County border location evidence. — Evidence was sufficient to trigger the provisions of subsection (b) of O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2 since the evidence showed that the victim was standing on the doorstep of the victim's home in Wilkinson County within walking distance of Twiggs County when the defendant, walking through a nearby backyard, threw a pipe at the victim. Carswell v. State, 244 Ga. App. 516, 534 S.E.2d 568 (2000).

Prosecution for larceny after trust where conversion in other county. — Venue in prosecution for larceny after trust may be laid in the county where the property was entrusted, although the physical conversion of it was in another county, where the facts authorized the jury to find that the intent to convert the money was formed in the county where the property was entrusted. Price v. State, 76 Ga. App. 283, 45 S.E.2d 462 (1947).

Confession and corroboration authorized venue. — On the prosecution for cattle stealing in which the defendant made an admissible confession as to every essential element of the crime, and the evidence was sufficient to establish the corpus delicti aliunde the confession, and the confession as to venue as well as the other essential elements of the crime was corroborated by other evidence, a verdict of guilty was authorized. Kicklighter v. State, 76 Ga. App. 246, 45 S.E.2d 719 (1947).

Evidence sufficient to establish the venue of crime of cattle stealing. Kicklighter v. State, 76 Ga. App. 246, 45 S.E.2d 719 (1947).

Venue of offense of attempting to steal cattle was sufficiently proved. — Davis v. State, 66 Ga. App. 877, 19 S.E.2d 543 (1942).

When venue is not contested at trial, slight proof is sufficient. Jackson v. State, 177 Ga. App. 718, 341 S.E.2d 274 (1986); Brown v. State, 205 Ga. App. 31, 421 S.E.2d 340 (1992).

When evidence as to venue is conflicting. — State must prove venue as jurisdictional fact beyond a reasonable doubt. Adsitt v. State, 248 Ga. 237, 282 S.E.2d 305 (1981).

Venue needs clear proof beyond reasonable doubt. — Although slight evidence of venue may be sufficient when the fact of venue is not contested, nevertheless, it is a jurisdictional fact and must be proved clearly and beyond reasonable doubt. Gibson v. State, 52 Ga. App. 297, 183 S.E. 83 (1935); Rowland v. State, 90 Ga. App. 742, 84 S.E.2d 209 (1954).

Venue of the crime must be established clearly and beyond a reasonable doubt. Jackson v. State, 177 Ga. App. 718, 341 S.E.2d 274 (1986).

Venue must be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Levitt v. State, 201 Ga. App. 63, 410 S.E.2d 170 (1991).

Absent sufficient proof establishing venue, and proof that a crime took place within a city without also proving that the city was entirely within a county did not establish venue, the defendant's aggravated sexual battery and aggravated sodomy convictions were reversed. Melton v. State, 282 Ga. App. 685, 639 S.E.2d 411 (2006).

Evidence of venue, though slight, may be sufficient. — Defendant's conviction for impersonating a law enforcement officer was affirmed as venue was established since the state presented evidence that the defendant lived and was arrested in Catoosa County, Georgia, which authorized the jury to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant might have held oneself out as a law enforcement officer via the online application in Catoosa County; therefore, proof of venue was sufficient. Chase v. State, 337 Ga. App. 449, 787 S.E.2d 802 (2016).

Uniform traffic citations are not evidence for venue purposes. — Citation cannot provide the factual basis necessary to establish venue. Graves v. State, 269 Ga. 772, 504 S.E.2d 679 (1998), overruled on other grounds, Jones v. State, 272 Ga. 900, 537 S.E.2d 80 (2000), reversing Graves v. State, 227 Ga. App. 628, 490 S.E.2d 111 (1997).

Proof insufficient if venue evidence equivocal. — Venue may be proved by circumstantial evidence; but circumstances which render it possible that an alleged crime was committed within the jurisdiction of the court are insufficient to establish the jurisdictional element of venue when, from the circumstances adduced, it is as reasonable and possible that the crime was committed beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Clark v. State, 55 Ga. App. 162, 189 S.E. 379 (1937).

When the indictment did not charge uttering a forged instrument, but only charged the defendant with making, signing, forging, and counterfeiting the instrument, and the evidence failed to establish with any degree of clearness where this act may have taken place, the venue of the crime was not supported by the evidence. Rowland v. State, 90 Ga. App. 742, 84 S.E.2d 209 (1954).

Only rank speculation supported venue in the defendant's trial for cruelty to children; therefore, the trial court erred in not granting the defendant's motion for a directed verdict on this charge. Nihart v. State, 227 Ga. App. 272, 488 S.E.2d 740 (1997).

Evidence insufficient to establish venue. — Evidence at defendant's trial on a charge of aggravated assault, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, was insufficient to establish venue for purposes of O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e), since the crime arose while the defendant was driving after a former girlfriend and the girlfriend testified to living with her parents in Paulding County, near the line of Polk County, and further, that when she was minutes or less from home, she stopped on the side of the road; there was no evidence by her or anyone else that the site off the roadway where the crime occurred was in Douglas County and, accordingly, reversal of the conviction was required. Morris v. State, 263 Ga. App. 115, 587 S.E.2d 272 (2003).

Juvenile's numerous delinquency adjudications were reversed because the relevant county was never mentioned by any witness and it is not sufficient to prove that a crime occurred in a particular city without also proving that the city is entirely within the relevant county. In the Interest of J.B., 289 Ga. App. 617, 658 S.E.2d 194 (2008).

Defendant's convictions for rape and related crimes involving one out of six victims was reversed on appeal as the state failed to prove that the crimes against that victim occurred in Fulton County, Georgia, where the trial was held as the victim stated that the victim was using a pay phone on a certain street at a certain location at the time the victim was abducted, but the state never put forth any evidence establishing that the street at issue was in Fulton County. Further, there was no evidence offered by the state to establish the location of the school the victim had met the police at after the crime. Baker v. State, 295 Ga. App. 162, 671 S.E.2d 206 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0571, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 183 (Ga. 2009).

State's failure to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant and the codefendant possessed a pipe with traces of methamphetamine on the pipe, which was discovered in a search of the defendant's impounded vehicle in the county, rendered the verdict contrary to law, without a sufficient evidentiary basis, because venue was an essential element of the crime, and there was no direct evidence of possession of the pipe in the county; because there was no evidence placing the pipe in the vehicle while the vehicle was in the county, and there was a possibility that the pipe was put in the vehicle after the shootings during one of several stops the defendant and the codefendant made while in Alabama, venue for possession of methamphetamine was not proven to be in the county. Coleman v. State, 286 Ga. 291, 687 S.E.2d 427 (2009).

State failed to prove venue beyond a reasonable doubt because evidence that the defendant's drugs sales to an informant occurred somewhere in Vidalia, Georgia, was insufficient to establish that the crimes occurred in Toombs County since the habeas court properly took judicial notice that Vidalia was located in two different counties, Toombs and Montgomery, and O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e) was inapplicable; because the informant would have known the general locations where the sales occurred and because the drug task force agents knew the exact route that the informant and the defendant traveled, the state could have readily determined whether the drug sales occurred in Toombs County and offered evidence to the jury on that essential point. Thompson v. Brown, 288 Ga. 855, 708 S.E.2d 270 (2011).

Defendant's claim that the state failed to prove venue lacked merit as an officer testified that the victim's body was found in Baldwin County and additional testimony proved that the defendant drove the victim to the location where the victim was found, shot the victim, and left the victim for dead. Hargrove v. State, 291 Ga. 879, 734 S.E.2d 34 (2012), overruled on other grounds by Willis v. State, 2018 Ga. LEXIS 685 (Ga. 2018).

State failed to present evidence of venue necessary for a fleeing and eluding conviction, as the testimony merely identified streets, but did not indicate the counties in which the chase or shooting took place. Grant v. State, 326 Ga. App. 121, 756 S.E.2d 255 (2014).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's conviction for theft by taking since the evidence showed that the defendant never used the funds borrowed for relocating the Florida plant, as promised, and the loan was secured with equipment that the defendant did not own; however, the prosecution failed to prove venue was proper in Dodge County, Georgia, since although the contracts were executed in Dodge County, there was no evidence that the defendant exercised any control over the $ 350,000 in Dodge County. Davis v. State, 326 Ga. App. 279, 754 S.E.2d 815 (2014).

Defendant's conviction for making a false statement in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-10-20 was reversed on appeal because the state offered no proof that the jail where the alleged statement was made was in a particular county and since the defendant was also driven, the false statement may have been made in another county. Stockard v. State, 327 Ga. App. 184, 755 S.E.2d 548 (2014).

Since the state failed to present circumstantial evidence supporting a finding that the defendant and the victim entered Fulton County, the jury had no basis to apply O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h). State v. Robertson, 329 Ga. App. 182, 764 S.E.2d 427 (2014).

There was insufficient evidence to support the defendant's conviction for failing to stop at a stop sign because the state failed to prove venue. Glispie v. State, 335 Ga. App. 177, 779 S.E.2d 767 (2015), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 300 Ga. 128 793 S.E.2d 381 (Ga. 2016).

Defendant's murder conviction was reversed because although the evidence established that the cause of death, the shooting of the victim, was inflicted on a boat ramp in or near Lock and Dam Park and venue was proper where the boat ramp was situated under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(c), there was no evidence as to the county in which the park was located. Twitty v. State, 298 Ga. 204, 779 S.E.2d 298 (2015).

Testimony of victim. — Testimony from the victim that property was taken from the victim's premises located in a certain county is sufficient to establish venue in that county. Brown v. State, 157 Ga. App. 473, 278 S.E.2d 31 (1981).

Venue for financial transaction card theft. — Because both the restaurant where defendant had access to the card and the store where the card was used were located in the same county, there was sufficient evidence to establish venue for financial transaction card theft. Johnson v. State, 246 Ga. App. 239, 539 S.E.2d 914 (2000).

Defendant's convictions on 20 counts of financial transaction card fraud were not authorized since the evidence on each count created the inference that the financial transaction card was presented and goods were received in a county other than that in which defendant was prosecuted. Newsom v. State, 183 Ga. App. 339, 359 S.E.2d 11 (1987).

Evidence sufficient to establish venue. — In a drug possession case, the state properly established venue in Cherokee County beyond a reasonable doubt because O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h) permitted venue to be established in the county where a defendant was immediately present before being asked to provide a urine sample, which in the instant case was in the defendant's Cherokee County apartment where police officers were executing a search warrant. West v. State, 288 Ga. App. 566, 654 S.E.2d 463 (2007).

With regard to defendant's convictions on two counts of cruelty to children in the first degree and one count of aggravated battery, the state proved venue in Cobb County, Georgia, based on the defendant being indicted in Cobb County for crimes committed sometime between July 1, 2002, and December 22, 2002; the evidence presented at trial established that the defendant lived with the victim's parent and the victim at an apartment located in Cobb County during that time; the manager of the apartment complex saw the victim at the apartment on a daily basis and knew that the victim lived in the apartment with defendant; defendant admitted to whipping the victim on a daily basis; and the manager saw the victim in the apartment with injuries. Glover v. State, 292 Ga. App. 22, 663 S.E.2d 772 (2008).

As there was evidence from the defendant's confession to police and testimony from bank employees, together with physical evidence, that the defendant wrote a check out from a victim's checkbook in the defendant's name and then cashed the check at the bank, there was sufficient evidence to support a conviction for forgery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-9-1(a); the element of venue was properly established by the evidence as well pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(a). Bell v. State, 284 Ga. 790, 671 S.E.2d 815 (2009).

Jury's determination that venue was proper in Fulton County was supported by the record and, thus, the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for a directed verdict was not erroneous under circumstances in which the victim was abducted at a mall in Fulton County, the victim stated that the defendant originally got on a northbound interstate, but that the victim had no idea where the victim and the defendant went from there, the victim and the defendant drove around for about 20 minutes, the victim was wearing blacked-out sunglasses and could not see, and eventually the victim was taken from the vehicle into an unknown location and raped; the most definite testimony regarding the location of the crimes related to the mall, which was shown to be located in Fulton County, and the jury was authorized to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the rape might have occurred in Fulton County. Leftwich v. State, 299 Ga. App. 392, 682 S.E.2d 614 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C2013, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 710 (Ga. 2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 1019, 130 S. Ct. 1913, 176 L. Ed. 2d 386 (2010).

Evidence that a police officer found the victim lying on a sidewalk in Fulton County was sufficient to establish venue in that county under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. VI and O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(a). Branford v. State, 299 Ga. App. 890, 685 S.E.2d 731 (2009).

Venue with regard to convictions for possession of methamphetamine and of less than an ounce of marijuana was established as being in the county where the drugs were discovered during a search of the defendant's impounded vehicle because although the state presented no evidence that the methamphetamine residue and the marijuana found in the vehicle were in the possession of the defendant and the codefendant while they were in the county. On cross-examination, the defendant admitted to having hand-rolled a marijuana cigarette found in the vehicle the morning of the shooting; that testimony, coupled with the undisputed fact that the defendant, the codefendant, and the vehicle were at a service station in the county at a time following the point at which the defendant admitted having made the cigarette, established beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant and the codefendant possessed the marijuana cigarette in the county. Coleman v. State, 286 Ga. 291, 687 S.E.2d 427 (2009).

Since a shooting victim was assaulted in a vehicle that was shown by an investigator's officer to have been traveling through Fulton County, the state proved beyond a reasonable doubt that venue was proper in Fulton County. Saxton v. State, 300 Ga. App. 535, 685 S.E.2d 780 (2009).

State met the state's burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that venue of the crime charged was properly in Fulton County because, although the victim did not know the exact location of the shooting, the logical import of the victim's testimony was that the crime scene itself was in Fulton County; the victim testified to driving from one street to what the victim thought was another street where the defendant shot the victim, and the state established that the first street was in Fulton County. Sewell v. State, 302 Ga. App. 151, 690 S.E.2d 634, cert. denied, No. S10C0856, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 530 (Ga. 2010).

State's proof of venue was sufficient because the uncontradicted evidence at trial was that the victim was shot and buried on a hunting property in Echols County. Cantera v. State, 304 Ga. App. 289, 696 S.E.2d 354 (2010).

State established venue under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. VI and O.C.G.A. §§ 16-9-125 and 17-2-2(a) because a reasonable trier of fact was authorized to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the victims resided or were found in Forsyth County at the time the offense of financial identity fraud was committed as alleged in the indictment; the victim testified that the victim had been a resident of Forsyth County for twelve years and that the victim's company had been located there for seventeen years. Zachery v. State, 312 Ga. App. 418, 718 S.E.2d 332 (2011).

In an aggravated battery and gang activity case in which the crimes occurred at a bus stop outside Six Flags Over Georgia amusement park, there was sufficient evidence to establish venue in Cobb County because one defendant testified that the fight was "on Cobb County's side of the bus…" and other witnesses indicated on an exhibit the location where the witnesses exited the park and testified that the witnesses were at the Cobb County Transit bus stop. Morey v. State, 312 Ga. App. 678, 719 S.E.2d 504 (2011), cert. denied, No. S12C0451, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 592 (Ga. 2012).

State met the state's burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that venue of the crime charged was properly in Troup County, Georgia because the testimony of the victim's grandmother first established the exact location of the crime scene, and the victim testified that the events on the night in question took place in that county; the defendant offered no evidence to the contrary. Strozier v. State, 314 Ga. App. 432, 724 S.E.2d 446 (2012).

Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h), the state adequately proved venue was in DeKalb County as to a murder victim whose body was never found because the victim was last seen alive in that county, the defendant confessed that the defendant shot the victim in Atlanta, which was partly in DeKalb County, and the defendant and the victim had been together every day at the defendant's residence in that county. Rogers v. State, 290 Ga. 401, 721 S.E.2d 864 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to dismiss an indictment charging the defendant with arranging to buy cattle and failing or refusing to pay the seller in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-9-58 on the ground that venue did not lie in Laurens County because there was some evidence that the place of payment was at the seller's location in Laurens County and that the defendant wrongfully failed or refused to pay the seller in Laurens County for the cattle; even if the defendant's fraudulent intent arose in Kansas sometime after the cattle were shipped, the crime was not consummated until the defendant failed or refused to pay. Babbitt v. State, 314 Ga. App. 115, 723 S.E.2d 10 (2012).

State met the state's burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that venue was properly in Cobb County, Georgia, based on the evidence which showed that the child victim lived with the defendants at the family's residence which was located in Cobb County, there was evidence that the male defendant tied the victim up, tied the victim to a bedroom door at the home and whipped the victim, and the victim also testified that the male defendant had hit the victim at the family's home on the day the victim ran to a neighbor's home. Moore v. State, 319 Ga. App. 766, 738 S.E.2d 348 (2013).

There was sufficient evidence from which the jury could have concluded beyond a reasonable doubt that the crimes were committed in Walton County, including that numerous officers from the Walton County Sheriff's Office responded to the scene of the crimes, evidence was collected by the criminal investigation unit of that office and, thus, venue was proven. Propst v. State, 299 Ga. 557, 788 S.E.2d 484 (2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 646, 196 L. Ed. 2d 542 (U.S. 2017), overruled on other grounds, Worthen v. State, 2019 Ga. LEXIS 22 (Ga. 2019).

Evidence as a whole was sufficient to prove venue beyond a reasonable doubt because the state demonstrated that the defendant encountered the victim at the Washington Street barber shop in Newton County; after the victim was shot, the victim's vehicle came to rest at a Washington Street service station in Newton County; the cause of death was inflicted on Washington Street within a few hundred yards of the Washington Street service station; and the victim was shot on Washington Street only minutes after the victim left the Washington Street barbershop and only moments before the victim's vehicle crashed and came to rest at the service station. McMullen v. State, 300 Ga. 173, 794 S.E.2d 118 (2016).

Evidence supported a finding that the crimes occurred in Floyd County where the Sheriff's Department employees heard the defendant's and the co-defendant's false statements to them about the purported death of the defendant's son's father. Reeves v. State, 346 Ga. App. 414, 816 S.E.2d 401 (2018).

Evidence that the defendant took the victim from a park in Athens-Clarke County to the defendant's apartment was sufficient to support venue in that county. Ward v. State, 353 Ga. App. 1, 836 S.E.2d 148 (2019).

Testimony sufficient to support evidence regarding venue. — When one of the officers testified that a round of shots was directed at the officers' vehicle at a location that the officer believed to be within Clayton County, this testimony of the officer was sufficient to support the jury's finding that venue was in Clayton County. Davis v. State, 203 Ga. App. 106, 416 S.E.2d 375 (1992).

Testimony of police officers that the crimes charged in the indictment occurred in the county where defendant's trial was conducted was sufficient to authorize a finding of venue. Jones v. State, 220 Ga. App. 161, 469 S.E.2d 300 (1996).

State's misstatement about an address where the crimes arising from the defendant's attack on a taxi driver occurred, made during the state's opening statement, did not prevent the state from proving venue beyond a reasonable doubt; the state's opening statement was not evidence, a witness and a police officer stated the correct address, the officer also identified the county where the crimes occurred, and any conflict in the evidence about where the crimes occurred was resolved by the jury in favor of the state. Schofield v. State, 261 Ga. App. 70, 582 S.E.2d 11 (2003).

By applying the provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e) and (h), the jury could conclude that venue was proper because there was evidence that the victim's presence in the car remained voluntary until it became clear that the defendant was not mistakenly driving toward Alabama and that the defendant would not accommodate the victim's wish that the victim not be taken there; the jury could determine that the crime of kidnapping was complete when the defendant refused to turn the car around or to stop and let the victim exit. Pruitt v. State, 279 Ga. 140, 611 S.E.2d 47, cert. denied, 546 U.S. 866, 126 S. Ct. 165, 163 L. Ed. 2d 152 (2005).

Venue of defendant's armed robbery, theft by taking a motor vehicle, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime trial was proper in Hall County as the victim gave the victim's address and a police officer testified that the officer was called to investigate a robbery at that address in Hall County, where the officer spoke with the victim. Olarte v. State, 273 Ga. App. 96, 614 S.E.2d 213 (2005).

Jury was authorized to interpret the testimony of a victim's parent that the parent lived with the daughter in Heard County, Georgia and that the parent lived in a different trailer than the one in which the family lived when the defendant molested the victim at the parent's home to mean that the victim's family had been residing in Heard County when defendant molested the victim as evidence that the offenses were committed in Heard County. Moody v. State, 279 Ga. App. 457, 631 S.E.2d 473 (2006).

Venue was established in a child molestation case when the victim's aunt testified that the victim told her that the defendant molested the victim at the "big house," which was what the victim called the house where the victim's grandmother lived, and the evidence established that the "big house" was in Meriwether County. Brooks v. State, 286 Ga. App. 209, 648 S.E.2d 724 (2007).

Venue in Randolph County had been proven for second-degree criminal damage and for criminal trespass involving a couple's property. A neighbor testified that the couple's home was "probably five or six houses past" the defendant's house and stated "yes" when asked if all of those houses were located in Randolph County. Bass v. State, 288 Ga. App. 690, 655 S.E.2d 303 (2007), rev'd on other grounds, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 31 (Ga. 2009).

In defendants' trial for fleeing a police officer, reckless driving, and speeding, in Newton County, because a state trooper testified that the trooper first encountered defendants in Newton County and described the route using a map of Newton County. The trooper testified that no part of the pursuit took place off the map. Even had the route of pursuit taken the parties across county lines out of Newton County, venue would still be properly founded in Newton County pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e) or (h), which allowed venue wherever a portion of the crime took place or wherever the evidence showed the crime took place. Brewster v. State, 300 Ga. App. 143, 684 S.E.2d 309 (2009).

Incest and child molestation. — Because the victim lived in the county where the trial was held and the defendant would stay overnight, this evidence supported an inference that the defendant had access to the victim in that county and showed beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant might have had intercourse with the victim there; consequently, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h), the evidence was sufficient to support venue there. Drake v. State, 238 Ga. App. 584, 519 S.E.2d 692 (1999).

Child molestation in travelling car. — Although the victim testified that the victim did not know where the car was when the defendant touched the victim, venue was proper in a county which was said to have been traversed by adults who were also present in the vehicle. Withman v. State, 210 Ga. App. 159, 435 S.E.2d 519 (1993).

Rape in traveling car. — Rape victim's testimony that she and abductors traveled for a time while making many turns, combined with evidence as to the county in which she was abducted, was sufficient to prove that the rape could have occurred in that county. Dillard v. State, 223 Ga. App. 405, 477 S.E.2d 674 (1996).

Since the evidence sufficiently established that the defendant's coconspirator raped and sodomized the victim in a hijacked car while the defendant was driving the car between counties, venue was sufficiently established under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(b), (e), (h). Short v. State, 276 Ga. App. 340, 623 S.E.2d 195 (2005).

Sodomy in traveling car. — Incident on which a sodomy charge was based occurred about one mile from the home in Gordon County where the defendant and the victim lived, when the defendant and the victim were driving home; thus, under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(e), the crime was considered to have occurred in Gordon County, through which the car traveled, and the state proved venue. Prudhomme v. State, 285 Ga. App. 662, 647 S.E.2d 343 (2007).

Venue established by subsection (h). — Because O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h) applies by the statute's terms to "any case," use of subsection (h) to determine venue in a homicide case is not precluded and where the evidence allowed the jury to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the murder might have been committed in Laurens County it was sufficient to support the jury's finding that venue was appropriate in Laurens County. Nelson v. State, 262 Ga. 763, 426 S.E.2d 357 (1993), but see Clark v. State, 271 Ga. 6, 515 S.E.2d 155 (1999).

For venue purposes, evidence that showed that a murder victim's blood was found in a motel room in Floyd County, along with the fact that the victim was last seen alive in Floyd County, was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h) to allow a jury to consider that the murder might have been committed in Floyd County beyond a reasonable doubt. Edmond v. State, 283 Ga. 507, 661 S.E.2d 520 (2008).

State does not have to prove where drug ingested. — Because the presence of methamphetamine in defendant's urine constituted circumstantial evidence that defendant knowingly possessed the drug within three days prior to a urine test, and because the state did not have to prove where the drug was actually ingested, the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction and venue under O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h). Harbin v. State, 297 Ga. App. 877, 678 S.E.2d 553 (2009).

Evidence of highway number insufficient proof of venue. — In a DUI case under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391(a)(1), the state failed to prove that venue was proper in Fayette County: the evidence showed only that the defendant was stopped on Highway 138 by a Fayette County Sheriff's deputy, which was insufficient to prove venue; because DUI elements were established by the evidence, retrial was permitted. Smith v. State, 345 Ga. App. 43, 812 S.E.2d 117 (2018).

Stipulating to venue. — Pretermitting whether the decisions not to move for a directed verdict for lack of venue and to stipulate to venue fell below the objective standard of reasonableness, the defendant could not prove that there was a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different. Indeed, if defense counsel either moved for a directed verdict as to the lack of venue or decided against ultimately stipulating to venue, the trial transcript clearly showed that the state was prepared to reopen the evidence to recall a witness to prove venue. Muldrow v. State, 322 Ga. App. 190, 744 S.E.2d 413 (2013).

Jury instruction was not improper. — Although the better practice was to give a jury instruction on venue that indicated that a jury "may consider" whether a crime was committed in any county in which the evidence showed beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime might have been committed, a jury instruction that instead mirrored the language of O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2 was not erroneous and did not improperly shift the burden of proof regarding venue to the defendant in a murder case. Edmond v. State, 283 Ga. 507, 661 S.E.2d 520 (2008).

Venue a question of fact for the jury. — Venue was a question for the jury where the victim was abducted in the county in which the trial was held and where the defendant's testimony was sufficiently contradicted in other areas so as to place in the hands of the jury all issues concerning the weight and credibility of the defendant's statements as to the location of the conduct. Campbell v. State, 223 Ga. App. 484, 477 S.E.2d 905 (1996).

State proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant's fleeing or attempting to elude crimes took place in the county where the defendant's trial took place such that the trial court in that county had venue and jurisdiction; weighing the evidence of venue was a jury, not an appeals court, function. Ward v. State, 270 Ga. App. 427, 606 S.E.2d 877 (2004).

Whether the state established venue was a question for a jury because the question of whether the defendant's efforts to abandon the illegal files was successful when the defendant placed the files in the trash before entering Clayton County could not be determined as a matter of law at the pretrial stage. State v. Al-Khayyal, 322 Ga. App. 718, 744 S.E.2d 885 (2013).

Instruction that jurors had to consider cause of death occurred where body found. — Jury instructions set forth in O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(c) violated the habeas petitioner's due process rights since Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. II, Para. V made venue an essential element of malice murder, and the instruction's mandate that jurors had to consider the cause of death to have occurred where the body was found improperly shifted the burden of proving otherwise onto the defendant. Owens v. McLaughlin, 733 F.3d 320 (11th Cir. 2013).

This state claims jurisdiction of an offense committed on any of her boundary lines with other states for the county bordering on that part of the line where the offense was committed and, if doubtful as to which of two counties as set forth in subsection (g) of Code Section 17-2-2, for either county, and will proceed to arrest, indict, try, and punish unless the other state makes a demand for the accused person as a fugitive from justice, in which event the progress of the case shall be suspended by order of the Governor until the question of jurisdiction is settled.

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to challenge venue as such a motion would have failed given the evidence supporting a finding that the fatal gunshot was inflicted on the Georgia side of the bridge before the defendant threw the body into the river. ALR. — Person who steals property in one state or country and brings it into another as subject to prosecution for larceny in latter, 156 A.L.R. 862.

17-2-4. Defendant arrested, held, or present in county other than that in which indictment or accusation is pending.

(a) A defendant arrested, held, or present in a county other than that in which an indictment or accusation is pending against that defendant may state in writing a wish to plead guilty, guilty but mentally ill, guilty but with intellectual disability, or nolo contendere; to waive trial in the county in which the indictment or accusation is pending; and to consent to disposition of the case in the county in which the defendant was arrested, held, or present, subject to the approval of the prosecuting attorney for each county. Upon receipt of the defendant's statement and the written approval of the prosecuting attorney for each county, the clerk of the court in which the indictment or accusation is pending shall transmit the papers in the proceeding or certified copies thereof to the clerk of the court for the county in which the defendant was arrested, held, or present, and the prosecution shall continue in that county.

(b) A defendant arrested, held, or present in a county other than the county in which a complaint or arrest warrant is pending against that defendant may state in writing a wish to plead guilty, guilty but mentally ill, guilty but with intellectual disability, or nolo contendere; to waive venue and trial in the county in which the complaint or warrant was issued; and to consent to disposition of the case in the county in which the defendant was arrested, held, or present, subject to the approval of the prosecuting attorney for each county. Upon receipt of the defendant's statement and the written approval of the prosecuting attorney for each county, the clerk of the court in which the complaint or arrest warrant is pending shall transmit the papers in the proceeding or certified copies thereof to the clerk of the court for the county in which the defendant was arrested, held, or present, and the prosecution shall continue in that county.

(c) If after the proceeding has been transferred pursuant to subsection (a) or (b) of this Code section the defendant pleads not guilty or not guilty by reason of insanity, the clerk shall return the papers to the court in which the prosecution was commenced and the proceeding shall be restored to the docket of that court. A defendant's statement that the defendant wishes to plead guilty, guilty but mentally ill, guilty but with intellectual disability, or nolo contendere shall not be used against the defendant.

State not required to stipulate to venue. — Venue is not a fact to which the state is required to stipulate whenever the defendant wishes to do so, particularly when the state disbelieves the defendant's account of that fact, because stipulations and waivers of jurisdictional defenses streamline a proceeding in which both parties agree on a fact, making further proof unnecessary; stipulations and jurisdictional waivers are not a means of forcing an opposing party to agree to facts the opposing party believes are not true and would mislead the factfinder. If the facts are disputed, the parties' competing evidence and arguments can be presented to the factfinder to resolve. State v. Dixon, 286 Ga. 706, 691 S.E.2d 207 (2010).

Trial court not required to instruct jury on lesser included offense over which court lacks venue. — Court of appeals erred in reversing the defendant's conviction for armed robbery because the trial court properly declined to instruct the jury on the lesser included offense of theft by taking since there was no evidence that the included crime was committed in the county in which the defendant was being tried; although the state was unwilling to allow the defendant to waive venue or stipulate that what occurred was a theft by taking that happened entirely in Clayton County, the defendant was free to present evidence and argue to the jury that while the defendant was guilty of committing theft by taking in Clayton County, the defendant was not guilty of armed robbery in DeKalb County. But the defendant could not require the state to agree that the defendant committed theft by taking in Clayton County or require the trial court to instruct the jury on a lesser included offense over which the court lacked venue. State v. Dixon, 286 Ga. 706, 691 S.E.2d 207 (2010).

Editor's notes. — In light of the similarity of the statutory provisions, decisions under former Code 1933, § 27-601 are included in the annotations for this chapter.

State must show crime committed before accusation. — It is essential, to sustain a conviction of a criminal offense, that it be distinctly shown that the alleged offense was committed prior to the suing out of the accusation. Rivers v. State, 55 Ga. App. 290, 189 S.E. 923 (1937) (decided under former Code 1933, § 27-601).

Burden on state to show accusation made within statute of limitations and after crime. — Burden is as much upon the state to prove affirmatively that the accusation was subsequent in time to the commission of the alleged offense as it is to show that the offense did not so far antedate the accusation as to be barred by the statute of limitations, the failure to prove either being fatal to the state's cause. Rivers v. State, 55 Ga. App. 290, 189 S.E. 923 (1937) (decided under former Code 1933, § 27-601).

17-3-1. Generally.

(a) A prosecution for murder may be commenced at any time.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in Code Section 17-3-2.1, prosecution for other crimes punishable by death or life imprisonment shall be commenced within seven years after the commission of the crime except as provided by subsection (d) of this Code section; provided, however, that prosecution for the crime of forcible rape shall be commenced within 15 years after the commission of the crime.

(c) Except as otherwise provided in Code Section 17-3-2.1, prosecution for felonies other than those specified in subsections (a), (b), and (d) of this Code section shall be commenced within four years after the commission of the crime, provided that prosecution for felonies committed against victims who are at the time of the commission of the offense under the age of 18 years shall be commenced within seven years after the commission of the crime.

(d) A prosecution for the following offenses may be commenced at any time when deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) evidence is used to establish the identity of the accused:

(1) Armed robbery, as defined in Code Section 16-8-41;

(2) Kidnapping, as defined in Code Section 16-5-40;

(3) Rape, as defined in Code Section 16-6-1;

(4) Aggravated child molestation, as defined in Code Section 16-6-4;

(5) Aggravated sodomy, as defined in Code Section 16-6-2; or provided, however, that a sufficient portion of the physical evidence tested for DNA is preserved and available for testing by the accused and provided, further, that if the DNA evidence does not establish the identity of the accused, the limitation on prosecution shall be as provided in subsections (b) and (c) of this Code section.

(6) Aggravated sexual battery, as defined in Code Section 16-6-22.2;

(e) Prosecution for misdemeanors shall be commenced within two years after the commission of the crime.

General Consideration

Construction with tolling provision of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.2. — Trial court erred by applying O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.2 to the RICO and theft charges against the defendants because it was necessary for the state to show that the victim was over 65 years of age, was the principal stockholder of the corporation, was the owner of the property allegedly stolen, not the corporation, to determine the date the crime became known to the victim. Harper v. State, 292 Ga. 557, 738 S.E.2d 584 (2013).

When period begins to run. — In criminal cases, the statute of limitations runs, with certain exceptions, from the time of the crime to the time of indictment, not from time of the act to time of the trial. Cain v. State, 144 Ga. App. 249, 240 S.E.2d 750 (1977).

Prosecution against the defendant for simple battery was timely filed within two years, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(d), since the accusation was filed within the time period which was deemed to be the commencement of the matter pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-1-3(14); the fact that the supporting affidavit was filed six days after the limitations period ran did not affect the timeliness of the action pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(a) because that document was for the issuance of an arrest warrant. Cochran v. State, 259 Ga. App. 130, 575 S.E.2d 901 (2003).

Trial court erred in dismissing the accusations filed against the defendants in separate cases as the evidence showed that in each case the accusation was filed against the respective defendant within the applicable two-year time period set forth in O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(d). State v. Thompson, 261 Ga. App. 828, 584 S.E.2d 7 (2003).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to dismiss as prosecution of the defendant for misdemeanors was not commenced outside the applicable two-year statute of limitations after the defendant had the defendant's case transferred from the county probate court to the superior court and a superior court indictment was issued for the same offenses contained in the Uniform Traffic Citation (UTC) issued to the defendant on the day of the alleged offenses; rather, the prosecution against the defendant "commenced" at the time the UTC was issued, which occurred within the statute of limitations. Bishop v. State, 261 Ga. App. 445, 582 S.E.2d 571 (2003).

Four-year statute of limitations contained in O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c) did not bar charges for money taken from the city by the defendant, the city's employee, more than four years before the indictment since: (1) the series of transactions constituted a single embezzlement and could be charged as a single charge in the indictment; (2) the embezzlement was not discovered until mid-July 2000; and (3) the indictment was made within four years after that discovery. Stack-Thorpe v. State, 270 Ga. App. 796, 608 S.E.2d 289 (2004).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for rape of a minor relative, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground that the applicable statute of limitations ran on the rape offenses before the defendant was charged because in applying the 1996 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1 and the tolling provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1, the limitation period for the defendant's crime ran 15 years from December 13, 1995, when the crimes were first reported to authorities. Thus, because the state had until December 13, 2010, to indict the defendant, the January 7, 2008, indictment was timely and no ex post facto violation arose because the original seven-year limitation period had not expired at the time. Flournoy v. State, 299 Ga. App. 377, 682 S.E.2d 632 (2009).

Burden of proof on state. — Burden is on the state to prove that a crime occurred within the applicable statute of limitation. Tarver v. State, 198 Ga. App. 634, 402 S.E.2d 365 (1991).

State was not required to prove the crime occurred on a date certain. — Statute of limitation for aggravated child molestation is seven years; when the date of the alleged offenses was not stated as a material element of the offense charged, the state was not required to prove the crime occurred on a date certain, and the state's proof showing that the offenses occurred within the applicable seven-year limitation period was adequate. Tyler v. State, 266 Ga. App. 221, 596 S.E.2d 651 (2004).

Allegation and proof of exception to limitation required. — When an exception is relied upon to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations in a criminal case, it must be alleged and proved. Moss v. State, 220 Ga. App. 150, 469 S.E.2d 325 (1996).

Prosecution not time barred when intending to prove exception. — Defendant's argument that the trial court erred in determining that a superceding indictment served to toll the statutes of limitations as to Counts 2, 4, and 5 because the tolling language in those defectively referred back to Count 1, rather than the count in question, was meritless because the defendant was sufficiently apprised of all the essential elements of the charges when read as a whole, including the fact that the state intended to prove that the statutes of limitations for the crimes were tolled until 2005 pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 17-3-1(c.1) and 17-3-2(2) due to the fact that the defendant's identity was unknown until that time; the superfluous language "as to count one (1)" contained in Counts 2 through 6 was not enough to confuse the defendant about the offenses or the applicable exception to the statutes of limitations, which the state intended to prove at trial. Because the state was alleging an exception to the statutes of limitations, it was not barred from proceeding against the defendant under the superceding indictment. Leftwich v. State, 299 Ga. App. 392, 682 S.E.2d 614 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C2013, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 710 (Ga. 2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 1019, 130 S. Ct. 1913, 176 L. Ed. 2d 386 (2010).

Nolle prosequi to indictment. — Because the state re-indicted the defendant within six months of the entry of the nolle prosequi pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's plea in bar. Hicks v. State, 315 Ga. App. 779, 728 S.E.2d 294 (2012).

Second indictment did not need to allege special exception to statute of limitations. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion in arrest of a judgment of conviction for burglary and theft by taking because the second indictment was filed within the six-month extension authorized by O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 and, therefore, did not need to allege an exception to the four-year statute of limitation. Johnson v. State, 335 Ga. App. 886, 782 S.E.2d 50 (2016).

State need only prove date within period of limitations. — Date of the offense need not be proved with preciseness, but only that the offense occurred during the period of limitations. Cain v. State, 144 Ga. App. 249, 240 S.E.2d 750 (1977).

Exact date is not material. — Court did not err in instructing the jurors that a verdict of guilty would be authorized if the jurors found beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the offense of bribery at any time within four years immediately preceding the filing of the indictment, as it is well settled in Georgia law that evidence of guilt is not restricted to the day mentioned in the indictment, but may extend to any day previous to the finding of the bill and within the statute of limitation for the prosecution of the offense. Carpenter v. State, 167 Ga. App. 634, 307 S.E.2d 19 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 79, 310 S.E.2d 912 (1984).

When the defendant was accused of committing armed robbery on or about September 15, 2001, the defendant was tried in August 2002, and the defendant testified that the robbery occurred "last fall," the evidence supported a finding that the crime was committed during the fall of 2001, which was within the seven-year statute of limitations for armed robbery pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-8-41(b) and 17-3-1(b); as the exact date of the commission of the crime was not a material allegation of the indictment, the commission of the offense could be proved to have occurred any time within the limitations period. Houston v. State, 267 Ga. App. 383, 599 S.E.2d 325 (2004).

With regard to defendant's conviction for burglary, the trial court did not err in allowing evidence of an April 30, 2003, burglary based on the date range of April 18 to 22, 2003, being set forth in the indictment because the date of the burglary was not an essential element of the burglary offense charged, and defendant did not assert a defense — alibi or otherwise — making the date material. Because the burglary of April 30, 2003, was within the applicable four-year statute of limitation, the trial court did not err in allowing evidence of the date. McDaniel v. State, 289 Ga. App. 722, 658 S.E.2d 248 (2008).

Defendant's conviction for misstating a material fact to a victim in connection with the sale of a security for an indictment dated December 22, 2004, was properly proven by the state to have occurred within the four year statute of limitations period, by the state establishing that the victim invested in the stock by two checks, dated November 28 and December 13, 2001, and the victim testified that the investment was made based on conversations with the defendant during the months of October and November of 2001; as a result, the evidence was sufficient to show that the defendant's violative acts as to the sale of securities occurred within the period provided by the statute of limitations. Haupt v. State, 290 Ga. App. 616, 660 S.E.2d 383 (2008).

Dismissals with prejudice as statute of limitations expired. — Dismissal orders due to the failure of the state to provide discovery in 10 cases were vacated because the trial court exceeded the court's authority as the defendants were accused of committing offenses between May 9, 2015 and October 27, 2015, which caused the orders to operate as a dismissal with prejudice since the state was barred from prosecuting those defendants as the statute of limitations had expired. State v. Banks, 348 Ga. App. 876, 825 S.E.2d 399 (2019).

Trial court erred in dismissing the misdemeanor prosecution of the defendant because the trial court's dismissal functioned as an impermissible dismissal with prejudice in a criminal case as the state was barred from re-accusing the defendant because the two-year statute of limitation for misdemeanor offenses had ran, and the state had not sought by nolle prosequi or other means to extend that limitation period. State v. Walker, No. A20A0544, 2020 Ga. App. LEXIS 423 (July 2, 2020).

Trial court, not jury, required to make factual findings raised in pretrial plea in bar alleging statute of limitations defense. — Trial court erred in reserving for the jury resolution of the defendants' pleas in bar, alleging a statute of limitations defense under O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c) to indictments charging thefts by taking and receiving in connection with a client's property transfers, because the trial court, and not the jury, was required to make factual findings based on evidence received during a pretrial hearing on this matter. Rader v. State, 300 Ga. App. 411, 685 S.E.2d 405 (2009).

Crime committed prior to indictment. — Unless time is an essential element of the offense charged, the time of the commission of the offense alleged in the indictment is immaterial. To sustain a conviction, there must be proof to establish that the offense occurred prior to the return of the indictment and within the statute of limitations. Reynolds v. State, 147 Ga. App. 488, 249 S.E.2d 305 (1978).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal on the ground that there was insufficient evidence that the crimes for which the defendant was charged, aggravated assault, making terroristic threats, and cruelty to children in the third degree, were committed on the date alleged in the indictment because there was sufficient evidence to support the allegations of the indictment; the exact date of the crimes was not a material allegation of the indictment because the exact date was not an essential element with respect to any of the charged offenses, and the date of the crimes proved at trial was prior to the return of the indictment and within the limitation periods for the crimes. Coats v. State, 303 Ga. App. 818, 695 S.E.2d 285 (2010), overruled on other grounds by McClure v. State, 306 Ga. 856, 834 S.E.2d 96 (2019).

Offense date demonstrable by circumstantial evidence. — Date of the offense may be established by circumstantial evidence. Cain v. State, 144 Ga. App. 249, 240 S.E.2d 750 (1977).

Circumstantial evidence was sufficient to show that acts of cruelty committed by the defendant on the defendant's 13-year-old stepson were committed within the statute of limitation. Lee v. State, 232 Ga. App. 300, 501 S.E.2d 844 (1998).

Superseding indictment not barred. — Timely accusation charging the defendant with misdemeanors, which was later followed by an indictment that included the misdemeanor charges and a felony charge filed more than two years after the commission of the crimes, was not barred by the statute of limitations; the indictment merely duplicated the original misdemeanor charges, and the felony indictment was within the applicable statute of limitation period of four years. Wooten v. State, 240 Ga. App. 725, 524 S.E.2d 776 (1999).

Malpractice in office. — In an action for malpractice in office brought against a judge of recorder's court for inappropriate handling of traffic cases for purposes of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(d), the traffic cases became final on the date that the recorder's court entered the court's judgment of nolle prosequi or accepted a plea of guilty to a lesser offense and that result was entered by the court as the court's disposition. State v. Lester, 170 Ga. App. 471, 317 S.E.2d 295 (1984); Andrews v. State, 175 Ga. App. 22, 332 S.E.2d 299 (1985).

Prosecution for misdemeanor. — Trial court did not err in refusing to dismiss uniform traffic citations issued within two years of the date the offenses occurred, but later amended by the state, on the ground that the statute of limitation expired; the amended accusations did not constitute the commencement of a new prosecution and there had been no final disposition of the previously filed accusations. Prindle v. State, 240 Ga. App. 461, 523 S.E.2d 44 (1999).

Prosecution for felony murder. — Defendant's prosecution for felony murder was not barred by O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(a) even though the statute of limitations expired regarding the underlying felony because felony murder is a form of murder for which there is no statute of limitations. State v. Jones, 274 Ga. 287, 553 S.E.2d 612 (2001).

When, in defendant's murder trial, counsel did not object to counts in the indictment as to when the statute of limitations expired, ineffective assistance of counsel was not shown because there was no prejudice as these counts were later dismissed, except those counts were allowed to serve as underlying felonies for a felony murder charge, and it was proper to allow felonies as to which the statute of limitations had expired to be used in this manner, and the evidence used to prove these felonies was admissible to prove those crimes as to which the statute of limitations had not expired. Zellars v. State, 278 Ga. 481, 604 S.E.2d 147 (2004).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to demur to the fatally flawed felony murder counts in the indictment because the defendant did not demonstrate prejudice as the defendant failed to show that the state would not have simply re-indicted the defendant after dismissal of the original indictment and the state faced no imminent deadlines on the murder counts. Martin v. State, 306 Ga. 747, 833 S.E.2d 122 (2019).

Amendment filed after two-year period in subsection (d). — When an original accusation was timely filed and valid within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(c), and was subsequently amended after the two-year period of limitations set forth in O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(d), the amendment did not negate the prior valid commencement of prosecution which occurred before the expiration of the operative statute of limitations. Freeman v. State, 194 Ga. App. 905, 392 S.E.2d 330 (1990).

Lesser included offense. — Statute of limitations did not bar conviction on lesser included offense of voluntary manslaughter as the statute of limitations applicable in a criminal case was that which related to the offense charged in the indictment, and not to any minor offense included therein of which the accused might be found guilty. Glidewell v. State, 279 Ga. App. 114, 630 S.E.2d 621 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Reynolds v. State, 285 Ga. 70, 673 S.E.2d 854 (2009).

Application for plea in bar. — Trial court clearly erred in denying the defendant's plea in bar as to the kidnapping, aggravated assault, and burglary charges because the original indictment was brought ten years after the offenses occurred while the statute of limitations for those offenses was seven years, four years, and four years respectively, but the trial court did not err in denying the plea in bar as to the rape charge, which had a 15-year limitations period. Lynch v. State, 346 Ga. App. 849, 815 S.E.2d 340 (2018).

Waiver. — There was no absolute bar to the defendant's waiver of the right to protection of the statute of limitations in a plea agreement signed by the defendant and the defendant's counsel. State v. Barrett, 215 Ga. App. 401, 451 S.E.2d 82 (1994), rev'd on other grounds, 265 Ga. 489, 458 S.E.2d 620 (1995).

No ineffective assistance of counsel for failing to quash indictment based on date. — When the evidence showed that the offenses for which a defendant was charged occurred within the alleged date range and within the governing statute of limitation set forth in the indictment, and the defendant did not show that the evidence permitted the state to allege a specific date for any of the charges, nor did the defendant show that the lack of specific dates in the indictment materially affected the defendant's ability to present a defense, there was no reasonable probability that but for the defendant's trial counsel's failure to move to quash the indictment, the outcome of the defendant's trial would have been different. Stroud v. State, 284 Ga. App. 604, 644 S.E.2d 467 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1137, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 506 (Ga. 2007).

No ineffective assistance of counsel for failing to quash indictment based on grand jury composition. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to move to quash the indictment or to arrest judgment because even if a timely motion to quash had been filed, the indictment likely would have been dismissed because a convicted felon served on the grand jury in violation of O.C.G.A. § 15-12-60, however, the state would have been free to obtain the identical indictment from a properly constituted grand jury. Brooks v. State, 332 Ga. App. 396, 772 S.E.2d 838

Limitation Period Application

Judge may charge four-year statute. — Trial judge's charge on four-year statute of limitations pursuant to this section did not create harmful error even though the requisites for the offense had changed less than four years ago since all evidence showed the crime, if committed, was committed after those changes. Almond v. State, 128 Ga. App. 758, 197 S.E.2d 836 (1973).

Misstatement of limitation period. — Reversal was not warranted when the trial court misstated the applicable statute of limitations for child molestation because a correct statement would not have changed the result and harm to the defendant was not established. Arnold v. State, 236 Ga. App. 380, 511 S.E.2d 219, aff'd, 271 Ga. 780, 523 S.E.2d 14 (1999).

Even though the trial court erred in charging the jury that the statute of limitations for incest is seven years, the error was harmless because the defendant's acts of incest occurred well within the applicable four-year limitation period. Wiser v. State, 242 Ga. App. 593, 530 S.E.2d 278 (2000).

Although the trial court erroneously instructed the jury on the applicable statute of limitations for rape, the error was beneficial to the defendant because the instruction held the state to a higher burden to show the state commenced prosecution within seven years, not 15 years, and, thus, the defendant's contention of error lacked merit. Pauley v. State, 355 Ga. App. 47, 842 S.E.2d 499 (2020).

No evidence concerning DNA presented. — Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's plea in bar because the state failed to meet the state's burden to invoke O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(d), as the state presented no evidence whatsoever at the plea in bar hearing concerning the DNA evidence and what the evidence would have established. State v. Watson, 340 Ga. App. 678, 798 S.E.2d 295 (2017).

Seven year statute of limitations. — When the victim was born on August 19, 1982, the evidence showed that the molestations began when the victim was five or six while the victim lived in a Gwinnett County apartment, and the mother testified that they lived in Gwinnett from 1986 to 1990, the evidence authorized the determination that the acts of molestation charged occurred in Gwinnett after July 1, 1987, and within the applicable seven years statute of limitations. Thompson v. State, 212 Ga. App. 175, 442 S.E.2d 771 (1994), overruled on other grounds by Willis v. State, 304 Ga. 686, 820 S.E.2d 640 (2018).

Under the former version of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1, it was error to convict the defendant for acts of child molestation that allegedly occurred after the victim turned 14 years old when the indictment against the defendant was returned six months beyond the four years after the victim turned 16. However, for acts that occurred while the victim was 13, the seven-year statute of limitations period applied and the indictment was returned within that time period, so the defendant was ordered retried on charges regarding acts occurring while the victim was 13; since the exact dates of the offenses were not material allegations in the indictment, those dates could be proved as of any time within the applicable statute of limitations. Tompkins v. State, 265 Ga. App. 760, 595 S.E.2d 599 (2004).

Trial court properly granted the defendant's plea in bar on statute of limitations grounds as to the charges against the defendant for armed robbery and kidnapping with bodily injury; a seven-year statute of limitations applied to those offenses, the record showed that the defendant was indicted for them more than seven years after the alleged crimes occurred, there was no tolling of the applicable limitations period, and there was also no reason for the trial court to rule that the statute of limitations issue regarding those offenses should be submitted to the jury. Jenkins v. State, 278 Ga. 598, 604 S.E.2d 789 (2004).

Because an underage sexual abuse victim did not report molestation by the defendant until December 2001, the seven-year statute of limitations did not even begin to run until that time, pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 17-3-1(c) and 17-3-2.1(a); further, the defendant's own statement that the defendant only knew the victim for two or three years would have been sufficient to show that the molestation took place at some point within the limitations period. Porter v. State, 270 Ga. App. 860, 608 S.E.2d 315 (2004).

Trial court's denial of defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, on two counts of child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, was proper because the evidence of the defendant's inappropriate sexual abuse of the victim, defendant's son, sufficiently placed the dates of the charged offenses within the seven-year limitations period of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-3-1(c) and 17-3-2.1(a)(5). Allen v. State, 275 Ga. App. 826, 622 S.E.2d 54 (2005).

Trial court erred in dismissing the counts of the indictment charging the defendant with aggravated child molestation, child molestation, and statutory rape with a child under the age of 16 because the indictment sufficiently invoked the tolling provision of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1; pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c), the state had seven years to indict the defendant, and the defendant was indicted within seven years. State v. Godfrey, 309 Ga. App. 234, 709 S.E.2d 572 (2011).

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's plea in bar to dismiss the counts of an indictment charging the defendant with child molestation and aggravated child molestation to a child under the age of 14 because the state failed to indict the defendant within the limitation period, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c); because the state did not allege that the victim was under the age of 16, the tolling provision of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1 was not invoked. State v. Godfrey, 309 Ga. App. 234, 709 S.E.2d 572 (2011).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to dismiss an indictment charging the defendant with armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41, for a violation of the defendant's right to due process because the defendant failed to show that the defense was prejudiced by the six year delay between the commission of the crime and the defendant's arrest or that the state deliberately delayed the arrest to obtain a tactical advantage; the defendant was arrested and indicted for armed robbery, a noncapital felony, within the applicable seven-year statute of limitation, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-8-41(a) and 17-3-1(c). Billingslea v. State, 311 Ga. App. 490, 716 S.E.2d 555 (2011).

Four year statute of limitations. — Trial court properly granted the defendant's plea in bar concerning the burglary, aggravated assault, and firearm possession charges as the state's prosecution against the defendant on those charges was barred by the applicable four-year statute of limitations regarding those offenses since the record showed that more than seven years passed between the time the crimes occurred and the state's indictment of the defendant on those charges, and no showing was made that the applicable statute of limitations was tolled; further, since the applicable statute of limitations barred those actions, the trial court erred in finding that the statute of limitations issue should be submitted to the jury. Jenkins v. State, 278 Ga. 598, 604 S.E.2d 789 (2004).

Conviction for criminal reproduction of recorded material in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-60(b) was not time-barred under O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c); the defendant was observed committing the crime on May 22, 2004, when illegally recorded material was found in the defendant's car, and a superseding indictment was issued on February 7, 2006. Hayward-El v. State, 284 Ga. App. 125, 643 S.E.2d 242 (2007).

Because DUI was a predicate offense set out in the indictment against the defendant only as an element of the offense of vehicular homicide, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-393(a), and not as a separate crime for which the defendant risked a separate criminal liability, a trial court did not err by denying the defendant's plea in bar because, as a felony offense, prosecution on the vehicular homicide counts were commenced within four years after the commission of the crime as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c); the expiration of the limitations period for the driving under the influence counts did not preclude a prosecution for vehicular homicide. Leachman v. State, 286 Ga. App. 708, 649 S.E.2d 886, cert. denied, No. S07C1816, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 768 (Ga. 2007).

Defendant was properly denied a motion for a directed verdict of acquittal based on the expiration of the statute of limitations under O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1 as the charge of theft by deception was a felony rather than a misdemeanor under O.C.G.A. § 16-8-12 based on the evidence that more than $500 was taken and, thus, a four-year statute of limitations applied; the defendant should have made a special plea in bar prior to the trial. Parks v. State, 294 Ga. App. 646, 669 S.E.2d 684 (2008).

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's plea in bar based upon the running of the statute of limitations, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c), because no valid indictment was filed within four years of the date the alleged victim learned of the defendant's actions when the first indictment against the defendant alleged only one crime and did not inform the defendant of all the charges the defendant had to defend against at trial and was not specific enough to protect the defendant from multiple prosecutions; the state could not allege a single defective charge of theft by taking that could have been barred by the statute of limitation and upon the statute's dismissal inflate that single, defective one count indictment to one alleging 31-counts, and the second indictment would impermissibly broaden and substantially amend the first indictment. State v. Bair, 303 Ga. App. 183, 692 S.E.2d 806 (2010).

State must commence prosecutions for theft by taking within four years of the commission of the crimes because the four-year limitation period does not include any period in which the crimes were unknown by the state, but the knowledge of someone injured by the crime may be imputed to the state for purposes of determining if the exception to the statute applies; when the state seeks to rely on an exception to the statute, the state must allege the exception in the indictment State v. Bair, 303 Ga. App. 183, 692 S.E.2d 806 (2010).

Defendant's prosecution for the crimes of false imprisonment, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-41, and kidnapping, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40(a), were barred by the statute of limitations, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1, because the state did not indict the defendant on those charges until after the four-year statute of limitations ran; the state's decision to reissue the indictment to include the false imprisonment and kidnapping counts substantially amended the original charges because those offenses contained elements separate and distinct from any of the crimes charged in the original indictment. Martinez v. State, 306 Ga. App. 512, 702 S.E.2d 747 (2010).

Trial court correctly concluded that the four-year statute of limitation contained in O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c) was applicable and that the state failed to plead and prove that the tolling provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.2 had been triggered. Consequently, the trial court did not err in granting defendants' plea in bar. State v. Mullins, 321 Ga. App. 671, 742 S.E.2d 490 (2013).

Defendant's convictions for theft by conversion and a RICO violation were reversed because the state failed to carry the state's burden to prove that the defendant was indicted on the counts within the applicable statutes of limitation as the evidence showed that the victims, and therefore the state, had actual knowledge of the offenses more than five years prior to the June 12, 2009 indictment, and the state produced no evidence or argument to the contrary. Jannuzzo v. State, 322 Ga. App. 760, 746 S.E.2d 238 (2013).

Four-year limitation period applied to the allegations of theft and identify fraud. State v. Green, 350 Ga. App. 238, 828 S.E.2d 635 (2019).

Indictment filed within 15 year statute of limitations. — With regard to a defendant's conviction for forcible rape of the defendant's child during the time the child was 13 through 15 years of age, the trial court correctly concluded that the state had 15 years from the victim's 16th birthday on January 12, 1995, or until January 12, 2010, to prosecute the case; therefore, no ex post facto violation occurred since the indictment was filed on January 8, 2008. Duke v. State, 298 Ga. App. 719, 681 S.E.2d 174 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1866, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 31 (Ga. 2010).

Two year statute of limitations. — Prosecution of a defendant for speeding and driving with a suspended tag was not barred by the limitations period contained in O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(d) because the prosecution was commenced under the Uniform Traffic Citations within the two-year period following the commission of the traffic offenses. Chism v. State, 295 Ga. App. 776, 674 S.E.2d 328 (2009).

State could prosecute a count of the indictment under an amended accusation because the indictment was amended before the expiration of the two-year statute of limitation, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(d). Sevostiyanova v. State, 313 Ga. App. 729, 722 S.E.2d 333, cert. denied, No. S12C0968, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 612 (Ga. 2012).

Allegation of molestation of a child under 16 sufficient to invoke tolling. — Indictment alleging the molestation of a child under the age of 16 sufficiently invoked the statute of limitation tolling provision set forth in O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1. Lyde v. State, 311 Ga. App. 512, 716 S.E.2d 572 (2011).

Knowledge of crimes by victims or state. — Order dismissing certain counts was vacated as to computer theft and theft by taking because no evidence was presented that the victim or the authorities knew about those crimes since no hearing was held. State v. Green, 350 Ga. App. 238, 828 S.E.2d 635 (2019).

Victim's knowledge imputable to state. — If the victim's knowledge of alleged sexual offenses committed by the defendant was imputable to the state, the statute of limitations was not tolled due to the victim's infancy, the victim's lack of awareness of the criminality of the defendant's alleged conduct, and/or the victim's purported fear of the defendant. Sears v. State, 182 Ga. App. 480, 356 S.E.2d 72 (1987), overruled on other grounds by State v. Lane, 308 Ga. 10, 838 S.E.2d 808 (2020).

In a prosecution of a corrections officer on charges of sodomy and contact with an inmate, the victim's knowledge was imputable to the state to start the running of the statute of limitations even though the victim was an inmate and was a party to the crimes by willingly participating in the activities. Lee v. State, 211 Ga. App. 112, 438 S.E.2d 108 (1993).

Because the victim's knowledge was imputed to the state and since the last act occurred on or before May 1985, defendant's indictment in 1993, when the victim was only 12 years old, was untimely and required reversal of the defendant's conviction. It is unlikely a victim that young would have any concept they were the victim of a crime and would at most understand that the defendant hurt them; yet through a legal fiction the courts must assume the state had knowledge of these crimes at that time. Johnston v. State, 213 Ga. App. 579, 445 S.E.2d 566 (1994).

Effect of subsequent reduction of offense. — Because the applicable law relevant to a crime is the law as the law existed at the time the crime occurred, and the theft of $350 was a felony with a four-year statute of limitations when the theft was committed, the crime remains such a felony with that statute of limitations despite the subsequent reduction of the offense to a misdemeanor with a two-year statute of limitations. State v. Williams, 172 Ga. App. 708, 324 S.E.2d 557 (1984).

Thirteen month preindictment delay not denial of due process. — Absent a showing of actual prejudice, a 13 month preindictment delay which caused a defendant to be unable to remember where the defendant was or what the defendant was doing on the dates of the alleged offense is insufficient to show a denial of due process. Hardwick v. State, 158 Ga. App. 154, 279 S.E.2d 253 (1981).

O.C.G.A. § 1-3-1(d)(3) did not apply in a criminal prosecution. — In a prosecution of a county deputy for sexual battery and false imprisonment, an indictment filed on May 30, 2014, two years after the incidents that took place on May 30, 2012, was filed a day after the expiration of the statute of limitation, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(e); O.C.G.A. § 1-3-1(d)(3) did not apply in a criminal prosecution. State v. Dorsey, 342 Ga. App. 188, 802 S.E.2d 61 (2017).

State failed to prove a tolling of the statute of limitation. — When there was no showing that the crimes charged in the earlier accusation arose out of the same conduct which gave rise to the offenses alleged in the subsequent accusation, the state failed to prove the statute of limitation was tolled by an amendment to an earlier accusation. Tarver v. State, 198 Ga. App. 634, 402 S.E.2d 365 (1991).

State argued that O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c), the four-year statute of limitation for conspiracy to defraud the state, O.C.G.A. § 16-10-21, and conspiracy in restraint of free and open competition, O.C.G.A. § 16-10-22, was tolled under O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2) until the state learned of the conspiracy. The defendants' pleas in bar were properly granted as the evidence was sufficient to establish that a defendant's supervisor, a state employee, was aware of the crimes over four years before the defendants were indicted, and the supervisor's knowledge was imputed to the state. State v. Robins, 296 Ga. App. 437, 674 S.E.2d 615 (2009).

State argued that O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1, the statute of limitation for conspiracy charges, was tolled under O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2) until the state learned of the conspiracy after receiving an open records request. The defendants' pleas in bar were properly granted as the state had the burden to prove the date the state received the open records request, but failed to do so. State v. Robins, 296 Ga. App. 437, 674 S.E.2d 615 (2009).

DNA-identification tolling provision did not apply because it expressly provided that it applied to crimes that occurred on or after July 1, 2002, and the offenses at issue occurred in 1994. Beavers v. State, 345 Ga. App. 870, 815 S.E.2d 223 (2018).

Continuation of original prosecution. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's plea in bar on the ground that the statute of limitation for the two amended counts for driving under the influence of alcohol expired because the amended accusations did not commence a new prosecution, but rather, constituted a continuation of the original prosecution.

Barghi v. State, 334 Ga. App. 409, 779 S.E.2d 373 (2015), cert. denied, No. S16C0427, 2016 Ga. LEXIS 235 (Ga. 2016).

Limitations period properly tolled. — Because the statute of limitations as to two counts of theft by receiving was tolled during the period in which the person committing the crimes was unknown, and knowledge was not imputed to the state during this time, the prosecution of those counts was not time-barred. English v. State, 288 Ga. App. 436, 654 S.E.2d 150 (2007).

As the evidence established that a defendant's employer first learned of the defendant's alleged false expense reports and improper payments to the defendant's spouse in an audit conducted less than four years before the state indicted the defendant for felony theft, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c)'s four-year statute of limitations was tolled by O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2). The tolling period ended when the employer actually learned of the crime, not when the employeer could have discovered the crime through the exercise of reasonable diligence. State v. Campbell, 295 Ga. App. 856, 673 S.E.2d 336 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0965, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 380 (Ga. 2009).

Because the existence, execution, and timing of an agreement that allegedly violated the bribery statute were unknown to the state before February 2010, the statute of limitations for the bribery charge was tolled until it was discovered; and the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's plea in bar based on the expiration of the statute of limitation. Kenerly v. State, 325 Ga. App. 412, 750 S.E.2d 822 (2013).

Because the tolling exception to the statute of limitation applied to the failure to disclose a financial interest charge, and the prosecution for that charge was timely commenced after the crime was discovered, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's plea in bar based on the expiration of the statute of limitation. Kenerly v. State, 325 Ga. App. 412, 750 S.E.2d 822 (2013).

Unknown criminal or crime tolls limitation — Prosecution of the defendant's case was not barred by the four year statute of limitations for computer theft because even if the National Guard were actually aware that the defendant entered the defendant's own grades, with or without authorization to do so; in October 2012, the undisputed evidence showed that the National Guard did not become aware that the grades entered were false until January 2015. Countryman v. State, No. A20A0556, 2020 Ga. App. LEXIS 360 (June 18, 2020).

Following the murder of the defendant's two-year-old child, hiding the body in the attic, and fleeing the country, the jury was authorized to find that the defendant had absconded and that the statute of limitation was tolled from February 4, 2007, until January 17, 2013 as the evidence established both dates on which the defendant left Georgia (February 4, 2007) and the date the defendant was returned by compulsory legal process (January 17, 2013). Vasquez v. State, 306 Ga. 216, 830 S.E.2d 143 (2019).

"Person unknown" tolling period extends until state has probable cause to arrest. — Under O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2), the statute of limitations on the defendant's charges of burglary and possession of a knife, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c), was tolled with respect to an unknown person until the state possessed sufficient evidence to authorize the lawful arrest of that person; in other words, probable cause. Remand was required for consideration of whether tolling was proper under this new interpretation of § 17-3-2(2). Riley v. State, 305 Ga. 163, 824 S.E.2d 249 (2019).

Statute of limitations issue properly submitted to jury. — After the investigating police officer testified that they could not identify the suspect in the defendant's prosecution for rape, the trial court properly submitted a statute of limitations issue to the jury; although the defendant argued that the victim knew the defendant and that they had a consensual sexual relationship, the jury believed otherwise, as was the jury's privilege. McKeehan v. State, 274 Ga. App. 14, 616 S.E.2d 489 (2005).

Instruction on statute of limitations. — Trial counsel was ineffective in failing to request a jury instruction on the statute of limitation with regard to the child-cruelty charge because in the indictment, the state did not allege that the statute of limitation for child cruelty was tolled based on the victim being under the age of 16; thus, such proof was inadmissible at trial. Slack v. State, 354 Ga. App. 727, 841 S.E.2d 231 (2020).

Limitation period need not be alleged in indictment; Grizzard no longer applicable. — Because the seven-year period provided for by O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c) is a general statute of limitations governing a particular class of criminal cases — non-capital felonies committed against victims under 14 years of age — and not an exception to another statute of limitations, it need not be alleged in an indictment in order to be applicable to a particular prosecution. To the extent that the opinion in Grizzard v. State 258 Ga. App. 124, 572 S.E.2d 760, (2002), reaches a contrary conclusion, it is hereby disapproved. Tompkins v. State, 265 Ga. App. 760, 595 S.E.2d 599 (2004).

Date not specifically alleged in indictment. — In a child abuse case, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a special demurrer to establish the date of the crime as a material allegation of the indictment because the exact date was not a material allegation of the indictment and the evidence showed that the victim was beaten by the defendant on October 2, 2008, that the co-defendant beat the victim with belts on other occasions, and other evidence showed that the victim's scars were a year old or less, therefore, the state proved that child cruelty occurred within the statute of limitation. Moore v. State, 319 Ga. App. 766, 738 S.E.2d 348 (2013).

No extension of time. — Georgia Court of Appeals properly concluded that O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 did not give the state six additional months to obtain a second indictment against the appellee for felony vehicular homicide (FVH) after the state's unsuccessful attempt to appeal the dismissal of the FVH count of the first indictment as the appeal did not stay any time limit and the FVH count of the second indictment did not relate back to the date of the first indictment since only a misdemeanor was pending at that point. State v. Outen, 296 Ga. 40, 764 S.E.2d 848 (2014).

Dismissals due to failure to provide discovery. — Trial court's dismissal without prejudice as to 16 cases dismissed due to failure of the state to provide discovery was affirmed because the statute of limitations had not expired on the date of dismissals and the state could re-accuse those defendants. State v. Banks, 348 Ga. App. 876, 825 S.E.2d 399 (2019).

Decisions Under Former Code 1933, § 27-601 After Enactment of Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249

Editor's notes. — Although former Code 1933, § 27-601, was superseded and implicitly repealed in 1968 by former Code 1933, § 26-502, both sections are similar and some cases after 1968 cite both sections or § 27-601 only. Section 27-601 was explicitly repealed by amendment of the 1981 Code. Hence, cases decided after 1968 which cite § 27-601 only or with § 26-502 are included in a separate Code section.

Period of statute of limitations. — In criminal cases, the statute of limitations runs, subject to special circumstances, from the time of the criminal act to the time of indictment, not from the time of the act to time of the trial. Hall v. Hopper, 234 Ga. 625, 216 S.E.2d 839 (1975).

Burden on state to prove date or exception. — Burden is upon the state to prove that a crime occurred within the statute of limitations; or, if an exception to the statute is alleged, to prove that the case properly falls within the exception. State v. Tuzman, 145 Ga. App. 481, 243 S.E.2d 675 (1978), overruled on other grounds by State v. Outen, 289 Ga. 579, 714 S.E.2d 581 (2011).

Statute starts to run when crime known. — Key to determining when the statute of limitation begins to run is to find when the offender or offense becomes known. State v. Brannon, 154 Ga. App. 285, 267 S.E.2d 888 (1980).

Crime known by victim. — When the offense is known to the person injured by the offense, the statute begins to run.

State v. Brannon, 154 Ga. App. 285, 267 S.E.2d 888 (1980).

Crime known by prosecutor or interested party. — Statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of the offender until the offense is known to the prosecutor, or to someone interested in the prosecution, or to someone injured by the offense. State v. Brannon, 154 Ga. App. 285, 267 S.E.2d 888 (1980).

Procedures for hearing pleas on statute. — Pretrial hearing on a plea in bar is an appropriate procedure for handling the plea, or statute of limitation questions may properly be submitted to the jury for resolution. State v. Tuzman, 145 Ga. App. 481, 243 S.E.2d 675 (1978), overruled on other grounds by State v. Outen, 289 Ga. 579, 714 S.E.2d 581 (2011).

Nolle prosequi to indictment. — Fact that nolle prosequi has been entered to indictment before it has been submitted to the jury is not sufficient ground to sustain plea in bar to reindictment for same offense. Bowens v. State, 157 Ga. App. 334, 277 S.E.2d 326 (1981).

Decisions Under Former Code 1933, § 27-601 Before Enactment of Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249

Homicide indictment must allege date of death. — Unless the common-law rules are relaxed, an indictment for homicide must allege the date of death of the victim for the reason that it must appear from the indictment that the death occurred within a year and a day from the date of the infliction of the injury. Head v. State, 68 Ga. App. 759, 24 S.E.2d 145 (1943).

Date must be within year and day of wound. — If it does not appear that the death of the person charged to have been killed happened within a year and a day after the wound was given, the indictment will be deemed fatally defective since when death does not ensue within such time the law presumes that death proceeded from some other cause. Head v. State, 68 Ga. App. 759, 24 S.E.2d 145 (1943).

Indictment stating victim killed on date is sufficient. — If the indictment alleges that a person was killed on a date specified, then the indictment alleges that the person died on that date. Head v. State, 68 Ga. App. 759, 24 S.E.2d 145 (1943).

Applicability of statute to receiving stolen goods. — Indictment and guilty plea of the principal thieves is by itself a sufficient allegation that the statute of limitations is not operative in a prosecution for receiving stolen goods. Sampson v. State, 60 Ga. App. 512, 4 S.E.2d 290 (1939).

State not limited to proving one transaction in offense. — When the accusation charges the offense generally, the state need not rest the state's case on proof of a single transaction, but may prove or attempt to prove any number of transactions of the character charged in the accusation and included within the indictment's terms. Drummond v. State, 87 Ga. App. 105, 73 S.E.2d 43 (1952).

State need not prove exact date in accusation. — While an allegation of time is necessary to make a valid accusation, it is the general rule that proof that the crime was committed on the day alleged is not necessary. Love v. State, 70 Ga. App. 40, 27 S.E.2d 337 (1943).

State is not confined to the date alleged in the accusation in proving the crime, but may prove it as of any date within the period of limitations. Drummond v. State, 87 Ga. App. 105, 73 S.E.2d 43 (1952).

State may prove crime occurred any time within two years before indictment. — Although an indictment charged defendant with having seduced the prosecutrix on a specific date, under such an indictment the state could prove that the act of seduction occurred at any time within two years prior to the bringing of the indictment. Martin v. State, 53 Ga. App. 213, 185 S.E. 387 (1936).

On trial of a misdemeanor, the case may be made out by proof that the accused committed the act which constitutes the offense charged at any time within two years previous to the return of the indictment. Austin v. State, 104 Ga. App. 795,

No retrial for same misdemeanor. — When an indictment is for violation of a prohibition statute, a misdemeanor, the statute of limitations governing the case is two years, and the state is not confined to the day named in the indictment, but may prove the commission of the offense at any time within two years prior to the return of the indictment, and whether acquitted or convicted, the accused cannot be tried again for such an offense committed during the period of limitation governing the case on trial. Heard v. State, 79 Ga. App. 202, 53 S.E.2d 233 (1949).

If rape shown within seven years, charge citing unlimited time harmless. — While the period of limitation for rape is seven years, and the judge erred in charging the jury that if the offense was otherwise proved it would be sufficient to show that it was committed at any time before return of the indictment, since the evidence showed clearly and without dispute that if the defendant was guilty at all, the offense was committed within less than seven years before return of the indictment, the error was harmless. Pylant v. State, 191 Ga. 587, 13 S.E.2d 380 (1941).

Court need not instruct on two-year limitation if indictment and evidence shows within two years. — When indictment charges that on a date certain an offense was committed, and uncontradicted proof shows that the offense was then committed, and the date charged and proved was, mathematically, within the statute of limitations, and no other acts or dates were involved in the evidence, it was not error for the court to fail to instruct the jury that the jury must, to convict, find that the offense was committed within two years prior to the return of the indictment. Ridley v. State, 66 Ga. App. 658, 19 S.E.2d 51 (1942).

Decisions Under Former Penal Code 1910, § 30

Retrial justified if state did not prove indictment filed within statute. — When the indictment alleged a misdemeanor, and the state failed to carry the burden of proof that the indictment was found and filed in the superior court within two years after the commission of the offense charged, the court erred in overruling the motion for a new trial. Sirmans v. State, 46 Ga. App. 784, 169 S.E. 243 (1933).

Abandonment continues if no support. — Crime of abandonment begins and continues as long as there is a failure on the part of the parent to perform the parent's duty, and consequent dependence of the child. Lomax v. State, 44 Ga. App. 500, 162 S.E. 395 (1931).

Initial abandonment date irrelevant. — If it appears that an absent father has for two years immediately preceding the finding of the accusation against him failed and refused to provide for his dependent child, the time when the original separation took place is entirely immaterial; the continuing dependency of the child vitalizes the offense, and the fact that the absence, and even the dependency, began more than two years prior to the accusation, affords no ground for the interposition of the statute of limitations. Lomax v. State, 44 Ga. App. 500, 162 S.E. 395 (1931).

Father's temporary return does not prevent accusation after two years. — Abandonment is a continuing offense, at least until the defendant has once been convicted, and the statute of limitations will not relieve a father who abandoned his child and failed to supply the child's needs more than two years prior to the date of the accusation, but who before that date temporarily returned to the child and for a time performed his parental duties, but who subsequently and before the finding of the accusation again left the child and thereafter failed to supply the child's necessities. Lomax v. State, 44 Ga. App. 500, 162 S.E. 395 (1931).

Jury determination that defendant operated lottery justified. — Jury were amply authorized to find, even though the lottery tickets bore no date, that at the time of the arrest the defendant was engaged as a banker or headquarters person in the operation and maintenance of a lottery known as the numbers game. Christian v. State, 71 Ga. App. 350, 30 S.E.2d 832 (1944).

Exception to limitation must be alleged and proved. — In a criminal case, when an exception is relied upon to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations, the exception must be alleged and proved. Bazemore v. State, 34 Ga. App. 773, 131 S.E. 177 (1926).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Uniform traffic citation is valid as an accusation without an affidavit. — If a defendant in a traffic case charged by uniform traffic citation fails to appear for trial in a probate court, a warrant may be issued regardless of whether that citation contains an affidavit of the arresting officer. Secondly, the uniform traffic citation is valid as an accusation without an affidavit and therefore tolls the statute of limitations for the prosecution of traffic violations. 1990 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U90-2.

Prosecution of misdemeanors. — Prosecution for a violation of deposit account fraud, O.C.G.A. § 16-9-20, is commenced within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1 when a citation meets the requirements contained in O.C.G.A. § 15-10-202, including the signature of the judge or clerk of the magistrate court and personal service of the citation by a law enforcement officer. 1998 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 98-1.

Knowledge of victim as knowledge of state. — If a crime against the public involves also a wrong upon an individual, such as an assault or any other crime in which an individual, who is not a party to the crime suffers, the knowledge of the victim is the knowledge of the state, even though the victim does not represent the state in an official capacity. Womack v. State, 260 Ga. 21, 389 S.E.2d 240 (1990).

Knowledge placed at issue by O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2) is the knowledge of the state, which knowledge includes that imputed to the state through the knowledge not only of the prosecution, but also includes the knowledge of someone interested in the prosecution, or injured by the offense. Thus, the knowledge of a victim of a crime or of a law enforcement officer is imputed to the state. Duncan v. State, 193 Ga. App. 793, 389 S.E.2d 365 (1989); Greenhill v. State, 199 Ga. App. 218, 404 S.E.2d 577, cert. denied, 199 Ga. App. 906, 404 S.E.2d 557 (1991).

When the offense is known by an injured party, the statute begins to run. If a crime against the public involves also a wrong upon an individual, who is not a party to the crime, the knowledge of the victim is imputed to the state, even though the victim does not represent the state in an official capacity. Lowman v. State, 204 Ga. App. 655, 420 S.E.2d 94 (1992).

Defendant's convictions for theft by conversion and a RICO violation were reversed because the state failed to carry the state's burden to prove that the defendant was indicted on the counts within the applicable statutes of limitation as the evidence showed that the victims, and therefore the state, had actual knowledge of the offenses more than five years prior to the June 12, 2009 indictment, and the state produced no evidence or argument to the contrary. Jannuzzo v. State, 322 Ga. App. 760, 746 S.E.2d 238 (2013).

Trial court did not err in granting the plea in bar as the tolling provision found in O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2) did not apply given that the victim testified that the defendant told the victim the defendant's name and there was some indication that the victim had been given the defendant's telephone number and, thus, the victim's knowledge of the perpetrator was imputed to the state. State v. Watson, 340 Ga. App. 678, 798 S.E.2d 295 (2017).

Unknown criminal or crime tolls limitation. — Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2), the limitation period governing a prosecution does not include any period in which the person committing the crime is unknown or the crime is unknown. The state bears the burden of proving that an otherwise time-barred allegation falls within an exception to the statute of limitation. State v. Green, 350 Ga. App. 238, 828 S.E.2d 635 (2019).

Escape and concealment before indictment tolls statute. — If after the commission of the crime the offender is arrested, and then escapes and conceals oneself before indictment and avoids arrest, such concealment still will suspend the statute of limitations. Dennard v. State, 154 Ga. App. 283, 267 S.E.2d 886 (1980).

Paragraph (2) inapplicable to acts between 1968 and November 1, 1982. — Tolling provision of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2) does not apply to any acts occurring between 1968, when the statute provided for tolling only for periods when the person committing the crime was unknown and November 1, 1982, when the provision was reenacted to include the provision that the crime be unknown, because it was not in effect during this period. Adcock v. State, 194 Ga. App. 627, 391 S.E.2d 438, aff'd, 260 Ga. 302, 392 S.E.2d 886 (1990).

O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2) requires actual knowledge. — Constructive knowledge was not sufficient; thus, the state was not charged with knowledge of the identity of an offender who committed a crime simply because it lifted a fingerprint from the crime scene as the fingerprint was not matched to the defendant until several years later. Beasley v. State, 244 Ga. App. 836, 536 S.E.2d 825 (2000).

Prosecution barred after nolle prosequi entered and not thereafter vacated. — After the defendant's plea to various criminal charges was vacated because the defendant was found to have lacked the requisite mental capacity to have made a knowing and voluntary plea and the defendant was to be tried on those charges, it was found that the trial court lacked jurisdiction over other charges that had been nolle prossed by the state at the time of the plea entry and, accordingly, defendant could not be tried thereon; it was noted that the term of the trial court had expired, the order of nolle prosequi had not been vacated during that term, the limitations period had expired, and the state had not sought to refile those charges in a timely manner as provided for in O.C.G.A. §§ 17-3-2 and 17-3-3. Carlisle v. State, 277 Ga. 99, 586 S.E.2d 240 (2003).

State had no actual knowledge of criminal wrongdoing. — Superior court did not err in failing to grant the defendant's plea in bar, motion to dismiss, and general demurrer to prohibit prosecution of the non-murder counts in the indictment as barred by the applicable statutes of limitation because the record did not support a finding that the state had actual knowledge that there was criminal wrongdoing resulting in the fatality, much less that the defendant would be charged as the perpetrator of the victim's death, until the superseding medical examiner's report. Higgenbottom v. State, 290 Ga. 198, 719 S.E.2d 482 (2011).

Statute of limitations not tolled. — Trial court erred by denying the defendant's plea in bar because the statute of limitation was not tolled since the heirs knew as early as March 1, 1985, that the defendant in the judicial proceeding in the probate court knowingly and wilfully made false statements material to the issue before the probate court. Both the person committing the crime and the crime were known and therefore the period of limitations was not tolled. Lowman v. State, 204 Ga. App. 655, 420 S.E.2d 94 (1992).

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's plea in bar based on the defendant's statute of limitation argument regarding the non-murder offenses charged against the defendant as the state did not show that the applicable statutes of limitations were tolled because the state did not show that the defendant absconded from the state or hid to avoid arrest; indeed, the state admitted that the defendant was often a public resident of Georgia and that the defendant had been in jail in Georgia for part of what the state argued should have been the tolling period. Jenkins v. State, 278 Ga. 598, 604 S.E.2d 789 (2004).

Although an applicable statute of limitation was tolled in a case in which the person committing the crime was unknown, the trial court did not err in granting the defendant's plea in bar regarding the non-murder offenses charged against the defendant based on the defendant's argument that they were barred under the applicable statutes of limitations, as enough evidence existed to show that the defendant was the perpetrator of the non-murder crimes and, thus, those statutes of limitations were not tolled. Jenkins v. State, 278 Ga. 598, 604 S.E.2d 789 (2004).

State argued that O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c), the four-year statute of limitation for conspiracy to defraud the state, O.C.G.A. § 16-10-21, and conspiracy in restraint of free and open competition, O.C.G.A. § 16-10-22, was tolled under O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2) until the state learned of the conspiracy. The defendants' pleas in bar were properly granted as the evidence was sufficient to establish that a defendant's supervisor, a state employee, was aware of the crimes over four years before the defendants were indicted, and the supervisor's knowledge was imputed to the state. State v. Robins, 296 Ga. App. 437, 674 S.E.2d 615 (2009).

State argued that O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1, the statute of limitation for conspiracy charges, was tolled under O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2) until the state learned of the conspiracy after receiving an open records request. The defendants' pleas in bar were properly granted as the state had the burden to prove the date the state received the open records request, but failed to do so. State v. Robins, 296 Ga. App. 437, 674 S.E.2d 615 (2009).

Statute of limitations as to the charge brought against the defendant 17 years after the crime occurred was not tolled by the "person unknown" exception in O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2) because the evidence unequivocally showed that the state had actual knowledge of the defendant's identity as one of two suspects almost immediately after the crime occurred and was the prime suspect. State v. Boykin, 320 Ga. App. 9, 739 S.E.2d 16 (2013).

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's plea in bar, because the Department of Labor's system identified the defendant as having received unemployment benefits while working more than four years before the case was filed and the period was not tolled while the Department was awaiting the employer's response to its inquiry as to whether the defendant was working during the relevant time period. State v. Bragg, 332 Ga. App. 608, 774 S.E.2d 182 (2015).

Statutory period was not tolled under the person-unknown tolling provision because the defendant was identified as the primary suspect in the immediate aftermath of the attack. Beavers v. State, 345 Ga. App. 870, 815 S.E.2d 223 (2018).

"Person unknown" tolling period extends until state has probable cause to arrest. — Under O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2), the statute of limitations on the defendant's charges of burglary and possession of a knife, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c), was tolled with respect to an unknown person until the state possessed sufficient evidence to authorize the lawful arrest of that person; in other words, probable cause. Remand was required for consideration of whether tolling was proper under this new interpretation of § 17-3-2(2). Riley v. State, 305 Ga. 163, 824 S.E.2d 249 (2019).

Statute of limitation tolled. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a judgment of acquittal on the criminal charges against the defendant of concealing a death and theft by taking as the evidence showed that law enforcement officers were not aware for many months or even a couple of years that such crimes had been committed, and, thus, defendant did not show that defendant was indicted outside of the applicable statute of limitation, which only began to run at the time law enforcement officers were aware that those crimes had been committed. James v. State, 274 Ga. App. 498, 618 S.E.2d 133 (2005).

Because the statute of limitations as to two counts of theft by receiving was tolled during the period in which the person committing the crimes was unknown, and knowledge was not imputed to the state during this time, the prosecution of those counts was not time-barred. English v. State, 288 Ga. App. 436, 654 S.E.2d 150 (2007).

As the evidence established that a defendant's employer first learned of the defendant's alleged false expense reports and improper payments to the defendant's spouse in an audit conducted less than four years before the state indicted the defendant for felony theft, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c)'s four-year statute of limitations was tolled by O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2). The tolling period ended when the employer actually learned of the crime, not when the employer could have discovered the crime through the exercise of reasonable diligence. State v. Campbell, 295 Ga. App. 856, 673 S.E.2d 336 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0965, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 380 (Ga. 2009).

Although an indictment was not issued until fourteen years after the crimes of rape, kidnapping, and false imprisonment were committed, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2), the limitation periods for the crimes were tolled because the defendant's identity as the perpetrator was not known either to the victim or to the state until just before the indictment was issued. Scales v. State, 310 Ga. App. 48, 712 S.E.2d 555 (2011).

Since two clients did not discover the defendant's theft at the time the theft occurred, the statute of limitations was tolled until discovery and those counts were not barred by the limitations period. Pennington v. State, 323 Ga. App. 92, 746 S.E.2d 768 (2013).

Because the existence, execution, and timing of an agreement that allegedly violated the bribery statute were unknown to the state before February 2010, the statute of limitations for the bribery charge was tolled until it was discovered; and the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's plea in bar based on the expiration of the statute of limitation. Kenerly v. State, 325 Ga. App. 412, 750 S.E.2d 822 (2013).

Because the tolling exception to the statute of limitation applied to the failure to disclose a financial interest charge, and the prosecution for that charge was timely commenced after the crime was discovered, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's plea in bar based on the expiration of the statute of limitation. Kenerly v. State, 325 Ga. App. 412, 750 S.E.2d 822 (2013).

Limitations period properly tolled. — State met the state's burden of proving the applicability of the tolling statute, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2(2), because the state filed the state's indictment against the defendant less than four years after the victim had actual knowledge of the defendant's crime, insurance fraud in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c); the tolling period ended when an investigator obtained first-hand knowledge of the acts forming the crimes. Royal v. State, 314 Ga. App. 20, 723 S.E.2d 118 (2012), cert. denied, No. S12C1007, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 542 (Ga. 2012).

Extension of statute of limitations. — O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 provides an extension of the statute of limitations period and not an exception to the limitations period that must be pled in the indictment; indictment of the defendant over seven years after the commission of the crimes was proper since the charges had been nolle prossed after defendant's earlier convictions had been reversed on appeal. Sallie v. State, 276 Ga. 506, 578 S.E.2d 444, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 902, 124 S. Ct. 251, 157 L. Ed. 2d 185 (2003).

Defendant's argument that the trial court erred in determining that a superceding indictment served to toll the statutes of limitations as to Counts 2, 4, and 5 because the tolling language in those defectively referred back to Count 1, rather than the count in question, was meritless because the defendant was sufficiently apprised of all the essential elements of the charges when read as a whole, including the fact that the state intended to prove that the statutes of limitations for the crimes were tolled until 2005 pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 17-3-1(c.1) and 17-3-2(2) due to the fact that the defendant's identity was unknown until that time; the superfluous language "as to count one (1)" contained in Counts 2 through 6 was not enough to confuse the defendant about the offenses or the applicable exception to the statutes of limitations, which the state intended to prove at trial. Because the state was alleging an exception to the statutes of limitations, it was not barred from proceeding against the defendant under the superceding indictment. Leftwich v. State, 299 Ga. App. 392, 682 S.E.2d 614 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C2013, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 710 (Ga. 2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 1019, 130 S. Ct. 1913, 176 L. Ed. 2d 386 (2010).

Limitation not tolled during pendency of previous appeal. — Running of the period of limitation was not tolled during the pendency of a previous appeal in the case sub judice since the pendency of an appeal is not among the exceptions provided by O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2. Duncan v. State, 193 Ga. App. 793, 389 S.E.2d 365 (1989).

Applicability to RICO prosecutions. — Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-14-8(2), the five-year statute of limitation for criminal prosecution of RICO violations was tolled up to the time the victim and the state first learned of the predicate offenses. Adams v. State, 231 Ga. App. 279, 499 S.E.2d 105 (1998).

Construction with tolling provision of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.2. — Trial court erred by applying O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.2 to the RICO and theft charges against the defendants because it was necessary for the state to show that the victim was over 65 years of age, was the principal stockholder of the corporation, was the owner of the property allegedly stolen, not the corporation, to determine the date the crime became known to the victim. Harper v. State, 292 Ga. 557, 738 S.E.2d 584 (2013).

Editor's notes. — Although former Code 1933, § 27-601 was superseded and implicitly repealed in 1968 by former Code 1933, § 26-503 both sections are similar and some cases after 1968 cite both sections or § 27-601 only. Section 27-601 was explicitly repealed by enactment of the 1981 Code. Hence, cases decided after 1968 which cite § 27-601 only or with § 26-503 are included in a separate Code section.

Statute of limitations starts when crime known. — Key to determining when the statute of limitations begins to run is to find when the offender or offense became known. State v. Brannon, 154 Ga. App. 285, 267 S.E.2d 888 (1980).

Offense known by victim. — When the offense is known to the person injured by the offense, the statute begins to run. State v. Brannon, 154 Ga. App. 285, 267 S.E.2d 888 (1980).

Offense known by interested party. — Statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of the offender until the offender's offense is known to the prosecutor, or to someone interested in the prosecution, or to someone injured by the offense. State v. Brannon, 154 Ga. App. 285, 267 S.E.2d 888 (1980).

Statute of limitations ends at indictment, not trial. — In criminal cases, the statute of limitations runs, subject to special circumstances, from the time of the criminal act to the time of indictment, not from the time of the act or time of the trial. Hall v. Hopper, 234 Ga. 625, 216 S.E.2d 839 (1975).

State must prove crime within statute or exception. — Burden is upon the state to prove that a crime occurred within the statute of limitations; or, if an exception to the statute is alleged, to prove that the case properly falls within the exception. State v. Tuzman, 145 Ga. App. 481, 243 S.E.2d 675 (1978), overruled on other grounds by State v. Outen, 289 Ga. 579, 714 S.E.2d 581 (2011).

Procedure for hearing statute of limitations questions. — Pretrial hearing on a plea in bar is an appropriate procedure for handling the plea, or statute of limitation questions may properly be submitted to the jury for resolution. State v. Tuzman, 145 Ga. App. 481, 243 S.E.2d 675 (1978).

State need only show prosecutor unaware of crime. — When an offense is alleged to have been unknown, the state need only show that it was unknown to the prosecutor in order to make prima facie proof of that allegation. Taylor v. State, 174 Ga. 52, 162 S.E. 504 (1931), overruled on other grounds, Wood v. State, 219 Ga. 509, 134 S.E.2d 8 (1963).

Crime presumed within statute after grand jury presentment if no prosecutor. — In those cases when the offense is against society in general, and there is no prosecutor, the return by the grand jury of a presentment containing the exception will presumptively establish that the offense or offender was unknown until within two years before the indictment unless denied by evidence of the defendant. Walton v. State, 65 Ga. App. 124, 15 S.E.2d 455 (1941).

Unknown criminal or crime tolls limitation. — Prosecution of the defendant's case was not barred by the four year statute of limitations for computer theft because even if the National Guard were actually aware that the defendant entered the defendant's own grades, with or without authorization to do so; in October 2012, the undisputed evidence showed that the National Guard did not become aware that the grades entered were false until January 2015. Countryman v. State, No. A20A0556, 2020 Ga. App. LEXIS 360 (June 18, 2020).

Decisions Under Former Penal Code 1910, § 30

Statute does not run until proper parties aware of crime. — Statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of the offender until the offender's offense is known to the prosecutor, or to someone interested in the prosecution, or to someone injured by the offense. Kiles v. State, 48 Ga. App. 675, 173 S.E. 174 (1934).

Acquiring knowledge of bribe from official with special duty to report bribe. — State official, having refused offer of bribery, was in no way implicated criminally, or under any legal restraint from reporting the case or testifying therein. It was the official's duty in a private capacity, and in an official capacity, to report the offense; and, it being the official's duty, the official's knowledge was imputable to the state and was knowledge of the state in legal contemplation; and this knowledge of the state was a bar to the prosecution under a presentment dated seven years after the offense, a misdemeanor, was committed. Taylor v. State, 44 Ga. App. 64, 160 S.E. 667 (1931), cert. dismissed, 175 Ga. 642, 165 S.E. 733 (1932), overruled on other grounds, State v. Tyson, 544 S.E.2d 444 (Ga. 2001).

Burden on state to prove exception. — When, to relieve an accusation from the bar of the statute of limitations, a fact constituting an exception to the statute is alleged, the burden is on the state to prove the exception. Norman v. State, 44 Ga. App. 92, 160 S.E. 522 (1931).

In a criminal case, when an exception is relied upon to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations, it must be alleged and proved. Taylor v. State, 44 Ga. App. 64, 160 S.E. 667 (1931), cert. dismissed, 175 Ga. 642, 165 S.E. 733 (1932), overruled on other grounds, State v. Tyson, 273 Ga. 690, 544 S.E.2d 444 (Ga. 2001).

Burden to show company officers unaware of misdemeanor fraud. — When from an accusation charging a misdemeanor, alleged to have been committed by defrauding a certain corporation, it appeared that the offense was committed more than two years before the date of the accusation, and it was alleged that the offense was unknown to the corporation until within the two years preceding the date of the accusation, the burden was upon the state to show that the offense was unknown until within that period to any of those officers or agents of the corporation whose knowledge would be imputable to it. Norman v. State, 44 Ga. App. 92, 160 S.E. 522 (1931).

Shifting burden to defendant. — When it is stated that the indictment was not brought within the period of time allowed by law, because the offense or the offender was unknown, the state makes a prima facie case and shifts the burden of proof to the defendant when it is shown that the prosecutor or the party most interested did not know the offense, or the offender, as the case may be. Kiles v. State, 48 Ga. App. 675, 173 S.E. 174 (1934).

Defendant may rebut with notoriety of crime. — When an offense is alleged to have been unknown, the state need only show that it was unknown to the prosecutor in order to make prima facie proof of that allegation. The defendant may rebut such proof by proving that the transaction alleged in the indictment as a violation of the law was known, and the general notoriety may be sufficient proof to establish the fact that it was not unknown. Norman v. State, 44 Ga. App. 92, 160 S.E. 522 (1931).

Rebuttal with proof victim knew of crime. — Upon proof that the offense was unknown to the person aggrieved, the defendant may either show that it was known to the aggrieved person, or the defendant may show by evidence of common notoriety that the bar of the statute of limitations has attached. Kiles v. State, 48 Ga. App. 675, 173 S.E. 174 (1934).

When it is stated that the indictment was not brought within the period of time allowed because the offense or the offender was unknown, the state makes a prima facie case and shifts the burden of proof to the defendant, when it is shown that the prosecutor or the party most interested did not know the offense, or the offender, as the case may be. Upon such proof that the offense was unknown to the person aggrieved, the defendant may either show that the offense was known to the aggrieved person, or the defendant may show by evidence of common notoriety that the bar of the statute of limitations has attached. Taylor v. State, 44 Ga. App. 387, 161 S.E. 793 (1931).

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2012, p. 899, § 9-1(a)/HB 1176, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall become effective on July 1, 2012, and shall apply to offenses which occur on or after that date. Any offense occurring before July 1, 2012, shall be governed by the statute in effect at the time of such offense and shall be considered a prior conviction for the purpose of imposing a sentence that provides for a different penalty for a subsequent conviction for the same type of offense, of whatever degree or level, pursuant to this Act."

Tolling statute of limitations for offenses against minors. — O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1 evidences the legislature's intent that statutes of limitation for certain crimes against minors should be tolled by the infancy of the victim until such time as the victim is 16 years of age or until the violation is reported to law enforcement authorities, whichever is earlier. Johnston v. State, 213 Ga. App. 579, 445 S.E.2d 566 (1994).

In a case in which the defendant orally sodomized a child victim between 1992 and 1995 and the victim turned 16 during the 1997 trial, the evidence of aggravated child molestation fell within the applicable statute of limitation, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1(a) and (b). Brock v. State, 270 Ga. App. 250, 605 S.E.2d 907 (2004).

Trial counsel was ineffective in failing to request a jury instruction on the statute of limitation with regard to the child-cruelty charge because in the indictment the state did not allege that the statute of limitation for child cruelty was tolled based on the victim being under the age of 16; thus, such proof was inadmissible at trial. Slack v. State, 354 Ga. App. 727, 841 S.E.2d 231 (2020).

Seven-year limitations period for child molestation tolled until victim was 16 years of age. — Because O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1(a) provides that if a victim of child molestation is under 16 years of age on the date of the offense, then the period within which the prosecution must be commenced under O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1 shall not begin to run until the victim has reached the age of 16, the seven year statute of limitations period did not run until the victim turned 16 yeas of age, and an indictment against the defendant that was returned within that seven-year period was timely. Tompkins v. State, 265 Ga. App. 760, 595 S.E.2d 599 (2004).

Seven year statute of limitations. — Because an underage sexual abuse victim did not report molestation by the defendant until December 2001, the seven-year statute of limitations did not even begin to run until that time, pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 17-3-1(c) and 17-3-2.1(a); further, the defendant's own statement that the defendant only knew the victim for two or three years would have been sufficient to show that the molestation took place at some point within the limitations period. Porter

v. State, 270 Ga. App. 860, 608 S.E.2d 315 (2004).

Trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, on two counts of child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, was proper because the evidence of defendant's inappropriate sexual abuse of the victim, defendant's son, sufficiently placed the dates of the charged offenses within the seven-year limitations period of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-3-1(c) and 17-3-2.1(a)(5). Allen v. State, 275 Ga. App. 826, 622 S.E.2d 54 (2005).

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's plea in bar to dismiss the counts of an indictment charging the defendant with child molestation and aggravated child molestation to a child under the age of 14 because the state failed to indict the defendant within the limitation period, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c); because the state did not allege that the victim was under the age of 16, the tolling provision of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1 was not invoked. State v. Godfrey, 309 Ga. App. 234, 709 S.E.2d 572 (2011).

Trial court erred in dismissing the counts of the indictment charging the defendant with aggravated child molestation, child molestation, and statutory rape with a child under the age of 16 because the indictment sufficiently invoked the tolling provision of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1; pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c), the state had seven years to indict the defendant, and the defendant was indicted within seven years. State v. Godfrey, 309 Ga. App. 234, 709 S.E.2d 572 (2011).

Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1(a), the statutory period did not begin to run, at the earliest, until November 9, 2004, when one of the victims reached 16 years of age. Further, the counts alleged that the defendant committed the offenses against a child under the age of 16, which sufficiently invoked the statute of limitation tolling provision set forth in § 17-3-2.1. Mosby v. State, 319 Ga. App. 642, 738 S.E.2d 98 (2013).

When the defendant was convicted of aggravated child molestation and child molestation, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a motion to dismiss or plea in bar based on the statute of limitations as the indictment was timely because the indictment was filed within seven years of both the victim's 16th birthday and the date the victim reported the crimes to police. Leekomon v. State, 351 Ga. App. 836, 832 S.E.2d 437 (2019), cert. denied, No. S20C0283, 2020 Ga. LEXIS 412 (Ga. 2020).

Because the state indicted the defendant within seven years of both the victim's 16th birthday and the victim's outcry to police, the indictment was timely; thus, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the trial court's inaccurate jury charge regarding the statute of limitation, which failed to tell the jury that the victim's 16th birthday was a potentially relevant date for statute of limitation purposes because there was no reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have differed. Leekomon v. State, 351 Ga. App. 836, 832 S.E.2d 437 (2019), cert. denied, No. S20C0283, 2020 Ga. LEXIS 412 (Ga. 2020).

Indictment filed within 15 year statute of limitations. — With regard to a defendant's conviction for forcible rape of the defendant's child during the time the child was 13 through 15 years of age, the trial court correctly concluded that the state had 15 years from the victim's 16th birthday on January 12, 1995, or until January 12, 2010, to prosecute the case; therefore, no ex post facto violation occurred since the indictment was filed on January 8, 2008. Duke v. State, 298 Ga. App. 719, 681 S.E.2d 174 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1866, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 31 (Ga. 2010).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for rape of a minor relative, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground that the applicable statute of limitations ran on the rape offenses before the defendant was charged because in applying the 1996 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1 and the tolling provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1, the limitation period for the defendant's crime ran 15 years from December 13, 1995, when the crimes were first reported to authorities. Thus, because the state had until December 13, 2010 to indict the defendant, the January 7, 2008, indictment was timely and no ex post facto violation arose because the original seven-year limitation period had not expired at the time. Flournoy v. State, 299 Ga. App. 377, 682 S.E.2d 632 (2009).

Allegation of molestation of a child under 16 sufficient to invoke tolling. — Indictment alleging the molestation of a child under the age of 16 sufficiently invoked the statute of limitation tolling provision set forth in O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.1. Lyde v. State, 311 Ga. App. 512, 716 S.E.2d 572 (2011).

State had no actual knowledge of criminal wrongdoing. — Superior court did not err in failing to grant the defendant's plea in bar, motion to dismiss, and general demurrer to prohibit prosecution of the non-murder counts in the indictment as barred by the applicable statutes of limitation because the record did not support a finding that the state had actual knowledge that there was criminal wrongdoing resulting in the fatality, much less that the defendant would be charged as the perpetrator of the victim's death, until the superseding medical examiner's report. Higgenbottom v. State, 290 Ga. 198, 719 S.E.2d 482 (2011).

17-3-2.2. Statute of limitations.

In addition to any periods excluded pursuant to Code Section 17-3-2, if the victim is a person who is 65 years of age or older, the applicable period within which a prosecution must be commenced under Code Section 17-3-1 or other applicable statute shall not begin to run until the violation is reported to or discovered by a law enforcement agency, prosecuting attorney, or other governmental agency, whichever occurs earlier. Such law enforcement agency or other governmental agency shall promptly report such allegation to the appropriate prosecuting attorney. Except for prosecutions for crimes for which the law provides a statute of limitations longer than 15 years, prosecution shall not commence more than 15 years after the commission of the crime.

Age classification does not violate equal protection. — Supreme Court of Georgia holds that the age classification chosen in the tolling statute of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.2 does not violate the Equal Protection clauses of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II, and U.S. Const., amend. XIV. Harper v. State, 292 Ga. 557, 738 S.E.2d 584 (2013).

Tolling requires showing victim over 65. — To apply the tolling provision of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.2, it must be shown that the victim of the crime is a person over the age of 65. Harper v. State, 292 Ga. 557, 738 S.E.2d 584 (2013).

Application to corporations. — O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.2 offers no protection to the interest of any corporation or other entity which is not a person who is 65 years of age or older; that is in keeping with the principle that, generally, corporations are separate legal entities from the corporation's shareholders. Harper v. State, 292 Ga. 557, 738 S.E.2d 584 (2013).

Construction. — Trial court erred by applying O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.2 to the RICO and theft charges against the defendants because it was necessary for the state to show that the victim was over 65 years of age, who was the principal stockholder of the corporation, was the owner of the property allegedly stolen, not the corporation, to determine the date the crime became known to the victim. Harper v. State, 292 Ga. 557, 738 S.E.2d 584 (2013).

Statute of limitations not tolled. — Trial court correctly concluded that the four-year statute of limitation contained in O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(c) was applicable and that the state failed to plead and prove that the tolling provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.2 had been triggered. Consequently, the trial court did not err in granting defendants' plea in bar. State v. Mullins, 321 Ga. App. 671, 742 S.E.2d 490 (2013).

General Consideration

O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 intended to function solely as a savings provision, and has no application to a prosecution in which the nolle prosequi is entered over six months before the original statute of limitations expires. Kyles v. State, 254 Ga. 49, 326 S.E.2d 216 (1985).

O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 is a savings provision which extends the original statute of limitation for six months when a nolle prosequi is entered either after the original statute of limitation has expired, or within six months of the statute's expiration. State v. Davis, 201 Ga. App. 533, 411 S.E.2d 555 (1991).

When new indictment may be found after nolle prosequi entered. — Under O.C.G.A. §§ 17-3-3 and 17-8-3, a nolle prosequi may be entered by the prosecuting attorney with the consent of the court and in such a case a new indictment may be found within six months from the time the first indictment is quashed or the nolle prosequi entered. Not until the expiration of the six-month period within which a new indictment for the same offense may be preferred, or some other act or declaration which amounts to abandonment, is the prosecution at an end. Bowens v. State, 157 Ga. App. 334, 277 S.E.2d 326 (1981).

When the defendant's plea to various criminal charges was vacated because the defendant was found to have lacked the requisite mental capacity to have made a knowing and voluntary plea and the defendant was to be tried on those charges, it was found that the trial court lacked jurisdiction over other charges that had been nolle prossed by the state at the time of the plea entry and, accordingly, the defendant could not be tried thereon; it was noted that the term of the trial court had expired, the order of nolle prosequi had not been vacated during that term, the limitations period had expired, and the state had not sought to refile those charges in a timely manner as provided for in O.C.G.A. §§ 17-3-2 and 17-3-3. Carlisle v. State, 277 Ga. 99, 586 S.E.2d 240 (2003).

Because the state re-indicted the defendant within six months of the entry of the nolle prosequi pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's plea in bar. Hicks v. State, 315 Ga. App. 779, 728 S.E.2d 294 (2012).

Second indictment did not need to allege special exception to statute of limitations. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion in arrest of a judgment of conviction for burglary and theft by taking because the second indictment was filed within the six-month extension authorized by O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 and, therefore, did not need to allege an exception to the four-year statute of limitation. Johnson v. State, 335 Ga. App. 886, 782 S.E.2d 50 (2016).

First indictment, while perhaps not perfect in form, was not void; therefore, under O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3, the statute of limitation was properly extended by an additional six months after the first indictment was quashed, and the state did not need to allege any exception to the limitation period in the second indictment for burglary or theft. Johnson v. State, 335 Ga. App. 886, 782 S.E.2d 50 (2016).

Extension of statute of limitations. — O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 provides an extension of the statute of limitations period and not an exception to the statute that must be pled in the indictment; indictment of the defendant over seven years after the commission of the crimes was proper when the charges had been nolle prossed after the defendant's earlier convictions had been reversed on appeal. Sallie v. State, 276 Ga. 506, 578 S.E.2d 444, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 902, 124 S. Ct. 251, 157 L. Ed. 2d 185 (2003).

O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 specifies that the statute of limitations is extended six months if an indictment brought within the statute of limitations is later nolle prossed; in other words, the state may re-indict a defendant within six months after the first indictment is nolle prossed without running afoul of the statute of limitations even if the initial statute of limitations period has run. Sallie v. State, 276 Ga. 506, 578 S.E.2d 444, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 902, 124 S. Ct. 251, 157 L. Ed. 2d 185 (2003).

Trial court did not err by denying the defendant's special demurrer and motion to quash the second indictment on the same charges asserted in an earlier indictment, even though the second indictment was filed outside the statute of limitations period, because the first indictment was not void as a matter of law and, therefore. O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 applied. Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 15-12-60(d), even though the state nolle prossed the first indictment due to the incompetency of one grand juror and the trial court granted it, the first indictment itself was not rendered void. Batten v. State, 352 Ga. App. 629, 835 S.E.2d 686 (2019).

No extension of time. — O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 did not alter the running of the statute of limitation because the statute had no application to a prosecution in which the charge was dismissed over six months before the original statute of limitations expires. State v. Outen, 324 Ga. App. 457, 751 S.E.2d 109 (2013).

Georgia Court of Appeals properly concluded that O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 did not give the state six additional months to obtain a second indictment against the appellee for felony vehicular homicide (FVH) after the state's unsuccessful attempt to appeal the dismissal of the FVH count of the first indictment as the appeal did not stay any time limit and the FVH count of the second indictment did not relate back to the date of the first indictment since only a misdemeanor was pending at that point. State v. Outen, 296 Ga. 40, 764 S.E.2d 848 (2014).

Accusation amended before expiration of statute of limitations. — State could prosecute a count of the indictment under an amended accusation because the indictment was amended before the expiration of the two-year statute of limitation, O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(d). Sevostiyanova v. State, 313 Ga. App. 729, 722 S.E.2d 333, cert. denied, No. S12C0968, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 612 (Ga. 2012).

Section inapplicable when indictment within initial limitations period. — State did not need to take advantage of the statute of limitations extension provided by O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 because the second indictment was filed within the initial limitations period. Phillips v. State, 298 Ga. App. 520, 680 S.E.2d 424 (2009).

Ineffective counsel not established by consenting to nolle prosequi. — Defendant's trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by consenting to the state's nolle prosequi, rather than insisting that the trial court rule on the defendant's special demurrer, because the state could have tried the defendant on the second indictment even if the trial court had quashed the first indictment; by the statute's plain terms, the savings provision of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-3 applies when a timely indictment is quashed, as well as when a nolle prosequi is entered. Hicks v. State, 315 Ga. App. 779, 728 S.E.2d 294 (2012).

To justify conviction, state must prove commission of offense which is not barred by statute of limitations. McNabb v. State, 120 Ga. App. 577, 171 S.E.2d 655 (1969).

Usual statutory period extends from act to indictment. — In criminal cases, the statute of limitations runs, subject to special circumstances, from the time of the criminal act to the time of indictment, not from the time of the act to the time of the trial. Hall v. Hopper, 234 Ga. 625, 216 S.E.2d 839 (1975).

Except where nolle prosequi extends case six months. — When a nolle prosequi is entered, the case is still pending for a period of six months and then terminates. Courtenay v. Randolph, 125 Ga. App. 581, 188 S.E.2d 396 (1972).

Application to accusations. — Six-months limitation after the indictment was first quashed applies also to accusations. Jackson v. State, 140 Ga. App. 288, 231 S.E.2d 805 (1976).

To permit state to correct informal errors. — Plain language and purport of this section is to allow the state within a six-month period the right to correct an informal mistake in a criminal warrant or indictment or suffer a final foreclosure of the right to prosecute the alleged criminal misconduct if the criminal process is not properly reinstituted. Bailey v. General Apt. Co., 139 Ga. App. 713, 229 S.E.2d 493 (1976).

Statute usually starts to run when crime known. — Key to determining when the statute of limitations begins to run is to find when the offender or offense became known. State v. Brannon, 154 Ga. App. 285, 267 S.E.2d 888 (1980).

Nolle prosequi prima facie termination of prosecution and starts statute. — Filing of a nolle prosequi by the prosecutor and dismissal of the action by the trial court constitutes prima facie a termination of the prosecution in favor of the person arrested and is sufficient to commence the running of the statute of limitations subject to the right of the state to reinstate the action within the six-month period. Bailey v. General Apt. Co., 139 Ga. App. 713, 229 S.E.2d 493 (1976).

Nolle prosequi final if no reindictment. — If no further action is taken by the state to reinstate the indictment and toll the statute of limitations, the original nolle prosequi progresses from a prima facie termination of the action to an irrebuttable conclusion of finality. Bailey v. General Apt. Co., 139 Ga. App. 713, 229 S.E.2d 493 (1976).

Reindictment in half year continues prosecution. — If a nolle prosequi is entered by the solicitor (now district attorney) with the consent of the court, a new indictment may be found within six months from the time the first indictment is quashed or the nolle prosequi entered and its effect is not necessarily the ending of the prosecution, but the continuance of the prosecution. Not until the expiration of the six-months period within which a new indictment for the same offense may be preferred, or some other act or declaration which amounts to an abandonment, is the prosecution at an end. Earlywine v. Strickland, 145 Ga. App. 626, 244 S.E.2d 118 (1978).

Continuation of original prosecution. — If one arrested on a criminal warrant is discharged at the instance of the prosecution and without prejudice, the prosecution with due diligence and under the appropriate circumstances, may follow up with a new and valid prosecution, carrying the prosecution on in a court having jurisdiction to try the case upon the case's merits. This amounts to a continuation of the original prosecution. Bailey v. General Apt. Co., 139 Ga. App. 713, 229 S.E.2d 493 (1976).

Malicious prosecution suit brought within half year. — Net effect of the extension provision of the statute of limitation is to render dubious the practicality of bringing a malicious prosecution action within six months of the nolle prosequi of the basic criminal complaint at the instance of the state since during that six-month period the action is not yet final. Bailey v. General Apt. Co., 139 Ga. App. 713, 229 S.E.2d 493 (1976).

Five year delay between offense and new indictment. — Mere fact that some five years intervened between the dates of offenses first charged and the date when the offenses were included in a new accusation by virtue of law does not render the accusation subject to demurrer (now motion to dismiss) or motion to quash on the ground that such evidences a purpose of the prosecutor to place the defendant's character in issue or that such violates the due process clause of the United States Constitution or the State Constitution guarantees of a public and fair trial. Hodges v. State, 98 Ga. App. 97, 104 S.E.2d 704 (1958), rev'd on other grounds, 214 Ga. 614, 106 S.E.2d 795 (1959).

Nolle prosequied after five years does not bar accusation filed during year of crime. — When each count of an accusation alleges that the charge embodied therein had originally been filed in the form of an accusation in the county criminal court in the same year in which the cause of action arose, and that such original accusation had subsequently been nol prossed more than five years later, the allegations are sufficient to place the counts of the accusation within the purview of the law and neither of the counts nor the accusation as a whole is barred by the statute of limitations. Hodges v. State, 98 Ga. App. 97, 104 S.E.2d 704 (1958), rev'd on other grounds, 214 Ga. 614, 106 S.E.2d 14 (1959).

Origins of section. — Georgia Laws 1855-56, p. 233 dealt with statutes of limitations in both civil and criminal cases, but the words "suit" and "plaintiff" were used therein in reference to civil actions only, and the word "indictments" seems to have been used wherever criminal offenses are dealt with; there is accordingly no intrinsic evidence that the final sentence of this section which first appeared in the Code of 1861, has its origin with the Act of 1855-56, but neither is there any positive indication that the original codifiers did not have it in mind when the original codifiers wrote the provision in the criminal limitations statute. Alewine v. State, 103 Ga. App. 120, 118 S.E.2d 499 (1961).

Section applies to accusations as well as indictments. Hodges v. State, 214 Ga. 614, 106 S.E.2d 795 (1959).

Section is a statute of limitations. Alewine v. State, 103 Ga. App. 120, 118 S.E.2d 499 (1961).

Extension of statute of limitations. — This section extends the limitations fixed by other provisions of the law so that if the first indictment is returned within the time limited and thereafter quashed or a nolle prosequi entered for some informality and a second indictment is taken out within six months after such dismissal, the second indictment will be good although the offense charged would otherwise have been barred by the statute of limitations. Alewine v. State, 103 Ga. App. 120, 118 S.E.2d 499 (1961).

If statute of limitations ran out at time of new indictment. — If a defendant is indicted and the indictment subsequently quashed or a nolle prosequi entered because of some informality therein, the state, if the state desires again to charge the defendant with the same offense, must do so within a period of six months after the dismissal of the first indictment, and this is so regardless of whether or not the bar of the statute of limitations as applied to criminal offenses generally has run at the time of the new indictment. Alewine v. State, 103 Ga. App. 120, 118 S.E.2d 499 (1961).

Second indictment showing first one nol prossed only for informality. — In order to prevent an indictment or accusation which was returned more than two years after the commission of a known misdemeanor offense from being barred by the statute of limitations when it is returned within six months after the nolle prosequi of a former indictment, the second indictment or accusation must show that the former was not nol prossed because of a fatal defect, or because it was void, but only because of an "informality" or some other good reason which did not render it void. Hodges v. State, 214 Ga. 614, 106 S.E.2d 795 (1959).

Statute tolled if accused flees. — After an indictment or accusation has been quashed or a nolle prosequi entered for informality (assuming that the original indictment does charge an offense and is not void on its face) then the prosecution must be renewed within a six-month period unless some other reason to toll the period of limitation is in existence, such as the fact that the offender absconds from the state or so conceals so that the offender cannot be arrested. Alewine v. State, 103 Ga. App. 120, 118 S.E.2d 499 (1961).

Difficulty in reconvening grand jury not grounds for interpreting section. — Mere fact that the grand jury in session at the time nolle prosequi was entered was disqualified from returning another indictment for technical reasons as a result of which the murder indictment was quashed and that it would have been necessary for the trial court to call a special session of the grand jury in order to obtain a new indictment within the six-month period, was no reason for giving the statute a different meaning than that attributable to it by its plain language and former interpretation. Alewine v. State, 103 Ga. App. 120, 118 S.E.2d 499 (1961).

Accusation showing statute elapsed and no exceptions. — Since time is limited for proffering an accusation, it is essential to the validity of the accusation that the time alleged should appear to be within the maximum allotted and if the offense appears on the face of the accusation to be barred by the statute of limitations, and no exception is alleged to toll the statute, although no demurrer (now motion to dismiss) was filed and the motion in arrest of judgment was filed after the trial during the trial term, the failure to allege such exception is fatal and the motion in arrest should be sustained. Love v. State, 70 Ga. App. 40, 27 S.E.2d 337 (1943).

Court's authority. — Court has no authority, 15 months after nolle prosequi order is entered, to vacate the order of nolle prosequi and to reinstate the indictment as such court action is clearly in contravention of the provision of this section. Jacobs v. State, 95 Ga. App. 155, 97 S.E.2d 528 (1957).

Decisions Under Former Penal Code 1910, § 30

Prosecutor can remedy minor defect within time limits. — When the prosecutor has been defeated by some matter not affecting the merits, some defect or informality which the prosecutor can remedy or avoid by new process, the statute will not prevent the prosecutor from so doing, provided the prosecutor follows it within the time allowed by law. Heaton v. State, 40 Ga. App. 87, 149 S.E. 62 (1929).

Merely voidable indictment tolls statute if timely. — When the original indictment alleged that the indictment was found within the time limit after the offense became known, and the indictment was quashed for a mere informality, and therefore was not void, but merely voidable, the indictment did toll the statute. Heaton v. State, 40 Ga. App. 87, 149 S.E. 62 (1929).

GENERAL PROVISIONS

U.S. Code. — Disposition of criminal cases, 18 U.S.C. § 3165.

17-4-1. Actions constituting an arrest.

An actual touching of a person with a hand is not essential to constitute a valid arrest. If the person voluntarily submits to being considered under arrest or yields on condition of being allowed his freedom of locomotion, under the discretion of the officer, the arrest is complete.

Defendant not under arrest for constitutional purposes. — Miranda played no part in the admissibility of field sobriety test results, notwithstanding the definition of arrest contained in O.C.G.A. § 17-4-1, as the defendant was not under arrest for constitutional purposes when the defendant failed to show any restraints comparable to those associated with formal arrest, the defendant's statement that the defendant knew the officer was going to "take her in" demonstrated the defendant's apprehension, not the fact of an arrest, the defendant was not informed that the defendant's detention would not be temporary, and the defendant's performance on the field sobriety tests did not support a claim that the defendant was exposed to custodial interrogation at the scene. Evans v. State, 267 Ga. App. 706, 600 S.E.2d 671 (2004).

Arrest occurs with any restraint of liberty. — Arrest is accomplished whenever the liberty of a person to come and go as the person pleases is restrained, no matter how slight such restraint may be. Clements v. State, 226 Ga. 66, 172 S.E.2d 600 (1970); United States v. Jones, 352 F. Supp. 369 (S.D. Ga. 1972), aff'd, 481 F.2d 1402 (5th Cir. 1973); Department of Natural Resources v. Joyner, 143 Ga. App. 868, 240 S.E.2d 114 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 241 Ga. 390, 245 S.E.2d 644 (1978); Bowers v. State, 151 Ga. App. 46, 258 S.E.2d 623 (1979); Collier v. State, 244 Ga. 553, 261 S.E. 364 (1979); Tolbert v. Hicks, 158 Ga. App. 642, 281 S.E.2d 368 (1981); Paxton v. State, 160 Ga. App. 19, 285 S.E.2d 741 (1981); Lee v. State, 222 Ga. App. 389, 474 S.E.2d 281 (1996).

Whenever a police officer accosts an individual and restrains the individual's freedom to walk away, the official has "seized" that person. Rogers v. State, 131 Ga. App. 136, 205 S.E.2d 901 (1974).

Arrest is complete whenever the liberty of a person to come and go as the person pleases is restrained, even though the arresting officer does not expressly inform the person that the person is under arrest. Williams v. State, 166 Ga. App. 798, 305 S.E.2d 489 (1983).

Advising that a person was under arrest without proceeding with any questioning or investigation, but while holding the person, is a restraint of freedom to leave constituting an arrest. McKenzie v. State, 208 Ga. App. 683, 431 S.E.2d 715 (1993).

Defendant may complete arrest by accepting other's control. — If an arresting officer, known to be such, takes charge of a person who reasonably thinks, from the conduct of the officer, that the person is under arrest, an arrest is made. Courtoy v. Dozier, 20 Ga. 369 (1856); Hines v. Adams, 27 Ga. App. 157, 107 S.E. 618 (1921).

If the person arrested understands that the person is in the power of the one arresting and submits in consequence thereof, it is sufficient to constitute an arrest. United States v. Jones, 352 F. Supp. 369 (S.D. Ga. 1972), aff'd, 481 F.2d 1402 (5th Cir. 1973).

When no force used. — Defendant may voluntarily submit to being considered under arrest without any actual touching or show of force, and the arrest is complete. Clements v. State, 226 Ga. 66, 172 S.E.2d 600 (1970); Department of Natural Resources v. Joyner, 143 Ga. App. 868, 240 S.E.2d 114 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 241 Ga. 390, 245 S.E.2d 644 (1978); Bowers v. State, 151 Ga. App. 46, 258 S.E.2d 623 (1979), aff'd, 245 Ga. 367, 265 S.E.2d 57 (1980).

Informing defendant of arrest. — Even if the officer does not expressly inform the defendant that the defendant is under arrest nor state to the defendant the specific charges against the defendant, a defendant can recognize that the defendant is not free to depart the scene and is consequently in custodia legis. Rogers v. State, 131 Ga. App. 136, 205 S.E.2d 901 (1974).

Removal of and search of defendant at gunpoint. — Arrest is complete from the moment police officers approach the automobile which the defendant is driving and cause the defendant to alight therefrom under force and restraint of drawn guns and subject the defendant to a search even if the officer testifies that the arrest was made after the search. Clements v. State, 226 Ga. 66, 172 S.E.2d 600 (1970).

Formal arrest. — Formal arrest or statement to that effect is not a necessary element of an arrest. An arrest is accomplished whenever the liberty of another to come and go as the person pleases is restrained, no matter how slight such restraint may be. Tolbert v. Hicks, 158 Ga. App. 642, 281 S.E.2d 368 (1981).

Arrest occurs following consensual search when incriminating evidence found. — When a person granted a police officer's request to enter and search the person's home and the search revealed certain evidence relating to a recent offense, at which point the officer officially placed the person under arrest, the arrest occurred upon the discovery of the evidence and was lawful, despite the officer's testimony at a suppression hearing that the officer probably would not have allowed the defendant to have left the premises as the officer conducted the search, and when there was no evidence of the officer exercising, verbally or physically, any control over the defendant's freedom, or of the defendant submitting to being under arrest, until the search revealed the evidence. Dawson v. State, 166 Ga. App. 199, 303 S.E.2d 532 (1983).

Handcuffed prisoner was "under arrest." — Defendant, who was handcuffed and transported to the county jail in a sheriff's vehicle, led handcuffed into the jail, and left there behind locked doors, was "under arrest". State v. Nelson, 261 Ga. 246, 404 S.E.2d 112 (1991).

State, 136 Ga. App. 149, 221 S.E.2d 63 (1975); Rose v. State, 249 Ga. 628, 292 S.E.2d 678 (1982); City of Marietta v. Kelly, 175 Ga. App. 416, 334 S.E.2d 6 (1985).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Military immunity requires immediate assertion to satisfy purpose. — Legislative purpose of the immunity statute is to prevent civil interference with the military on active duty in the performance of duty. This purpose will be served only if the immunity is asserted at the earliest opportunity. The purpose is defeated if the militiaman allows oneself to be deterred from the performance of the militiaman's duty and then raises the privilege for the sole purpose of avoiding the criminal sanctions which the militiaman faces. Sanders v. City of Columbus, 140 Ga. App. 441, 231 S.E.2d 473 (1976).

Statute appears to be a limit upon the police power to momentarily detain. Sanders v. City of Columbus, 140 Ga. App. 441, 231 S.E.2d 473 (1976).

(C) The officer has probable cause to believe that an act of family violence, as defined in Code Section 19-13-1, has been committed;

(D) The officer has probable cause to believe that the offender has violated a criminal family violence order, as defined in Code Section 16-5-95; provided, however, that such officer shall not have any prior or current familial relationship with the alleged victim or the offender;

(E) The officer has probable cause to believe that an offense involving physical abuse has been committed against a vulnerable adult, who shall be for the purposes of this subsection a person 18 years old or older who is unable to protect himself or herself from physical or mental abuse because of a physical or mental impairment; or

(F) For other cause there is likely to be failure of justice for want of a judicial officer to issue a warrant.

(b) Sheriffs and peace officers who are appointed or employed in conformity with Chapter 8 of Title 35 may use deadly force to apprehend a suspected felon only when the officer reasonably believes that the suspect possesses a deadly weapon or any object, device, or instrument which, when used offensively against a person, is likely to or actually does result in serious bodily injury; when the officer reasonably believes that the suspect poses an immediate threat of physical violence to the officer or others; or when there is probable cause to believe that the suspect has committed a crime involving the infliction or threatened infliction of serious physical harm. Nothing in this Code section shall be construed so as to restrict such sheriffs or peace officers from the use of such reasonable nondeadly force as may be necessary to apprehend and arrest a suspected felon or misdemeanant.

(c) Nothing in this Code section shall be construed so as to restrict the use of deadly force by employees of state and county correctional institutions, jails, and other places of lawful confinement or by peace officers of any agency in the State of Georgia when reasonably necessary to prevent escapes or apprehend escapees from such institutions.

(d) No law enforcement agency of this state or of any political subdivision of this state shall adopt or promulgate any rule, regulation, or policy which prohibits a peace officer from using that degree of force to apprehend a suspected felon which is allowed by the statutory and case law of this state.

(e) Each peace officer shall be provided with a copy of this Code section. Training regarding elder abuse, abuse of vulnerable adults, and the requirements of this Code section should be offered as part of at least one in-service training program each year conducted by or on behalf of each law enforcement department and agency in this state.

(f) A nuclear power facility security officer, including a contract security officer, employed by a federally licensed nuclear power facility or licensee thereof for the purpose of securing that facility shall have the authority to:

(1) Threaten or use force against another in defense of a federally licensed nuclear power facility and the persons therein as provided for under Code Sections 16-3-21 and 16-3-23;

(2) Search any person on the premises of the nuclear power facility or the properties adjacent to the facility if the facility is under imminent threat or danger pursuant to a written agreement entered into with the local enforcement agency having jurisdiction over the facility for the purpose of determining if such person possesses unauthorized weapons, explosives, or other similarly prohibited material; provided, however, that if such person objects to any search, he or she shall be detained as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection or shall be required to immediately vacate the premises. Any person refusing to submit to a search and refusing to vacate the premises of a facility upon the request of a security officer as provided for in this Code section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and

(3) In accordance with a nuclear security plan approved by the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission or other federal agency authorized to regulate nuclear facility security, detain any person located on the premises of a nuclear power facility or on the properties adjacent thereto if the facility is under imminent threat or danger pursuant to a written agreement entered into with the local law enforcement agency having jurisdiction over the facility, where there is reasonable suspicion to believe that such person poses a threat to the security of the nuclear power facility, regardless of whether such prohibited act occurred in the officer's presence. In the event of such detention, the law enforcement agency having jurisdiction over the facility shall be immediately contacted. The detention shall not exceed the amount of time reasonably necessary to allow for law enforcement officers to arrive at the facility.

General Consideration

Section codifies common-law rule. — This section is a codification of the common-law rule of arrest with perhaps a slight enlargement of the power of arrest. Though at common law an officer might arrest for a breach of peace committed in the officer's presence without a warrant, the arrest must have been made within a reasonable time after the commission of the offense, that is, the officer must immediately set about the arrest, and follow up the effort until the arrest is made. There must be a continued pursuit and no cessation of acts tending toward the arrest from the time of the commission of the offense until the apprehension of the offender. Johnson v. Mayor of Americus, 46 Ga. 80 (1872); Yates v. State, 127 Ga. 813, 56 S.E. 1017, 9 Ann. Cas. 620 (1907).

Applicability. — O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 applies to arrests for misdemeanors as well as for felonies. King v. State, 161 Ga. App. 382, 288 S.E.2d 644 (1982).

Defendant's argument that the defendant's motion to dismiss the citation the police officer issued to defendant for hit and run should have been dismissed because the officer did not see the defendant commit the offense had to be rejected as the statute the defendant cited for that proposition, O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20(a), only applied when a custodial arrest was involved and no custodial arrest was involved in the defendant's case. Davis v. State, 261 Ga. App. 539, 583 S.E.2d 214 (2003).

Official immunity found. — Summary judgment in favor of police personnel was proper in an action against a police chief and officers for false imprisonment under O.C.G.A. § 51-7-20 because the record did not show any support for the plaintiff's contentions that the actions of the police officers in arresting the plaintiff, following an altercation and in the absence of exigent circumstances, demonstrated the requisite malice to overcome official immunity under state law. Plaintiff's unsupported allegations of conspiracy to frame the plaintiff for an altercation are insufficient to pierce the protections of official immunity on these claims. Goree v. City of Atlanta, 276 Fed. Appx. 919 (11th Cir. 2008) (Unpublished).

In an arrest for driving under the influence, the arrestee's false imprisonment claim failed because the officer was entitled to official immunity since the officer was performing a discretionary act when the officer arrested the arrestee; the arrestee's general allegations of malice did not overcome official immunity. Bannister v. Conway, No. 1:12-CV-1487-TWT, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152569 (N.D. Ga. Oct. 23, 2013).

Probable cause necessary. — Warrantless arrest may be made under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 only when the probable cause necessary for a constitutional arrest under the federal constitution is present. Glean v. State, 268 Ga. 260, 486 S.E.2d 172 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1079, 118 S. Ct. 860, 139 L. Ed. 2d 758 (1998).

Construed with § 17-4-23. — O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23 gives a police officer the option to issue a citation, but does not restrict the power given to police in O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 to make custodial arrests for crimes committed in the officers' presence. Brock v. State, 196 Ga. App. 605, 396 S.E.2d 785 (1990); Polk v. State, 200 Ga. App. 17, 406 S.E.2d 548 (1991); Edwards v. State, 224 Ga. App. 332, 480 S.E.2d 246 (1997).

Construed with § 40-13-2.1. — Having elected to issue a citation, a deputy cannot make a custodial arrest of a driver when the driver refuses to sign the citation. Instead, a deputy shall follow the procedures set forth in O.C.G.A. § 40-13-2.1(a). The language of that statute makes clear that once a deputy or officer issues a citation, the deputy or officer is obligated to follow the procedures set forth in the statute. State v. Torres, 290 Ga. App. 804, 660 S.E.2d 763 (2008).

Conflict with other statutes and administrative rules. — Neither the self-defense statute nor the arrest statute automatically prohibits the discharge of a firearm if the lives of innocent people may be in danger, and when a mandatory prohibition against such an action in a police department work rule conflicted with these statutes it was invalid and could not form the basis for a police officer's suspension. Allen v. City of Atlanta, 235 Ga. App. 516, 510 S.E.2d 64 (1998).

Crimes against individual or society require warrant. — It is equally as necessary to get a warrant when an offense is committed against an individual as it is when the offense is against society as a whole. Gordy v. State, 93 Ga. App. 743, 92 S.E.2d 737 (1956).

Arrest occurs with any restraint of liberty. — When a person is in custody and is not free to leave the office of the law enforcement officer, the person is under arrest. Robinson v. State, 166 Ga. App. 741, 305 S.E.2d 381 (1983).

False imprisonment arrest. — In a false imprisonment case, the existence of probable cause standing alone is not a complete defense because, even if probable cause to believe a crime has been committed exists, a warrantless arrest would still be illegal unless the arrest was accomplished pursuant to one of the "exigent circumstances" applicable to law enforcement officers enumerated in O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 or applicable to private persons as set forth in O.C.G.A. § 17-4-60. Arbee v. Collins, 219 Ga. App. 63, 463 S.E.2d 922 (1995).

Summary judgment was improperly granted in favor of the employer based on the employer procuring the employee's false imprisonment when the employee was arrested by a detective because, although two of the loss prevention officers both averred that neither of the officers encouraged or directed the police to arrest the employee, the officers told a third loss prevention officer that the officers were going to obtain the employee's arrest based on a videotape; there was a conflict in the evidence as to whether the employer directly or indirectly caused the police to arrest the employee; and a question of fact remained regarding whether the detective had probable cause to believe that the employee was involved in the theft or lied when denying being so involved. Smith v. Wal-Mart Stores East, LP, 330 Ga. App. 340, 765 S.E.2d 518 (2014).

Summary judgment was improperly granted to the employer because a question of fact remained as to whether the employer procured the employee's false imprisonment as there was a conflict in the evidence about whether the employer caused the detective to arrest the employee as the evidence did not show as a matter of law that the police made a sufficiently independent investigation of the theft; and because a question of fact remained as to whether the detective had probable cause to arrest the employee in connection with the theft as there was a dispute about whether the employee actually saw a person take the electronics out of a case and failed to report it, giving rise to a reasonable suspicion that the employee was working with the thieves. Smith v. Wal-Mart Stores East, LP, 330 Ga. App. 340, 765 S.E.2d 518 (2014).

Neutral magistrate determination required before warrant for seizure of pornography. — Constitution at a minimum requires the imposition of a neutral, detached magistrate in the procedure to make an independent judicial determination of probable cause prior to issuing an arrest warrant or some other warrant authorizing the seizure of allegedly obscene material to be used as evidence. Penthouse Int'l, Ltd. v. McAuliffe, 610 F.2d 1353 (5th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 447 U.S. 931, 100 S. Ct. 3031, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1131 (1980).

Unreasonable attempt to arrest with unlicensed semi-automatic weapon. — There was no evidence that the defendant, who murdered the victim with a rifle, was attempting to effect a valid citizen's arrest and, hence, the defendant was not entitled to an involuntary manslaughter charge. It was not reasonable for the defendant to attempt an arrest with a semi-automatic weapon which the defendant was not licensed to carry as deadly force in effecting an arrest is limited to self-defense or to a situation in which it is necessary to prevent a forcible felony. Hayes v. State, 261 Ga. 439, 405 S.E.2d 660 (1991).

Off-duty officer employed as security guard. — There was evidence that the off-duty officer's duties as a security guard included arresting disorderly persons to remove the persons from the premises, so it cannot be said as a matter of law that the arrest was lawful under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20(a). Rather, whether the arrest was lawful as one made by a police officer is a jury question. Smith v. Holeman, 212 Ga. App. 158, 441 S.E.2d 487 (1994).

"Deadly force" instruction given when police prosecuted. — In a prosecution against police officers for manslaughter, arising out of the shooting of the victim in a parking lot following a report that the victim had threatened someone with a knife, the justification charge given was wholly inadequate, as it applied to ordinary citizens, not to law enforcement officers acting in the line of duty, who are allowed to use deadly force on the reasonable belief that the suspect possesses a deadly weapon. Because this omission was harmful as a matter of law, the case was reversed, notwithstanding the fact that the charge was verbally requested after the jury began deliberating. Robinson v. State, 221 Ga. App. 865, 473 S.E.2d 519 (1996).

Use of deadly force not justified if fleeing suspect wanted only for traffic offense. — Deputy sheriff who rammed a fleeing suspect's car causing injury to the suspect was not entitled to qualified immunity from suit alleging a violation of the Fourth Amendment right to be free from unlawful seizure because a reasonable officer would have known that a vehicle could be used to apply deadly force to effect a seizure, and that deadly force could not constitutionally be used to apprehend a fleeing suspect wanted only for speeding. Harris v. Coweta County, 406 F.3d 1307 (11th Cir. 2005).

Arrest of passenger on warrant authorized stop of vehicle. — Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of drugs and a handgun found during the warrantless search of the defendant's vehicle as the arrest of the defendant's passenger on an outstanding warrant authorized the stop of the defendant's vehicle and the mobility of the car, coupled with the existence of probable cause to believe the car contained marijuana, based on the officer smelling the marijuana upon approaching the vehicle, authorized the search. Somesso v. State, 288 Ga. App. 291, 653 S.E.2d 855 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0505, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 281 (Ga. 2008).

Officer may arrest a suspect without an arrest warrant if an offense has been committed in the officer's presence and while an officer generally must have a search warrant or consent to enter a home to make an arrest, an officer can enter a home to arrest a suspect when the officer has followed the suspect there in "hot pursuit." A suspect may not defeat an arrest which has been set in motion in a public place … by the expedient of escaping to a private place. For Fourth Amendment purposes, one who is in the threshold of one's dwelling is in a public place and not within the dwelling. Lawson v. State, 299 Ga. App. 865, 684 S.E.2d 1 (2009), cert. dismissed, No. S10C0118, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 195 (Ga. 2010), cert. denied, No. S10C0117, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 206 (Ga. 2010).

No grounds for challenge to arrest warrant. — Defendant failed to show trial counsel's performance was deficient for failing to challenge the arrest warrant on the basis that the warrant was not properly sworn because the record showed that the defendant was taken into custody and arrested before the warrant was issued and there was a valid, warrantless arrest of the defendant, making the later-issued warrant superfluous; thus, any defect in the arrest warrant was moot, and a challenge to the arrest warrant would have been futile. Williams v. State, 326 Ga. App. 784, 757 S.E.2d 448 (2014).

Trial court required to address tainted fruit rule. — Trial court erred by granting the defendant's motion to suppress after concluding that the state failed to prove the legality of the defendant's arrest for failing to tender the open container ordinance as the trial court was required to go on to address and rule on whether the drugs discovered during the subsequent search of the backpack in the vehicle constituted tainted fruit of the arrest based on the officers' testimony regarding the smell of marijuana. State v. Alford, 347 Ga. App. 208, 818 S.E.2d 668 (2018).

Grounds for Warrantless Arrest

1. In General

Three exceptions to having warrant for any public officer. — Only three exceptions to the general rule that the law requires a warrant in order to render an arrest legal, whether the arrest be made by a police officer or any public officer, are recognized by this section. Thomas v. State, 91 Ga. 204, 18 S.E. 305 (1892); Graham v. State, 143 Ga. 440, 85 S.E. 328, 1917A Ann. Cas. 595 (1915).

Arrest illegal if not under three exceptions. — Unless an arrest without a warrant falls within the three exceptions specified in this section, it is an illegal arrest. Conoly v. Imperial Tobacco Co., 63 Ga. App. 880, 12 S.E.2d 398 (1940).

When warrantless arrest permitted. — An arrest for a crime may be made by an officer without a warrant in three instances only: (1) if the offense is committed in the official's presence; or (2) the offender is endeavoring to escape; or (3) for other cause there is likely to be a failure of justice for want of an officer to issue a warrant. Napier v. State, 200 Ga. 626, 38 S.E.2d 269 (1946); Finch v. State, 101 Ga. App. 73, 112 S.E.2d 824 (1960); Puckett v. State, 239 Ga. App. 582, 521 S.E.2d 634 (1999).

Warrantless arrest is not violative of O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 if the officer had probable cause to make an arrest, i.e., if the officer knew facts and circumstances, based on reasonably trustworthy information, sufficient to warrant a prudent man to believe that the defendant committed an offense. Ellis v. State, 164 Ga. App. 366, 296 S.E.2d 726 (1982), appeal dismissed, 462 U.S. 1113, 103 S. Ct. 3079, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1344, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1119, 103 S. Ct. 3087, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1348 (1983); State v. Thurmond, 203 Ga. App. 230, 416 S.E.2d 529, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 907, 416 S.E.2d 529 (1992).

If a police officer has probable cause to believe that the defendant made terroristic threats, the officer's arrest and pat-down search of the defendant were lawful. Medlin v. State, 168 Ga. App. 551, 309 S.E.2d 639 (1983).

Warrantless arrest of the defendant for a domestic violence act of assault, given the information provided by the defendant's girlfriend, the girlfriend's obvious injuries, and the defendant's attempt to flee, was supported by sufficient probable cause and thus upheld on appeal. Rivers v. State, 287 Ga. App. 632, 653 S.E.2d 78 (2007).

Arresting officer's knowledge. — It is the facts and circumstances existing within the knowledge of the arresting officer at the moment arrest is made which are controlling. Barnett v. State, 204 Ga. App. 491, 420 S.E.2d 43 (1992).

Felony charges from foreign state. — General Assembly by the enactment of Ga. L. 1951, p. 726, § 14 (see O.C.G.A. 17-13-34), provided that an arrest without a warrant might be lawfully made by any peace officer upon reasonable information that the accused stands charged in the courts of a state with a crime punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year. Fields v. State, 211 Ga. 335, 85 S.E.2d 753 (1955); Peterkin v. State, 147 Ga. App. 437, 249 S.E.2d 152 (1978).

Arrest meeting the constitutional requirements of probable cause is valid whether or not O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 is violated. Quick v. State, 166 Ga. App. 492, 304 S.E.2d 916 (1983).

Subsequent guilt or innocence does not determine legality of arrest. — Fact that the defendant is found not guilty of a charge is immaterial as to the legality of the arrest because it is not necessary that the accused be found guilty for the arrest may still be lawful. Brooks v. State, 166 Ga. App. 704, 305 S.E.2d 436 (1983).

Warrantless search legal under federal law is legal under state law. — Warrantless arrest legal under federal law—that is, one made on the basis of probable cause—is legal under state law, and the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 and federal law are the same. State v. Thurmond, 203 Ga. App. 230, 416 S.E.2d 529, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 907, 416 S.E.2d 529 (1992).

Person under investigation subject to arrest without warrant on probable cause. — When the offender knows that the offender is under investigation, a police officer, once the officer finds probable cause for arrest, is justified in proceeding directly to arrest the offender without first obtaining a warrant. Fitzgerald v. State, 166 Ga. App. 307, 304 S.E.2d 114 (1983).

Arrest inside suspect's home. — Warrantless arrest may be made inside a suspect's home only with the suspect's consent or under exigent circumstances. Mincey v. State, 251 Ga. 255, 304 S.E.2d 882, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 977, 104 S. Ct. 414, 78 L. Ed. 2d 352 (1983).

When a suspect is telephonically requested to exit the suspect's home and voluntarily does so, the suspect's arrest, outside the suspect's home, by officers who have probable cause to believe that the suspect has participated in a felony is constitutionally valid. Mincey v. State, 251 Ga. 255, 304 S.E.2d 882 (1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 977, 104 S. Ct. 414, 78 L. Ed. 2d 352 (1983).

Probable cause for an arrest without a warrant exists when the facts and circumstances within the arresting officer's knowledge are sufficient to warrant a belief by a person of reasonable caution that a crime has been committed. Cornelius v. State, 165 Ga. App. 794, 302 S.E.2d 710 (1983).

When at the time the defendant was arrested one officer had been told by the victim what happened and that the officer radioed other officers to alert the officers to look for the defendant and the defendant's vehicle, based on that information, another officer properly placed the defendant under arrest. Gilbert v. State, 209 Ga. App. 483, 433 S.E.2d 664 (1993).

Grounds must be more than arbitrary harassment. — What is a reasonable articulable ground for the detention may be less than probable cause to make an arrest or conduct a search, but must be more than mere caprice or arbitrary harassment. State v. Thurmond, 203 Ga. App. 230, 416 S.E.2d 529, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 907, 416 S.E.2d 529 (1992).

Probable cause that an act of family violence had been committed. Clark v. State, 180 Ga. App. 280, 348 S.E.2d 916 (1986).

Uncontradicted testimony of the police witness concerning the victim's statement accusing the victim's spouse of stabbing the victim, the presence of a stab wound on the victim's back, the presence of several weapons, and the disordered condition of the scene clearly established that the officers had probable cause to believe that an act of family violence had occurred. Watkins v. State, 183 Ga. App. 778, 360 S.E.2d 47 (1987).

Wife's statement to officers that her husband had struck her provided probable cause to arrest the defendant, and since the offense which the officers had probable cause to believe had been committed was an act of family violence, a warrantless arrest was authorized. McCauley v. State, 222 Ga. App. 600, 475 S.E.2d 669 (1996).

Victim's on-the-scene accusations against the defendant, along with "visible bodily harm" to the victim's face, provided sufficient probable cause to believe that the defendant had committed battery, and it was unnecessary for the officer to investigate the defendant's explanation of the domestic dispute as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20.1. McCracken v. State, 224 Ga. App. 356, 480 S.E.2d 361 (1997).

There was no error in the trial court's conclusion that the defendant's warrantless arrest after being found at the home of a friend was justified under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20(a) as another friend of the defendant had been found shot at the defendant's home, and by the time of the arrest the police knew that the defendant's spouse was missing, that the defendant and the defendant's spouse were estranged, and that the defendant had stalked and threatened the defendant's spouse, such that the police had probable cause to believe that an act of family violence had occurred, and the possibility that the spouse was still alive was an exigent circumstance which authorized the entry into the friend's home to arrest the defendant. Wright v. State, 276 Ga. 454, 579 S.E.2d 214 (2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1106, 124 S. Ct. 1059, 157 L. Ed. 2d 892 (2004).

Probable cause not found. — Powell v. State, 163 Ga. App. 801, 295 S.E.2d 560 (1982); State v. Gunter, 249 Ga. App. 802, 549 S.E.2d 771 (2001).

Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained after the defendant's car was impounded during a traffic stop because, even though the officer had reasonable articulable suspicion to initiate the traffic stop based on criminal database search results that the defendant's car was not insured, once the defendant provided proof of insurance in an acceptable manner, the officer did not have probable cause to arrest the defendant or issue the defendant a citation; and, without probable cause to issue the citation, the officer had no basis for impounding the defendant's vehicle. State v. Lewis, 344 Ga. App. 630, 811 S.E.2d 436 (2018).

Probable cause found. — Defendant's arrival with a police suspect at a hidden drug transaction location and the defendant's attempt to leave the scene at the time of the suspect's arrest supported a finding that the police had probable cause on which to arrest the defendant. Fowler v. State, 201 Ga. App. 417, 411 S.E.2d 335 (1991).

Since police officers knew that a fatal stabbing and robbery had occurred that morning, that the defendant had been at or near the scene of the murder, that the defendant had threatened the victim only a week before, and that the defendant had been treated that morning for a wound, the protective search for weapons made by the police officers was constitutionally permissible. Further, as the search was proper, the police were also authorized to arrest the defendant when the police found a pistol concealed on defendant's person. Edwards v. State, 264 Ga. 615, 449 S.E.2d 516 (1994).

Probable cause from videotape identification and commercial transactions. — Probable cause for warrantless arrest of the defendant as the defendant left the defendant's home was properly established through the defendant's identification from videotapes by bank coworkers and by a police officer who had known the defendant for 25 years, and by the defendant's payments in cash to four financial institutions. Brown v. State, 262 Ga. 728, 425 S.E.2d 856, cert. denied, 510 U.S. 998, 114 S. Ct. 565, 126 L. Ed. 2d 465 (1993).

Officers justified in arresting defendant for DUI. — Officers were justified in arresting the defendant for driving under the influence and operating a vehicle after being declared a habitual violator since once the defendant had been stopped, the officers observed that the defendant appeared to be intoxicated, and the defendant admitted being a habitual violator. Cheatham v. State, 204 Ga. App. 483, 419 S.E.2d 920 (1992).

Persons entitled to arrest probation violators. — Power to make a warrantless arrest of a known probation violator is not limited to the probation supervisor, under O.C.G.A. § 42-8-38, but also includes a law enforcement officer with general arrest powers who has trustworthy information as to the probation violation. Battle v. State, 254 Ga. 666, 333 S.E.2d 599 (1985).

Suspect found wearing incriminating type of shoe justified warrantless arrest. Clinkscale v. State, 158 Ga. App. 597, 281 S.E.2d 341 (1981).

Defendant's appearance, a cut in defendant's jacket shoulder, defendant's proximity to the burglary site, the observation of a running person believed by the officer to be the same one stopped pursuant to the officer's description by the other officer a few minutes later, the short time between the report of the burglar alarm and the apprehension of the defendant, the absence of anyone else in the area matching the suspect's description, the defendant's nervousness, and the deputy's knowledge of the defendant's prior record of burglary and escape, added up to probable cause to arrest the defendant. State v. Wilson, 179 Ga. App. 334, 346 S.E.2d 111 (1986).

Officer must reveal the officer's police status. — It is the duty of an officer to disclose the officer's official character to the person whom the officer is arresting. Douglas v. State, 152 Ga. 379, 110 S.E. 168 (1921).

Officer must reveal charge. — Officer who arrests an alleged offender must also inform the accused of the nature of the charge. Dorsey v. State, 7 Ga. App. 366, 66 S.E. 1096 (1910).

Illegal arrest is tort. — Arrest without a warrant, unless made under circumstances declared by statute to permit an arrest without a warrant, is illegal and is a tort for which an action will lie as well as when arrest is under process of law but without probable cause and maliciously made. Standard Sur. & Cas. Co. v. Johnson, 74 Ga. App. 823, 41 S.E.2d 576 (1947).

Liability for false imprisonment. — To avoid liability for false imprisonment, it must be shown not only that the arrest was valid but also that the arresting officer had probable cause to believe the charged offense had been committed. Amason v. Kroger Co., 204 Ga. App. 695,

Burden on arrester to show exception to warrant requirement. — Whoever arrests or imprisons a person without a warrant is guilty of a tort, unless the arrestor can justify under some of the exceptions in which arrest and imprisonment without a warrant are permitted by law; and the burden of proving the existence of the facts raising the exception is upon the person making the arrest or inflicting the imprisonment. Vlass v. McCrary, 60 Ga. App. 744, 5 S.E.2d 63 (1939); Duchess Chenilles, Inc. v. Masters, 84 Ga. App. 822, 67 S.E.2d 600 (1951).

Plaintiff held for payment without warrant justified false imprisonment action. — Under allegations that the plaintiff was arrested without a warrant when the plaintiff was not guilty of any offense under the state laws or under any city ordinance and, without being carried before a committing magistrate, was held under arrest and deprived of liberty until the plaintiff and the plaintiff's brother paid to the defendant a sum of money, whereupon the defendant accepted the money and caused or permitted the plaintiff to be released from custody, the arrest and detention of the plaintiff were clearly illegal, and a cause of action for false imprisonment was set out. Duchess Chenilles, Inc. v. Masters, 84 Ga. App. 822, 67 S.E.2d 600 (1951).

Information suggesting why officer believed plaintiff inebriated admissible. — If, in a false imprisonment action there is evidence from which the jury would be authorized to find that the defendant in good faith and with probable cause arrested the prosecutor for drunkenness, any facts, circumstances, or information on which the defendant officer acted in making the arrest are admissible, not as proof of the facts, but as evidence that the officer in making the arrest did so upon a reasonable ground of suspicion. Henderson v. State, 95 Ga. App. 830, 99 S.E.2d 270 (1957).

Evidence affirming details of an informant's tip. — That the defendant matched the description of a drug dealer and that the defendant had "a large bulge" in the area of the defendant's pants where the informant had seen defendant conceal contraband was sufficient to verify the tipster's veracity and support the trial court's finding that the police had probable cause on which to arrest the defendant. Manzione v. State, 194 Ga. App. 227, 390 S.E.2d 121 (1990).

Conflicting testimony. — Court found no impermissible conduct that would taint the subsequent arrest when the police and the defendant offered conflicting testimony regarding events which led to the defendant's arrest. State v. Thurmond, 203 Ga. App. 230, 416 S.E.2d 529, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 907, 416 S.E.2d 529 (1992).

Conviction of police officer for involuntary manslaughter was proper. O'Conner v. State, 64 Ga. 125, 37 Am. R. 58 (1879).

2. Offense Committed in Officer's Presence

Words "in the presence" and "within his immediate knowledge" are synonymous; to justify the arrest without a warrant, the officer need not see the act which constitutes the crime taking place if by any of the officer's senses the officer has personal knowledge of the crime's commission. Marsh v. State, 182 Ga. App. 892, 357 S.E.2d 325 (1987); State v. Carranza, 217 Ga. App. 431, 457 S.E.2d 699 (1995), rev'd in part on other grounds, 266 Ga. 263, 467 S.E.2d 315 (1996); Youhoing v. State, 226 Ga. App. 475, 487 S.E.2d 86 (1997); Watson v. State, 243 Ga. App. 636, 534 S.E.2d 93 (2000).

Constitutionality of warrantless arrest depends on officer having probable cause. — Constitutional validity of an arrest without a warrant depends upon whether the arresting officer has probable cause to believe the defendant is committing or has committed, an offense in the officer's presence. Brooks v. State, 166 Ga. App. 704, 305 S.E.2d 436 (1982).

Constitutional validity of an arrest without a warrant depends upon whether, at the moment the arrest was made, the officers had probable cause to make the arrest — whether at the moment the facts and circumstances within their knowledge and of which they had reasonably trustworthy information were sufficient to warrant a prudent man in believing that the (suspect) had committed or was committing an offense. Davis v. State, 203 Ga. App. 227, 416 S.E.2d 771, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 905, 416 S.E.2d 771 (1992).

If any crime is committed in the arresting officer's presence, a warrantless arrest is legal. Wilson v. State, 223 Ga. 531, 156 S.E.2d 446 (1967), cert. denied, 390 U.S. 911, 88 S. Ct. 839, 19 L. Ed. 2d 885 (1968).

Offense committed in defendant's home. — When an individual commits an offense in his or her home and that offense is committed in the presence of a law enforcement officer, the officer is authorized to arrest the individual in the home without a warrant only when the officer's entry into the home is by consent or when there are exigent circumstances. Carranza v. State, 266 Ga. 263, 467 S.E.2d 315 (1996).

Arrest is officer's duty. — When a crime is committed in the presence of an officer, it is not only the officer's right then and there to arrest without a warrant, but it is the officer's duty to do so. Yancy v. Fidelity & Cas. Co., 96 Ga. App. 476, 100 S.E.2d 653 (1957), appeal dismissed, 213 Ga. 903, 102 S.E.2d 497 (1958).

Discretion of officer to issue citation or make arrest. — Although O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23(a) gives a police officer the option of issuing a citation, it does not restrict the power given to police in O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 to make custodial arrests for crimes committed in the officers' presence. Consequently, after a driver is arrested for a traffic violation, a police officer can lawfully search the interior of the driver's car. State v. Lowe, 263 Ga. App. 1, 587 S.E.2d 169 (2003).

Because an officer was authorized to arrest the defendant for weaving, a decision to impound the vehicle the defendant was driving was not unreasonable, and an inventory search of the vehicle was authorized; thus, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of the search. Lopez v. State, 286 Ga. App. 873, 650 S.E.2d 430 (2007).

Officers who see persons acting suspiciously may investigate, including "stop and frisk." Clark v. State, 131 Ga. App. 583, 206 S.E.2d 717 (1974).

If officer believes crime occurred or will occur. — Officers have ample authority to investigate if the officers believe a crime has occurred or is about to occur in the officers' presence. Clark v. State, 131 Ga. App. 583, 206 S.E.2d 717 (1974).

Police officer had probable cause to make a warrantless arrest of a defendant for misdemeanor obstruction when the defendant, after being told not to move a car belonging to the defendant's girlfriend because the officer needed to check the car's registration to complete a shoplifting investigation of the girlfriend, the defendant disobeyed the officer and had a friend remove the car from a store lot. Stryker v. State, 297 Ga. App. 493, 677 S.E.2d 680 (2009).

Officer observed fight but not the instigator. — In an arrestee's action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for arresting the arrestee without probable cause, given the circumstances known to the officers as the officers observed a physical scuffle between the arrestee and another officer in an extremely crowded venue just before midnight on New Year's Eve, the officers had probable cause to arrest for simple battery. Robinson v. MARTA, 334 Ga. App. 746, 780 S.E.2d 400 (2015).

Random search of automobile's occupants unjustified. — While a police officer may arrest for a crime committed in the officer's presence, that is, of which the officer is aware through the use of the officer's senses, and while there are circumstances under which the officer may momentarily detain and question a citizen, if the officer is acting upon reasonable and articulable suspicion which may yet not amount to probable cause to believe a crime is being committed, this gives the officer no right, where a crime is not being committed in the officer's presence in such manner that it is known to the officer by the use of the officer's senses, to stop a vehicle and search the occupants, and calling the search a "frisk" in no way ameliorates the situation. A "frisk," if legal at all, is such only in exceptional circumstances and only for the very limited purpose of assuring the officer that the suspect whom the officer must accost is not going to turn upon the officer with a weapon. L.B.B. v. State, 129 Ga. App. 163, 198 S.E.2d 895 (1973).

No right to arrest and search for weapons on mere suspicion. — Under this section, an officer has no authority, upon bare suspicion or upon mere information derived from others, to arrest a citizen and search the citizen's person in order to ascertain whether or not the citizen is carrying a concealed weapon in violation of law. Pickett v. State, 99 Ga. 12, 25 S.E. 608 (1896).

Arrest on suspicion of unknown crime. — There is no authority under which a citizen may be arrested without a warrant and held for investigation to determine if the citizen has committed some crime merely because the person making the arrest has a suspicion that the person arrested may have committed some then unknown crime. Raif v. State, 109 Ga. App. 354, 136 S.E.2d 169 (1964).

Because arrest requires offense. — To justify a police officer in making an arrest without a warrant, there must be an offense committed by the party arrested. O'Conner v. State, 64 Ga. 125, 37 Am. R. 58 (1879); Holliday v. Coleman, 12 Ga. App. 779, 78 S.E. 482 (1913).

Articulable suspicion based on senses. — In determining whether a suspicious situation should be further investigated or an arrest based on probable cause made, an officer may rely upon information acquired through any of the officer's senses. Perry v. State, 204 Ga. App. 643, 419 S.E.2d 922 (1992).

Detective reasonably could conclude at that time that an exigent situation was at hand after the detective received complaints regarding loud noise from a certain vicinity; proceeding to that vicinity and after the officer observed through the officer's sense of hearing, while on a public road, screaming, hollering, and music. Perry v. State, 204 Ga. App. 643, 419 S.E.2d 922 (1992).

Officer has authority to arrest anyone of whom the officer has reasonable suspicion that the person has committed a felony without waiting first to procure a warrant. Chaney v. State, 133 Ga. App. 913, 213 S.E.2d 68 (1975); Elders v. State, 149 Ga. App. 139, 253 S.E.2d 817 (1979).

Detective employed by county sheriff's office may make arrest. — County police, including the county sheriff, have general police power to investigate and make arrests as other law enforcement officials. Thus, a detective employed by the county sheriff's office may make an arrest without a warrant if a criminal offense is committed in the officer's presence or within the officer's knowledge. Perry v. State, 204 Ga. App. 643, 419 S.E.2d 922 (1992).

If facts give police reasonable grounds to believe defendant criminal. — Crucial question is whether the knowledge of the related facts and circumstances give the police officer cause and reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant committed an offense. If it did, an arrest without a warrant is legal. Creamer v. State, 150 Ga. App. 458, 258 S.E.2d 212 (1979).

What constitutes "reasonable grounds of suspicion" for warrantless arrest is generally to be determined under facts of individual case. Chaney v. State, 133 Ga. App. 913, 213 S.E.2d 68 (1975).

Middle ground of probable cause needed between suspicion and certainty. — There must be a middle ground between proof to a mathematical certainty that what one thinks one sees happening is in fact a violation of law, and mere suspicion that it may be a criminal act; it is frequently defined as probable cause. Harris v. State, 128 Ga. App. 22, 195 S.E.2d 262 (1973).

Arrest for offenses committed in officer's presence meets constitutional requirement of probable cause for arrest. Hunter v. Clardy, 558 F.2d 290 (5th Cir. 1977).

State courts require probable cause for warrantless arrest. — Georgia courts have equated this section with the probable cause standard or engrafted a probable cause provision on that section. Nicholson v. United States, 355 F.2d 80 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 974, 86 S. Ct. 1866, 16 L. Ed. 2d 684 (1966).

Georgia has apparently engrafted a probable cause requirement onto this section. United States v. Romano, 482 F.2d 1183 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1129, 94 S. Ct. 866, 38 L. Ed. 2d 753 (1974).

Arrest may be made without warrant. — Police officer has a right to arrest without a warrant when the officer has probable cause to believe a crime is being committed in the officer's presence. Anderson v. State, 123 Ga. App. 57, 179 S.E.2d 286 (1970).

When knowledge of the related facts and circumstances gives police officers probable cause and reasonable grounds to believe that a person has committed an offense, an arrest, even without a warrant, is legal. Diamond v. Marland, 395 F. Supp. 432 (S.D. Ga. 1975).

If an officer has probable cause to believe that the defendant has committed a felony, an arrest is authorized. Arnsdorff v. State, 152 Ga. App. 515, 263 S.E.2d 176 (1979).

When the police officer observed the driver of the car travelling at a high rate of speed through the motel parking lot, probable cause existed to stop the driver and make a warrantless arrest of the driver for driving too fast for conditions. Sanders v. State, 204 Ga. App. 545, 419 S.E.2d 759 (1992).

Probable cause does not require certainty. — When dealing with probable cause, as the name implies, one deals with probabilities, not certainty, and the quantum of proof necessary to establish probable cause is not that level which is necessary for proof of guilt in a trial. Bradford v. State, 149 Ga. App. 839, 256 S.E.2d 84, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 936, 100 S. Ct. 285, 62 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1979).

Probable cause does require reasonable grounds rather than rumor. — In exigent circumstances such as the imminent removal or destruction of contraband, a police officer may arrest without a warrant, but there must be probable cause. Probable cause means reasonable grounds, and is that apparent state of facts which seem to exist after reasonable and proper inquiry. Rumor, suspicion, speculation, or conjecture is not sufficient and it is axiomatic that an incident search may not precede an arrest and serve as part of its justification. Kelly v. State, 129 Ga. App. 131, 198 S.E.2d 910 (1973).

Probable cause requires reasonably trustworthy information which convinces prudent person. — Whether or not the arrest violated this section, the constitutional validity of the arrest without a warrant depends upon whether, at the moment the arrest was made, the officers had probable cause to make the arrest — whether at that moment the facts and circumstances within the officers' knowledge and of which the officers had reasonably trustworthy information were sufficient to warrant a prudent person in believing that the defendant had committed or was committing an offense. Peters v. State, 114 Ga. App. 595, 152 S.E.2d 647 (1966); Rockholt v. State, 129 Ga. App. 99, 198 S.E.2d 885 (1973); Lynn v. State, 130 Ga. App. 646, 204 S.E. 346 (1974); Bradford v. State, 149 Ga. App. 839, 256 S.E.2d 84 (1979); State v. Thomason, 153 Ga. App. 345, 265 S.E.2d 312 (1980), overruled on other grounds, State v. Stilley, 261 Ga. App. 868, 584 S.E.2d 9 (2003); Watson v. State, 153 Ga. App. 545, 265 S.E.2d 871 (1980); Thompson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 101, 270 S.E.2d 313 (1980).

Probable cause exists when the facts and circumstances within the officers' knowledge, and of which the officers had reasonably trustworthy information are sufficient in themselves to warrant a person of reasonable caution in the belief that an offense has been or is being committed. Quinn v. State, 132 Ga. App. 395, 208 S.E.2d 263 (1974).

Reasonable police officer standard based on officer's background. — Standard of probable cause is that of "a reasonable, cautious, and prudent peace officer" and must be judged in the light of the officer's experience and training. Harris v. State, 128 Ga. App. 22, 195 S.E.2d 262 (1973).

When police officer is informant, the reliability of the informant is presumed as a matter of law. Quinn v.

State, 132 Ga. App. 395, 208 S.E.2d 263 (1974).

Phrases "in his presence" and "within his immediate knowledge." — Words "in his presence" in former Code 1933, § 27-207 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20) and "within his immediate knowledge" in former Code 1933, § 27-211 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-60) are synonymous. Piedmont Hotel Co. v. Henderson, 9 Ga. App. 672, 72 S.E. 51 (1911); Novak v. State, 130 Ga. App. 780, 204 S.E.2d 491 (1974); Forehand v. State, 130 Ga. App. 801, 204 S.E.2d 516 (1974); Diamond v. Marland, 395 F. Supp. 432 (S.D. Ga. 1975).

Terms "within the presence of the officers," and "within their immediate knowledge," are synonymous. Harris v. State, 128 Ga. App. 22, 195 S.E.2d 262 (1973).

An offense is committed in the presence of an officer when the senses of the officer gave the knowledge the offense is being committed. Novak v. State, 130 Ga. App. 780, 204 S.E.2d 491 (1974); Diamond v. Marland, 395 F. Supp. 432 (S.D. Ga. 1975).

Offense within officer's immediate knowledge. — Because the defendant was arrested immediately after the defendant admitted to the police officer that the defendant threatened the victims, therefore, even though the initial threat was made outside of the officer's presence, it was within the defendant's immediate knowledge and justified the arrest. Brown v. State, 246 Ga. App. 517, 541 S.E.2d 112 (2000).

When officer sees crime. — Crime is committed in the presence of an officer if the officer sees the crime committed, or by the exercise of any of the officer's senses the officer has knowledge, together with what the officer sees, that a crime is being committed by the person sought to be arrested. Forehand v. State, 130 Ga. App. 801, 204 S.E.2d 516 (1974); Humphrey v. State, 231 Ga. 855, 204 S.E.2d 603, cert. denied, 419 U.S. 839, 95 S. Ct. 68, 42 L. Ed. 2d 66 (1974).

Probable cause was a complete defense to an arrestee's false imprisonment claim because the arrest for burglary was made pursuant to exigent circumstances as the suspected offense was committed in the officers' presence or within the officers' immediate knowledge; the officers found the arrestee inside a vacant home and saw that the back door appeared to have been forced open. Gray v. Ector, 541 Fed. Appx. 920 (11th Cir. 2013) (Unpublished).

Arrest for observed traffic violation. — Under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20(a), an officer has probable cause to arrest for a traffic violation committed in the officer's presence. State v. Goolsby, 262 Ga. App. 867, 586 S.E.2d 754 (2003).

Warrantless arrest of the defendant was authorized on the ground that a sale of cocaine was committed in the officers' presence, and after the defendant retreated into a motel room, the exigencies of the situation demanded and excused an immediate entry into the room for the officer to arrest the defendant without a warrant; hence, suppression of the evidence seized thereafter would not have been granted. Fortson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 120, 640 S.E.2d 693 (2006).

Appeals court rejected the defendant's contention that the arrest was made without probable cause as the evidence sufficiently showed that the defendant's presence at the scene of an alleged robbery, coupled with the defendant's flight from police, justified the arrest. McCoy v. State, 285 Ga. App. 246, 645 S.E.2d 728 (2007).

Burglary tools and contraband in plain view. — Evidence adduced on a motion to suppress is sufficient to authorize the arrest without a warrant as well as the search of the automobile when the burglar's tools and stolen merchandise are viewed and seen without a search of the automobile. Bass v. State, 123 Ga. App. 705, 182 S.E.2d 322 (1971).

Defendant close to burglary scene. — Subsequent search of a bag containing items stolen in a burglary was a lawful search incident to the arrest as: defendant was stopped a half mile from the burglary scene; defendant was sweating heavily, carrying a pair of leather gloves on a summer night; and was carrying a bag which the arresting officer testified to observing as loaded with numerous items including a checkbook bearing the address of the burglarized residence. Davis v.

State, 203 Ga. App. 227, 416 S.E.2d 771, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 905, 416 S.E.2d 771 (1992).

When officers recognize defendant. — Defendant was driving an automobile at a time when the officers knew the defendant's driver's license had been suspended and subsequently arrested the defendant; thus, the evidence found in the accompanying search of the car was admissible. Jackson v. United States, 352 F.2d 490 (5th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 825, 87 S. Ct. 55, 17 L. Ed. 2d 62 (1966).

Police may detect crime with senses other than sight. — To justify an arrest without a warrant an officer need not see the act which constitutes the crime take place if by any of the officer's senses the officer has personal knowledge of the crime's commission. Forehand v. State, 130 Ga. App. 801, 204 S.E.2d 516 (1974); State v. Greene, 178 Ga. App. 875, 344 S.E.2d 771 (1986).

Officer hearing cries of victim. — When a breach of the peace is committed, it is to be regarded as in the officer's presence, so far as to authorize an arrest without a warrant, if the officer hears the noise of the disturbance and the outcries of the person assaulted, whether the officer sees the act itself or not. Ramsey v. State, 92 Ga. 53, 17 S.E. 613 (1893).

Officer detecting marijuana. — When the crime of possessing marijuana is being committed in the presence of police officers, the arrest of a defendant without a warrant is permissible. Williams v. State, 129 Ga. App. 103, 198 S.E.2d 683 (1973).

When a police officer, upon observing a person smoking what the officer believes to be a marijuana cigarette and upon discovering a partially smoked cigarette in the same area, clearly has probable cause to believe the officer has witnessed the person possessing less than one ounce of marijuana, a misdemeanor (O.C.G.A. § 16-13-2(b)), thus authorizing a warrantless arrest. Corbitt v. State, 166 Ga. App. 311, 304 S.E.2d 123 (1983).

Possession of suspected drugs authorized the arrest of the defendant. Allison v. State, 188 Ga. App. 460, 373 S.E.2d 273 (1988); Watson v. State, 190 Ga. App. 696, 379 S.E.2d 817 (1989), overruled on other grounds, Berry v. State, 248 Ga. App. 874, 547 S.E.2d 664 (2001), overruled on other grounds, Bius v. State, 254 Ga. App. 634, 563 S.E.2d 527 (2002).

"Valid intrusion" onto defendant's property. — Having seen the defendant commit the offense of marijuana possession during a "valid intrusion" into the defendant's yard, the officer needed no warrant to arrest the defendant. Jenkins v. State, 223 Ga. App. 486, 477 S.E.2d 910 (1996).

Hot pursuit into home. — Officer who entered a home in hot pursuit of the defendant who had committed a traffic violation in the officer's presence was authorized to make a warrantless arrest. State v. Nichols, 225 Ga. App. 609, 484 S.E.2d 507 (1997).

Where crime not in officer's senses but offender admits fact. — An offense is within the presence of the arresting party when, although the arresting party cannot be cognizant of the offense by means of the arresting party's own senses, the defendant actually admits that the offense is in fact being so committed. Moore v. State, 128 Ga. App. 20, 195 S.E.2d 275 (1973).

Arrest for offense committed outside presence. — Fourth Amendment does not prohibit arrests for offenses committed outside the presence of the arresting state officer. Diamond v. Marland, 395 F. Supp. 432 (S.D. Ga. 1975).

O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20(a) provides that an officer may arrest a suspect without a warrant in limited situations, including when the offense is committed in such officer's presence or within such officer's immediate knowledge; or for other cause if there is likely to be failure of justice for want of a judicial officer to issue a warrant. However, § 17-4-20(a) only applies to cases in which a custodial arrest is made and not when a private citizen reports an erratic driver who subsequently exits the vehicle outside of the officer's presence and then is arrested. State v.

Cooper, 271 Ga. App. 771, 611 S.E.2d 90 (2005).

Extra-jurisdictional arrest. — Law enforcement officer may make an arrest without a warrant for an offense committed in the officer's presence, even if the arrest is outside the officer's jurisdiction. Wells v. State, 206 Ga. App. 513, 426 S.E.2d 231 (1992), overruled on other grounds by State v. Burns, 829 S.E.2d 367, 2019 Ga. LEXIS 400 (Ga. 2019).

Authority to arrest outside of jurisdiction. — Trial court did not err in granting police officers summary judgment in a citizen's action alleging false imprisonment, assault and battery, and intentional infliction of emotional distress in connection with the defendant's arrest because the arrest was lawful under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 since the obstruction occurred in the officers' presence; even if the officers did not have probable cause to arrest the defendant, the officers had the authority and discretion to arrest outside the officers' jurisdiction for offenses committed in the officers' presence and, therefore, the officers' immunity could not be defeated by the officers' decision to arrest outside of the officers' jurisdiction. Taylor v. Waldo, 309 Ga. App. 108, 709 S.E.2d 278 (2011).

Hostility of defendant and victim's injury indicating battery. — Upon arriving at the scene, an officer observed the reported victim bleeding from the head and saw the defendant outside the victim's shop, and since the defendant became hostile when the officer attempted to ask the defendant what had happened, the officer had probable cause to arrest the defendant for a battery upon the victim as well as a battery upon the officer in that the defendant acted in a hostile manner and resisted arrest. Newsome v. State, 149 Ga. App. 415, 254 S.E.2d 381 (1979).

Hearsay possible basis of probable cause. — Hearsay is admissible only to explain the officer's conduct, but not in proof of the fact, and hearsay statements may serve as the foundation for probable cause. Bradford v. State, 149 Ga. App. 839, 256 S.E.2d 84, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 936, 100 S. Ct. 285, 62 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1979).

Officer may testify to reasons for arrest or warrant. — Officer is entitled to explain the basis for making an arrest and to testify as to all of the facts in connection with the arrest; the officer may testify relative to information which the officer obtained from others which afforded the basis for obtaining a warrant, or for making an arrest without a warrant. Bradford v. State, 149 Ga. App. 839, 256 S.E.2d 84, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 936, 100 S. Ct. 285, 62 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1979).

Arrest for crime in presence made beyond time to procure warrant. — Officer has a right to arrest for a crime committed in the officer's presence; but the rule does not apply if the officer does not act on the occasion the officer sees the crime committed, but delays and seeks to make the arrest after the officer had ample time and opportunity to procure a warrant. Yancey v. Fidelity & Cas. Co., 96 Ga. App. 476, 100 S.E.2d 653 (1957), appeal dismissed, 213 Ga. 903, 102 S.E.2d 653 (1958).

Right to make a warrantless arrest for a crime for an offense committed in the officer's presence does not extend beyond a reasonable time and opportunity to procure a warrant. Williams v. State, 133 Ga. App. 66, 209 S.E.2d 729 (1974).

Arrest on mere oral complaint of another illegal. — When officers attempted, without a warrant, to arrest the defendant upon the mere oral complaint of another, and seize the defendant's person, the arrest was illegal. Porter v. State, 124 Ga. 297, 52 S.E. 283, 2 L.R.A. (n.s.) 730 (1905); Dorsey v. State, 7 Ga. App. 366, 66 S.E. 1096 (1910).

Arrest on information from another officer valid. — When the detective unquestionably had reasonable and articulated cause to believe the driver of a blue and white Cadillac had committed an armed robbery, the police of another city were authorized to act upon the information supplied by the detective and make a warrantless arrest. Knighton v. State, 166 Ga. App. 390, 304 S.E.2d 512 (1983).

Arrests by police officer on authority of card signed by sheriff are illegal. Gordon v. Hogan, 114 Ga. 354, 40 S.E. 229 (1901); Cuddens v. State, 152 Ga. 195, 108 S.E. 788 (1921).

erly granted to a police officer on a restaurant invitee's false imprisonment claim under O.C.G.A. § 51-7-20. The officer, who was told by the restaurant manager that the invitee refused an order to leave the premises, had probable cause to arrest the invitee without a warrant for criminal trespass under O.C.G.A. § 16-7-21. Kline v. KDB, Inc., 295 Ga. App. 789, 673 S.E.2d 516 (2009).

Hotel guest properly arrested for criminal trespass. — Exigent circumstances authorized an officer's warrantless arrest of a hotel guest for criminal trespass because the offense was committed in the officer's presence when the guest refused the officer's request to leave the hotel. Thus, the guest's false imprisonment claim against the hotel was properly dismissed on summary judgment. Lewis v. Ritz Carlton Hotel Co., LLC, 310 Ga. App. 58, 712 S.E.2d 91 (2011).

Arrest cannot justify search when no crime in police officer's presence. — Search cannot be incident to an arrest if the officer has no reason to believe that the appellant committed a crime in the officer's presence. Brown v. State, 133 Ga. App. 500, 211 S.E.2d 438 (1974).

Since the defendant has committed no crime in the presence of the arresting officer, and the latter has no valid warrant, the arrest without a warrant will not justify a search, the result of which forms the basis of the charge. Harper v. State, 135 Ga. App. 924, 219 S.E.2d 636 (1975).

Arrest cannot justify search when no city ordinance violation. — If there is no cause for arrest within the purview of a city ordinance, then a warrantless search and seizure is not legally supportable. Harper v. State, 135 Ga. App. 924, 219 S.E.2d 636 (1975).

Unlawful arrest not legalized by finding criminal evidence. — Except for the exceptions of this section, a warrant is required to make an arrest legal, and if the arrest so measured is not legal when made, the arrest cannot be legitimated by fruit of a subsequent search. Grant v. State, 152 Ga. App. 258, 262 S.E.2d 553 (1979).

Evidence procured in connection with search made under illegal warrant is inadmissible unless it appears that a crime was being committed in the presence of the officer and that the search was incidental to an arrest therefor. Grant v. State, 152 Ga. App. 258, 262 S.E.2d 553 (1979).

Officer cannot determine obscenity and make warrantless arrest. — Ability to make a warrantless arrest for an offense committed in an officer's presence contemplates the officer's ability to determine that an offense has actually been committed; the officer was incorrect in the officer's belief that the officer or the officer's agents may properly make the initial determination concerning the obscenity of a publication and that the officer may make a warrantless arrest if the officer determines that the subject matter of a publication is obscene. Penthouse Int'l, Ltd. v. McAuliffe, 610 F.2d 1353 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. dismissed, 447 U.S. 931, 100 S. Ct. 3031, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1131 (1980).

Officer cannot regularly arrest and harass magazine retailers. — When the officer's activities constituted a calculated scheme of warrantless arrests and harassing visits to retailers of publications, the substance of the procedures resulted in a "constructive seizure" of magazines from the shelves of the retail establishments and created an informal system of prior restraint in violation of U.S. Const., amends. 1, and 14. Penthouse Int'l, Ltd. v. McAuliffe, 610 F.2d 1353 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. dismissed, 447 U.S. 931, 100 S. Ct. 3031, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1131 (1980).

Public indecency. — Defendant who committed the offense of public indecency in the presence of a police officer was subject to warrantless arrest, and the officer was not required to obtain a warrant simply because the defendant was sitting on the defendant's porch. Collins v. State, 191 Ga. App. 289, 381 S.E.2d 430 (1989).

There was no excessive force sufficient to indicate an officer violated any clearly established constitutional right when a plaintiff, a woman in her eighth month of pregnancy, passed a road block without permission which provided the officer with arguable probable cause since the plaintiff drove away from the scene, where she then parked and ran into a building, and since the officer only firmly held her and contacted her abdomen in the process; the act of physically holding back a misdemeanor suspect who was attempting to leave the scene, even given her pregnant condition, was not disproportionate although the woman later miscarried. Moore v. Gwinnett County, 967 F.2d 1495 (11th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1081, 113 S. Ct. 1049, 122 L. Ed. 2d 357 (1993).

Officer that shot and killed a suspect was entitled to qualified immunity as to an excessive force claim because an objective officer in the officer's situation could have believed reasonably that the suspect posed an immediate threat to the officer's safety; the officer was acting inside the scope of the officer's discretionary authority when the shooting occurred because even if the officer was outside the officer's jurisdiction, the officer was authorized by Georgia law to conduct a warrantless arrest since the suspect was committing an offense, public indecency, within the officer's presence. Wilson v. Miller, 650 Fed. Appx. 676 (11th Cir. 2016) (Unpublished).

Battery of officers after illegal stop justifies arrest. — Though evidence would not have been admissible if discovered as the result of the police officers' unconstitutional roadblock and illegal Terry-stop of the defendant's car before the defendant reached the roadblock, the defendant's gratuitous shoving of police was an aggravated battery, which justified the officers arresting the defendant then and there, even if the defendant was not subsequently charged with the offense of battery. The discovery of drugs the defendant threw while fleeing from that battery meant the discovery of the evidence was sufficiently attenuated from the illegal stop to justify its admission into evidence and denial of the defendant's motion to suppress. Strickland v. State, 265 Ga. App. 533, 594 S.E.2d 711 (2004).

3. Offender Endeavoring to Escape

Flight is ground for arrest without a warrant when there is reasonable cause to believe the fugitive is the offender and the flight itself makes it impracticable to go elsewhere in search of a warrant. Garrison v. State, 122 Ga. App. 757, 178 S.E.2d 744 (1970).

Running is not grounds for arrest. — As no criminal activity was observed by police, the mere fact that (according to police) defendant "ran" inside the apartment when the police drove up did not provide probable cause and/or exigent circumstances authorizing the police to enter the defendant's girlfriend's sister's apartment to arrest the defendant without a warrant. State v. Brown, 212 Ga. App. 800, 442 S.E.2d 818 (1994).

Escape if less than felony committed. — Under this section, an officer can arrest without a warrant "an offender who is endeavoring to escape," even if the offense was less than a felony. Brooks v. State, 114 Ga. 6, 39 S.E. 877 (1901); Maughon v. State, 7 Ga. App. 660, 67 S.E. 842 (1910).

Illegal distillery. — Under this section, an officer can arrest without a warrant "an offender who is endeavoring to escape" even if the offense is merely distilling illicit liquor. Williams v. State, 148 Ga. 310, 96 S.E. 385 (1918).

Burglary. — Under this section, an officer can arrest without a warrant "an offender who is endeavoring to escape" even if the offense was merely burglary. Jackson v. State, 7 Ga. App. 414, 66 S.E. 982 (1910).

Flight of misdemeanor convict. — Misdemeanor convict who has escaped lawful confinement may be recaptured by any peace officer without a warrant. Williford v. State, 121 Ga. 173, 48 S.E. 962 (1904).

Insufficient evidence in flight from unmarked vehicle. — Because the circumstances of the defendant's low-speed flight from an uniformed detective, who was driving an unmarked vehicle, were insufficient to present law enforcement with evidence of a particular crime, the defendant could not be charged with the crime of attempting to elude an officer, and police lacked the probable cause sufficient to warrant an arrest for the offense; thus, the search incident to the arrest was invalid, warranting suppression of the evidence seized. Stephens v. State, 278 Ga.

Grounds for Warrantless Arrest (Cont'd)
3. Offender Endeavoring to Escape (Cont'd)

App. 694, 629 S.E.2d 565 (2006).

Right to arrest suspected person without warrant is broader in felony than in misdemeanor cases. Chaney v. State, 133 Ga. App. 913, 213 S.E.2d 68 (1975).

Using force to make arrest. — Even though an officer may have a legal right to make an arrest, still the officer can use no more force than is reasonably necessary under the circumstances, and cannot use unnecessary violence disproportionate to the resistance offered. When the offense is a felony, a greater force even to the extent of slaying the offender in order to prevent the offender's escape may, when sufficient circumstances so indicate, be justified. But if the arrest is only for a misdemeanor, such extreme and deadly force merely to effect the arrest and prevent escape is not justified. Mullis v. State, 196 Ga. 569, 27 S.E.2d 91 (1943).

Using force when arresting for misdemeanor. — Reason for limiting the powers of a peace officer in making an arrest for a person committing or attempting to commit a public offense of the grade of misdemeanor is that organized society will suffer less by the temporary escape of such person than it would if the officer should be permitted to take the person's life, or inflict upon the person great bodily harm, to prevent the person's escape. Palmer v. Hall, 380 F. Supp. 120 (M.D. Ga. 1974), modified, 517 F.2d 705 (5th Cir. 1975).

No general right to shoot fleeing misdemeanant. — Notion that a peace officer may, in all cases, shoot one who flees from the officer when about to be arrested is unfounded. Officers have no such power, except in cases of a felony, and then as a last resort, after all other means have failed. It is never allowed when the offense is only a misdemeanor. Palmer v. Hall, 380 F. Supp. 120 (M.D. Ga. 1974), modified, 517 F.2d 705 (5th Cir. 1975).

Deadly force used in pursuing fleeing suspected felon. — Officers, who shot and killed a fleeing suspected felon armed with a knife, were entitled to official immunity because it was a discretionary act, during pursuit a bystander twice identified the suspect, and the suspect slashed a knife at one officer, posing an immediate threat of physical violence. Williams v. Boehrer, 530 Fed. Appx. 891 (11th Cir. 2013) (Unpublished).

Except in self-defense, an officer has no right to proceed to the extremity of shedding blood in arresting, or in preventing the escape of one whom the officer has arrested, for an offense less than a felony, even though the offender cannot be taken otherwise. Palmer v. Hall, 380 F. Supp. 120 (M.D. Ga. 1974), modified, 517 F.2d 705 (5th Cir. 1975).

4. Failure of Justice

Phrase "likely to be a failure of justice" means probable ground for believing that there will be failure of justice. Mitchell v. State, 226 Ga. 450, 175 S.E.2d 545 (1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 1024, 91 S. Ct. 585, 27 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1971).

Failure of justice may occur if suspect is mobile and leaving area. — When a suspect is mobile and is seen leaving an area after having negotiated a sale with suspected stolen coins, a warrantless arrest is both reasonable and necessary to prevent a failure of justice. Williams v. State, 166 Ga. App. 798, 305 S.E.2d 489 (1983).

Failure of justice when grounds for arrest develop after entry. — Justification for a warrantless arrest, that there is likely to be a failure of justice for want of a judicial officer to issue a warrant, cannot be extended to excuse an illegal entry, especially when police officers did not decide to arrest until after the entry and the interrogation of the defendant. Griffith v. State, 172 Ga. App. 255, 322 S.E.2d 921 (1984).

For other cause when there is likely to be failure of justice for want of officer to issue warrant includes a situation when a police officer, knowing that a warrant has been issued for a felony, and with probable cause to believe that if the officer takes the time to procure the warrant the offender will escape, makes the arrest legal although the warrant is not in close physical proximity at the time. Croker v. State, 114 Ga. App. 492, 151 S.E.2d 846 (1966).

Possible failure of justice alone does not justify warrantless misdemeanor arrest. — Mere possibility of there being a failure of justice does not authorize an officer to attempt an arrest for a misdemeanor without a warrant. Giddens v. State, 152 Ga. 195, 108 S.E. 788 (1921).

Failure of justice when no one to issue warrant tested by probable cause. — This section has been equated with the probable cause test, or at least whether there was likely to be a failure of justice for want of an officer to issue a warrant was tested by the presence or absence of probable cause. Paige v. Potts, 354 F.2d 212 (5th Cir. 1965).

Otherwise constructive possession of warrant necessary. — When a lawful arrest cannot be made except under a warrant, it must, at the time of making the arrest, be in the possession of the arresting officer, or of another in the neighborhood with whom the officer is acting in concert. Adams v. State, 121 Ga. 163, 48 S.E. 910 (1904); Maughon v. State, 7 Ga. App. 660, 67 S.E. 842 (1910).

Illegal warrantless arrest not excused by probable cause. — If the arrest is without a warrant and is illegal, no amount of good faith or probable cause will excuse the defendants who were police officers. Vlass v. McCrary, 60 Ga. App. 744, 5 S.E.2d 63 (1939).

Detention arrest without valid warrant. — Arrest without a valid warrant to detain the defendant places the detention in the same category as an arrest without a warrant. Grant v. State, 152 Ga. App. 258, 262 S.E.2d 553 (1979).

Driving under the influence. — When obtaining a warrant to arrest the defendant for driving under the influence would have required at least two hours, during which time physical evidence of the defendant's alleged intoxication would dissipate, the warrantless arrest was proper under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 (a). State v. Fleming, 202 Ga. App. 774, 415 S.E.2d 513 (1992).

Since evidence of the defendant's intoxication would have dissipated during the time it would have taken for the officer to obtain a warrant for the defendant's arrest, the warrantless arrest was proper under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20. Wadsworth v. State, 209 Ga. App. 333, 433 S.E.2d 419 (1993).

5. Resisting Arrest

Every person has the right to resist an illegal arrest, and may use, in resisting the illegal arrest, such force as is necessary for the purpose. Ronemous v. State, 87 Ga. App. 588, 74 S.E.2d 676 (1953).

Person may use force proportional to amount used against the person. — One upon whom an arrest is unlawfully being made by an officer has the right to resist such arrest, force with force, proportionate to that being used by those detaining the person. Mullis v. State, 196 Ga. 569, 27 S.E.2d 91 (1943); Smith v. State, 84 Ga. App. 79, 65 S.E.2d 709 (1951).

Arrest for prior spouse beating. — Fact that the defendant's wife told the officers in the defendant's presence that he had beat her and she wanted him locked up did not render legal the arrest without a warrant of the defendant who was at home doing nothing when the police arrived, and the defendant was within his rights in resisting such arrest. Ronemous v. State, 87 Ga. App. 588, 74 S.E.2d 676 (1953).

Arrestee who knows of felony charge cannot resist. — It is the duty of an officer, when authorized to arrest, but when the circumstances afford reason to believe that the officer's object and official character are unknown to the person whom the officer seeks to arrest, so to inform the person; but an omission to do so will not justify the person arrested, or sought to be arrested, in resisting the arrest if the person in fact already knows, or on reasonable and probable grounds believes, that the person is under a charge of felony for which an arrest is being attempted. Morton v. State, 190 Ga. 792, 10 S.E.2d 836 (1940).

Right to kill if arrestee fears felony by officer. — If, during an unlawful arrest, the officer commits, or reasonably appears about to commit a felony upon the arrestee, such as an assault with intent to kill, using a weapon likely to produce death, or if the officer's violent behavior is enough to frighten a reasonable person into expecting a felony and causes the detainee to act from fear rather than for revenge, the detainee may protect oneself without being guilty of a crime, even if the person slays the officer. Mullis v. State, 196 Ga. 569, 27 S.E.2d 91 (1943).

5. Resisting Arrest (Cont'd)

No right to killing mere unlawful arrest without felony. — Mere fact of unlawful arrest, in the absence of an application of unlawful force amounting to or reasonably appearing to amount to a felony, will not authorize the killing of the officer. Mullis v. State, 196 Ga. 569, 27 S.E.2d 91 (1943).

Killing officer is manslaughter if injury less than felony feared. — If an officer does not attempt or reasonably appear to attempt a felony, but only the misdemeanor of an unlawful arrest, or if the person arrested is only put in fear of a lesser injury than that of a felony, killing of the officer would be manslaughter. Mullis v. State, 196 Ga. 569, 27 S.E.2d 91 (1943).

Killing officer without cause to know official status. — To slay an officer to avoid being taken into custody, while having reasonable grounds of belief that the person is an arresting officer, and that the person's object is to make a lawful arrest for a felony, is murder. If the homicide is committed without reasonable cause to know the person's official character or purpose, and without malice, the homicide is manslaughter. Morton v. State, 190 Ga. 792, 10 S.E.2d 836 (1940).

Killing known officer to prevent capture is murder. — When a person is lawfully arrested and has notice or knowledge, or by belief or reasonable grounds for belief has the equivalent of knowledge, that the person making the arrest is an officer, it is the duty of the person arrested to submit quietly. If, under such circumstances and merely to prevent the officer from lawfully arresting the person in a lawful way, the person kills the officer, the crime is murder. Mullis v. State, 196 Ga. 569, 27 S.E.2d 91 (1943).

Use of force when arresting criminal who knows status as police officer. — If an offender has the equivalent of knowledge that the person making the arrest is an arresting officer, it is the duty of such person to submit quietly to arrest; and in case the person refuses to submit, the officer has the right to use such force as is reasonably necessary to accomplish the arrest. Morton v. State, 190 Ga. 792, 10 S.E.2d 836 (1940).

Use of deadly force when officer's life is in peril. — Officer was entitled to qualified immunity for an excessive force claim in a Bivens action because the officer was standing in a narrow space between two vehicles, the decedent was disobeying the officer's orders to put the decedent's hands up, and the decedent's car suddenly moved forward; in a split second decision, it was reasonable under the Fourth Amendment and O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 to use deadly force when the officer had probable cause to believe that the officer's life was in peril. Robinson v. Arrugueta, 415 F.3d 1252 (11th Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 1109, 126 S. Ct. 1063, 163 L. Ed. 2d 887 (2006).

Right to prevent unlawful arrest of another. — No person should be punished for resisting or obstructing the illegal arrest of another. Prichard v. State, 160 Ga. 527, 128 S.E. 655 (1925).

Unauthorized physical resistance to warrantless arrest. — Whether a warrantless arrest violates the statutory authorization depends upon whether at the time of the arrest the officer had probable cause to make an arrest; when the officer was assaulted while in the execution of the officer's office, and when making the arrest was in the lawful discharge of the officer's office, physical resistance to the legal arrest was not authorized. Veit v. State, 182 Ga. App. 753, 357 S.E.2d 113 (1987).

Misdemeanor obstruction conviction was proper despite acquittal on original charge. — Because the police officer had grounds to arrest the defendant for public drunkenness and was in the process of making the arrest when the defendant shouted at the officer and attempted to walk away, conviction of the defendant for misdemeanor obstruction was proper even though the defendant was acquitted of the charge of public drunkenness. Williams v. State, 228 Ga. App. 698, 492 S.E.2d 708 (1997).

6. Consent

Probable cause and a warrant are not required for a search and seizure which is conducted pursuant to consent. Dawson v. State, 166 Ga. App. 199, 303 S.E.2d 532 (1983).

Mere acquiescence to authority of officer did not substitute for free and voluntary consent. — Despite the fact that the trial court concluded that the second of two defendant's warrantless arrest was unauthorized under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20(a), because mere acquiescence to the authority asserted by a police lieutenant by both the defendants could not substitute for a free and voluntary consent to search, the trial court erred in finding that the acquiescence granted valid consent to the officer. Thus, the trial court's grant of the motions to suppress was reversed, in part. Hollenback v. State, 289 Ga. App. 516, 657 S.E.2d 884 (2008).

This section applied to violations of municipal ordinances. State v. Koon, 133 Ga. App. 685, 211 S.E.2d 924 (1975); Whaley v. State, 175 Ga. App. 493, 333 S.E.2d 691 (1985).

Applied to state and municipal officers. — This section was applicable alike to state and municipal arresting officers. Faulkner v. State, 166 Ga. 645, 144 S.E. 193 (1928).

City police officer may arrest without warrant for city ordinance violation. — Police officer under city ordinance is as much under the protection of the law in making an arrest as any public officer, such as sheriff, bailiff, or constable; therefore, a town police officer has the right to arrest a defendant, without a warrant, for a violation in the police officer's presence of a town ordinance. Palmer v. State, 195 Ga. 661, 25 S.E.2d 295 (1943).

No duty to arrest for purposes of tort action. — Authority to arrest provided by O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 does not create a duty to arrest for purposes of a tort action. Landis v. Rockdale County, 212 Ga. App. 700, 445 S.E.2d 264 (1994).

State statute violation in officer's presence. — Police officer of a city, in making an arrest for an offense against state law, or for a violation of an ordinance of the municipality, committed in the city limits, fell within the protection of this section. Thus, a city police officer had authority to arrest without a warrant one who violates a state statute in the officer's presence, or to arrest within the city one who violates a city ordinance in the officer's presence. Mullis v. State, 196 Ga. 569, 27 S.E.2d 91 (1943).

Where no local ordinance violation. — In the absence of any evidence as to a warrant or as to any municipal ordinance that was violated, the burden was on the state to show that the defendant violated some law of the state in the presence of the deceased police officer. Mullis v. State, 196 Ga. 569, 27 S.E.2d 91 (1943).

State may justify city police officer's attempted arrest by showing ordinance. — When a military police officer has lawful custody of a soldier under arrest for violation of military orders, and the soldier is violently and turbulently resisting the arrest, and when several civilians go to the assistance of the military police officer, and under such circumstances, a city police officer comes to the place and attempts to arrest the soldier, and is killed by the soldier, it is proper for the state to introduce in evidence the city ordinance defining "disorderly conduct," as illustrating the legality of the arrest, or attempt to arrest, by the city police officer. Reed v. State, 195 Ga. 842, 25 S.E.2d 692 (1943).

Arrest not unlawful although car not entirely within jurisdiction. — Warrantless arrest which was otherwise authorized under this section was not rendered illegal merely because the arrest was effected while the individual arrested was in a vehicle not completely situated within the officer's jurisdictional limits. Rick v. State, 152 Ga. App. 519, 263 S.E.2d 213 (1979).

Officer need not show insufficient time to procure warrant. — If a municipal ordinance or a state law has been violated in the presence of a municipal police officer, it is not only the right but the duty of the officer to immediately make an arrest of the violator; under such circumstances it is not necessary, in order to establish the legality of the arrest, to show that the officer did not have the time and opportunity to procure a warrant. Reed v. State, 195 Ga. 842, 25 S.E.2d 692 (1943).

Sheriff may arrest without warrant if offense in sheriff's presence. — Like other police officers or private persons, a sheriff has the power to arrest an offender without a warrant if the offense is committed in the sheriff's presence. Elder v. Camp, 193 Ga. 320, 18 S.E.2d 622 (1942).

Seizure without warrant of illegal items in plain view in business place. — Sheriff may seize unlawfully kept property without a warrant for search, seizure, or arrest of the offender when the sheriff lawfully enters a place of business open to the sheriff as well as other members of the public under an implied invitation to enter, and finds in such place of business "slot machines" illegally kept by the owner or operation of such place of business. But, the sheriff has no authority to search private premises of the owner to find slot machines in the absence of a warrant. Elder v. Camp, 193 Ga. 320, 18 S.E.2d 622 (1942).

Inspectors of roads and bridges sworn in as deputy sheriffs may arrest for the violation of the criminal laws of this state. Earl v. State, 124 Ga. 28, 52 S.E. 78 (1905).

Probation officers arresting probationer when not present during offense. — While the jurisdiction of probation officers to arrest offenders is limited to one class of persons, the probationers under their supervision, their power of arrest is broader with regard to that class of persons than is the general power of arrest by officers since the probation officer may arrest a probationer without a warrant for the alleged violation of any condition of the offender's probation, which might be the commission of a felony or misdemeanor, or a mere violation of some rule prescribed for the offender's conduct, even though such violation of the conditions of the offender's probation was not committed in the probation officer's presence. Vandiver v. Manning, 215 Ga. 874, 114 S.E.2d 121 (1960).

Violation of state arrest law creates no federal liability if no federal Constitution violation. — Even when a police officer violates a state arrest statute, the officer is not liable under the federal Civil Rights Act (42 U.S.C. § 1983) unless the officer also violated federal constitutional law governing warrantless arrests. Diamond v. Marland, 395 F. Supp. 432 (S.D. Ga. 1975).

Statute did not apply to rules governing suspects already in custody. — Police officer was properly suspended for using a choke-hold on a handcuffed suspect in violation of department rules; O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20(d), prohibiting local rules that limited an officer's abilities to apprehend suspects, did not apply because the officer was not apprehending the suspect, but was trying to recover evidence from the defendant's mouth. Mercure v. City of Atlanta Civil Service Board, 327 Ga. App. 840, 761 S.E.2d 393 (2014).

Jury Instructions

Justification for warrantless arrest province of jury. — Whether, under all the circumstances of the case, including the facilities for obtaining a warrant according to the spirit of this section, there was or was not cause for attempting the arrest without a warrant is a question for the jury. Thomas v. State, 91 Ga. 204, 18 S.E. 305 (1892).

Error not to charge jury on trooper's probable cause. — When, on the trial of a state trooper for false imprisonment, it appears from the evidence that the trooper's sole defense was that the trooper made the arrest for drunkenness upon the public highway without a warrant when the trooper in good faith had probable cause to believe that such offense was being committed in the trooper's presence, it is error requiring the grant of a new trial for the trial court to fail to instruct the jury on this defense. Henderson v. State, 95 Ga. App. 830, 99 S.E.2d 270 (1957).

Error to cite exceptions if arrest illegal in any case. — Absent any evidence to show that an arrest without a warrant would have been authorized, the court erred in charging the jury that part of this section which declared the circumstances under which an arrest may be lawfully made without a warrant, since the jury was not also instructed that under the evidence the arrest would have been illegal. McIntosh v. State, 191 Ga. 736, 13 S.E.2d 770 (1941).

Charge differentiating arrests by citizens and police harmless as authority same. — When the arrest was made without a warrant, and the only basis for the arrest was that the crime was being committed in the presence of the person making the arrest, whether the defendant acted as an officer or as a private citizen was immaterial, since the person's authority as either was the same; therefore, the charge injecting this issue in the case could not have been confusing to the jury or harmful to the defendant. Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Wenger, 90 Ga. App. 267, 83 S.E.2d 58 (1954).

Charging exact language of section unnecessary. — Charge in entire harmony but not in exact language is neither a misstatement of law nor misleading. Cobb v. Bailey, 35 Ga. App. 302, 133 S.E. 42 (1926).

Proper charge. Alexander v. State, 160 Ga. 769, 129 S.E. 102 (1925).

This section applied to both state and local officers. 1972 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U72-127.

General arrest powers of sheriff with or without warrant. — Sheriff, as a law enforcement officer, may effect an arrest either under a warrant, or without a warrant if the offense is committed in the sheriff's presence, or the offender is endeavoring to escape, or for other cause when there is likely to be a failure of justice for want of an officer to issue a warrant. 1972 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 72-24.

Extent of city police officer's right to warrantless arrests. — City police officer has authority to arrest without a warrant one who violates a state statute in the officer's presence, or to arrest within the city one who violates a city ordinance in the officer's presence. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 74.

Police officer of a city, in making an arrest for an offense against state law, or for a violation of an ordinance of the municipality committed in the city limits, falls within the protection of this section; thus, a city police officer has authority to arrest without a warrant one who violates a state statute in the officer's presence, or to arrest within the city one who violates a city ordinance in the officer's presence. 1960-61 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 581.

Municipal arresting officer has authority to arrest person, including even the sheriff of the county, within the corporate limits of the city, on a charge of violation of city ordinances, including the charge of public drunkenness. 1962 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 335.

If ordinance offender within city. — Any warrantless arrest made for violation of a city ordinance would have to be within the corporate limits of the city. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 74.

City police officer may not make arrests outside city limits without warrant. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 74.

Municipal officer may chase intoxicated speeder beyond city. — If a person is driving an automobile while under the influence of intoxicating drink or at a greater speed than 55 miles per hour in the presence of a city police officer, the police officer would be authorized to pursue the person beyond the city limits and make the arrest for violating a state law; a city police officer would have no authority to go beyond the city limits and arrest a person for the violation of a city ordinance. 1952-53 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 48.

Officer from other state cannot arrest for city violations. — Officer from another state may proceed across the state line into Georgia in hot pursuit of an offender, but when the officer does so the officer assumes the character of a private individual and the officer is not clothed with the authority to make arrest for infractions of municipal ordinances. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 72.

Foreign bail bondsman cannot enlist local sheriff's aid. — When a bondsman from another state requested a Georgia law enforcement officer to aid the bondsman in capturing the bond jumper from that foreign state, such a request would not meet any of the requirements of this section, which gave the sheriff the authority to arrest. 1972 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 72-24.

Campus security guards not given police officer's arrest powers. — Power of a public officer to make arrests under former Code 1933, § 27-207 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20) can be conferred solely by law and the State Board of Education is not possessed of any lawful power to make its security guards "officers" within the meaning of that section, or to otherwise confer upon them the arrest powers of a peace officer; the only power to arrest which a security guard employed by the State Board of Education would or could possess under law would be that limited power possessed by a private citizen under former Code 1933, § 27-211 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-60). 1978 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 78-3.

Constable without full weapon rights. — Constable was grouped with other "officers" as to arrest powers under former Code 1933, § 27-207 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20) and was required to execute all warrants directed to the constable by lawful authority under former Code 1933, § 24-817 (see O.C.G.A. § 15-10-102); logically, the constable would be authorized to use such force as is necessary to carry out duties to the same extent as are other officers when serving arrest warrants or lawfully making an arrest without a warrant, but the constable does not possess general police powers, and may carry a pistol only if licensed to do so by the procedure set forth in former Code 1933, §§ 26-2901, 26-2902, 26-2903, and 26-2906 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 16-11-126 and 16-11-127). 1978 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U78-30.

Private citizen cannot serve arrest warrant. — While it is true that a private citizen may effect an arrest under former Code 1933, § 27-211 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-60), only a peace officer has the authority to make an arrest by serving a warrant. 1973 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 73-93.

Coroner limited to private citizen's rights in arresting sheriff. — Under former Code 1933, § 27-207 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20), a peace officer could arrest a sheriff with or without a warrant; however, coroners did not fall within the aegis of "peace officers," under former Code 1933, § 21-101 et seq. (see O.C.G.A. § 16-1-3) and, consequently, cannot arrest a sheriff in circumstances when a peace officer would be able to, but a private citizen would not. 1973 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 73-93.

Insufficient time justifies failure to obtain warrant. — Lack of sufficient time to obtain a warrant fell within the "likely to be failure of justice" language of this section. 1978 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U78-30.

Effect of illegal warrantless arrest on otherwise valid conviction. — Warrantless arrests may be legally effectuated by law enforcement officers under one of the exceptions to O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 or when arresting officers have probable cause to believe that a crime has been, is being, or is about to be committed; however, an illegal arrest alone will not be sufficient cause to vacate an otherwise valid conviction, and will not result in suppression of evidence absent a judicial determination that the arresting officer lacked probable cause in making the arrest. 1982 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U82-34.

Sheriff liable for false imprisonment for arrests beyond authority. — If the sheriff, in the sheriff's capacity as a law enforcement officer, undertakes to arrest an individual under circumstances which do not give the sheriff the authority to make arrests, it is an illegal arrest and as such may subject the sheriff to liability for false imprisonment. 1972 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 72-24.

17-4-20.1. (For effective date, see note.) Investigation of family violence; "predominant aggressor" defined; preparation of written report; review of report by defendant arrested for family violence; compilation of statistics.

(a) Whenever a law enforcement officer responds to an incident in which an act of family violence, as defined in Code Section 19-13-1, has been committed, the officer shall not base the decision of whether to arrest and charge a person on the specific consent of the victim or on a request by the victim solely or on consideration of the relationship of the parties. No officer investigating an incident of family violence shall threaten, suggest, or otherwise indicate the arrest of all parties for the purpose of discouraging requests for law enforcement intervention.

(b)(1) (For effective date, see note.) As used in this subsection, the term "predominant aggressor" means the individual who poses the most serious, ongoing threat, which may not be the initial aggressor in a specific incident.

(2) When complaints of family violence are received from two or more opposing parties, or if both parties have injuries, the officer shall evaluate each complaint separately to attempt to determine who was the predominant aggressor. Such officer shall not threaten, suggest, or otherwise indicate that all parties will be arrested. If such officer determines that one of the parties was the predominant physical aggressor, that person may be arrested. Such officer shall not be required to arrest any other person believed to have committed an act of family violence during the incident. In determining whether a person is a predominant physical aggressor, an officer shall consider all of the following:

(A) Prior family violence involving either party;

(B) The relative severity of the injuries inflicted on each person, including whether the injuries are offensive versus defensive in nature;

(C) Threats that created the fear of physical injury;

(D) The potential for future injury;

(E) Whether one of the parties acted in self-defense or in defense of a third party;

(F) Prior complaints of family violence; and

(G) Whether the person had reasonable cause to believe he or she was in imminent danger of becoming a victim of any act of family violence.

(c) Whenever a law enforcement officer investigates an incident of family violence, whether or not an arrest is made, the officer shall prepare and submit to the supervisor or other designated person a written report of the incident entitled "Family Violence Report." Forms for such reports shall be designed and provided by the Georgia Bureau of Investigation. The report shall include the following:

(1) Name of the parties;

(2) Relationship of the parties;

(3) Sex of the parties;

(4) Date of birth of the parties;

(5) Time, place, and date of the incident;

(6) Whether children were involved or whether the act of family violence was committed in the presence of children;

(7) Type and extent of the alleged abuse;

(8) Existence of substance abuse;

(9) Number and types of weapons involved;

(10) Existence of any prior court orders;

(11) (For effective date, see note.) Type of police action taken in disposition of case, the reasons for the officer's determination that one party was the predominant physical aggressor, and mitigating circumstances for why an arrest was not made;

(12) Whether the victim was apprised of available remedies and services; and

(13) Any other information that may be pertinent.

(d) The report provided for in subsection (c) of this Code section shall be considered as being made for statistical purposes only and where no arrests are made shall not be subject to the provisions of Article 4 of Chapter 18 of Title 50. However, upon request, a defendant who has been arrested for an act of family violence or the victim shall be entitled to review and copy any report prepared in accordance with this Code section relating to the defendant.

(e) Each police department, including local precincts and county sheriff departments, shall report, according to rules and regulations of the Georgia Crime Information Center, all family violence incidents, both arrests and nonarrests, to the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, which shall compile and analyze statistics of family violence crimes and cause them to be published annually in the Georgia Uniform Crime Reports. An offense shall be counted for each incident reported to the police. A zero shall be reported if no incidents have occurred during the reporting period.

Delayed effective date. — This Code section, as set out above, becomes effective January 1, 2021. For version of this Code section in effect until January 1, 2021, see the 2020 amendment note.

The 2020 amendment, effective January 1, 2021, rewrote subsection (b), which read: "Where complaints of family violence are received from two or more opposing parties, the officer shall evaluate each complaint separately to attempt to determine who was the primary aggressor. If the officer determines that one of the parties was the primary physical aggressor, the officer shall not be required to arrest any other person believed to have committed an act of family violence during the incident. In determining whether a person is a primary physical aggressor, an officer shall consider:

"(1) Prior family violence involving either party;

"(2) The relative severity of the injuries inflicted on each person;

"(3) The potential for future injury; and

"(4) Whether one of the parties acted in self-defense."; and substituted "predominant" for "primary" in the middle of paragraph (c)(11).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Immunity not granted to officers. — Officers' duty to investigate a report of family violence pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20.1(c) was ministerial and, accordingly, official immunity did not apply as such immunity was only applicable to performance of discretionary functions, unless those functions were undertaken with malice or intent to cause injury pursuant to Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. II, Para. IX(d). Meagher v. Quick, 264 Ga. App. 639, 594 S.E.2d 182 (2003).

Officer entitled to immunity for suicide of prisoner. — In a suit against a county police officer following the suicide death of a prisoner, the appellate court properly reversed the denial of summary judgment to the officer because the officer was entitled to qualified immunity with respect to the screening claim of the prisoner for any mental health issues since compliance with the policy and completion of the screening form was ministerial in nature. Pearce v. Tucker, 299 Ga. 224, 787 S.E.2d 749 (2016).

Investigation was unnecessary when the victim's on-the-scene accusations against the defendant, along with "visible bodily harm" to the victim's face, provided sufficient probable cause to believe that the defendant committed battery. McCracken v. State, 224 Ga. App. 356, 480 S.E.2d 361 (1997).

Failure to file report. — Officers who investigated a claim of possible child abuse failed in the officers' obligation to file a Family Violence Report, as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20.1(c), and the trial court properly denied a motion for summary judgment pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 9-11-56 by the officers and others in a wrongful death claim on behalf of a deceased child as genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether the officers' failure to investigate and file the necessary report proximately resulted in the child's injuries and death; the definition of "family violence" was broad under O.C.G.A. § 19-13-1, and although "reasonable discipline" was excepted thereunder, the officers had an obligation to investigate allegations that a child was being whipped. Meagher v. Quick, 264 Ga. App. 639, 594 S.E.2d 182 (2003).

Jury instruction based on subsections (a) and (b) was reversible error. — Jury charge based on O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20.1(a) and (b) was not supported by the evidence because only one of the two parties involved in a domestic dispute reported the incident to law enforcement, and the error was not harmless because the error could have led the jury to conclude that the defendant, who was arrested, was the primary aggressor, and undermined the defense of self-defense, which was not permitted under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21 if the defendant was the aggressor. Dean v. State, 313 Ga. App. 726, 722 S.E.2d 436 (2012).

17-4-20.2. Bias Crime Report; requirements; use of reports; publication.

(a) Whenever a law enforcement officer investigates an incident of a crime in which it appears that the defendant intentionally selected any victim or group of victims or any property as the object of the offense because of such victim's or group of victims' actual or perceived race, color, religion, national origin, sex, sexual orientation, gender, mental disability, or physical disability, whether or not an arrest is made, the officer shall prepare and submit to the law enforcement officer's supervisor or other designated person a written report of the incident entitled "Bias Crime Report." Forms for such reports shall be designed and provided by the Georgia Bureau of Investigation. The report shall include:

(1) Names of the parties;

(2) Relationship of the parties;

(3) Sex and gender of the parties;

(4) Race of the parties;

(5) Religion of the parties;

(6) Dates of birth of the parties;

(7) Time, place, and date of the incident;

(8) Whether there is evidence to indicate that the incident occurred because of a person's actual or perceived attributes as specified by subsection (a) of this Code section;

(9) Type and extent of the alleged violation;

(10) Existence of any objects or symbols associated with the terrorizing of persons based upon actual or perceived race, religion, or sex;

(11) Number and types of weapons involved, if any;

(12) Existence of any prior difficulties between the parties;

(13) Type of police action taken in disposition of case;

(14) Whether the victim was apprised of available remedies and services; and

(15) Any other information the officer deems pertinent.

(b) The report provided for in subsection (a) of this Code section shall be considered for statistical purposes only and, where no arrests are made, shall not be subject to the provisions of Article 4 of Chapter 18 of Title 50. However, upon request, a defendant who has been arrested for a criminal violation subject to Code Section 17-10-17 and the victim shall be entitled to review and copy any report prepared in accordance with this Code section relating to the defendant.

(c) Each police department, including local precincts and county sheriff departments, shall report, according to rules and regulations of the Georgia Crime Information Center, all incidents involving alleged criminal violations subject to the provisions of this Code section, both arrests and nonarrests, to the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, which shall compile and analyze statistics of such crimes and cause them to be published annually in the Georgia Uniform Crime Reports. An offense shall be counted for each incident reported to the police. A zero shall be reported if no incidents have occurred during the reporting period.

17-4-21. Duty of arresting officer to take arrested person before judicial officer; right of arrested person to select judicial officer.

The arresting officer shall take the arrested person before the most convenient and accessible judicial officer authorized to hear the case unless the arrested person requests otherwise, in which case, if there is no suspicion of improper motive, the arresting officer shall take him before some other judicial officer. An arrested person has no right to select the judicial officer before whom he shall be tried.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Duty of custodians. — Although the plain language of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-4-21 and 17-4-26 directs the "arresting" officer to bring the detainee before a judicial officer, but omits any similar directive for custodians or third party entities entrusted with incarcerating the arrestee, the court was unwilling to allow Burke County, Georgia, to hide behind a technicality. However, whether the county's inaction amounted to a constitutional violation could not be resolved until the facts surrounding the agreement between the City of Midville and Burke County and the relationship between the Midville Police Department and the Burke County Sheriff's Department were more fully developed. Bunyon v. Burke County, 306 F. Supp. 2d 1240 (S.D. Ga. 2004).

Discretion of arresting officer. — Arresting officer has discretion to take arrested person before most convenient and accessible judicial officer authorized to hear the cause. Gill v. Decatur County, 129 Ga. 697, 201 S.E.2d 21 (1973).

Justice of peace cannot become a court when the warrant was not returnable to that justice of the peace. Ormond v. Ball, 120 Ga. 916, 48 S.E. 383 (1904).

Rights not violated. — Although the state failed to carry the state's burden of proving that the defendants knowingly and voluntarily waived the defendants' right to a first appearance hearing under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62, the defendants were not entitled to immediate release on the defendants' own recognizance, regardless of whether the defendants had first appearance and bail hearings within the time allowed by law because: (1) a magistrate issued arrest warrants for two of the defendants within 48 hours of their arrest, satisfying § 17-4-62; and (2) the state obtained valid arrest warrants for the remaining two defendants either within or outside of the 48 hours after the defendants were arrested, and the remedy for a violation was only available during the period of illegal detention, which ended when the state obtained valid arrest warrants from a neutral and detached magistrate. Capestany v. State, 289 Ga. App. 47, 656 S.E.2d 196 (2007).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Justice of peace cannot order commitment hearing when police officer set bond. — Since a justice of the peace cannot issue a special warrant for arrest returnable only to the justice, it follows that the justice cannot order a commitment hearing when the arresting officer has purported to personally set bond. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-152.

17-4-23. Procedure for arrests by citation for motor vehicle violations; issuance of warrants for arrest for failure of persons charged to appear in court; bond.

(a)(1) A law enforcement officer may arrest a person accused of violating any law or ordinance enacted by local law governing the operation, licensing, registration, maintenance, or inspection of motor vehicles or violating paragraph (2), (3), or (5) of subsection (a) of Code Section 3-3-23 by the issuance of a citation, provided that such offense is committed in his or her presence or information constituting a basis for such arrest was received by the arresting officer from a law enforcement officer observing such offense being committed, except that, when such offense results in an accident, an investigating officer may issue citations regardless of whether the offense occurred in the presence of a law enforcement officer.

(2) A law enforcement officer may arrest a person accused of any misdemeanor violation of Code Section 16-7-21, 16-8-14, 16-8-14.1, or 16-13-30 by the issuance of a citation, provided that such offense is committed in his or her presence or information constituting a basis for such arrest was received by the arresting officer or an investigating officer from another law enforcement officer or other individual observing or aware of such offense being committed. When an arrest is made for such offense, prior to releasing the accused on citation, the arresting law enforcement officer shall review the accused's criminal record as such is on file with the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Georgia Crime Information Center within the Georgia Bureau of Investigation and ensure that the accused's fingerprints are obtained.

(3) The arresting officer shall issue a citation to the accused which shall enumerate the specific charges and the date upon which he or she is to appear and answer the charges or a notation that he or she will be later notified of the date upon which he or she is to appear and answer the charges. When an arresting officer makes an arrest concerning the operation of a motor vehicle based on information received from another law enforcement officer who observed the offense being committed, the citation shall list the name of each officer and each officer must be present when the charges against the accused are heard.

(b) If the accused fails to appear as specified in the citation, the judicial officer having jurisdiction of the offense may issue a warrant ordering the apprehension of the accused and commanding that he or she be brought before the court to answer the charge contained within the citation and the charge of his or her failure to appear as required. The accused shall then be allowed to make a reasonable bond to appear on a given date before the court.

(c) Notwithstanding subsection (b) of this Code section, when an accused was issued a citation for a violation of Code Section 16-7-21, 16-8-14, 16-8-14.1, or 16-13-30, and the accused fails to appear as specified in the citation, the judicial officer having jurisdiction of the offense, absent a finding of sufficient excuse to appear at the time and place specified in the citation, shall issue a warrant ordering the apprehension of the accused and commanding that he or she be brought before the court to answer the charge contained within the citation and the charge of his or her failure to appear as required. The accused shall then be allowed to make a reasonable bond to appear on a given date before the court.

The 2018 amendment, effective July 1, 2018, substituted the present provisions of subsection (a) for the former provisions, which read: "A law enforcement officer may arrest a person accused of violating any law or ordinance governing the operation, licensing, registration, maintenance, or inspection of motor vehicles or violating paragraph (2), (3), or (5) of subsection (a) of Code Section 3-3-23 by the issuance of a citation, provided that the offense is committed in his presence or information constituting a basis for arrest concerning the operation of a motor vehicle or a violation of paragraph (2), (3), or (5) of subsection (a) of Code Section 3-3-23 was received by the arresting officer from a law enforcement officer observing the offense being committed, except that, where the offense results in an accident, an investigating officer may issue citations regardless of whether the offense occurred in the presence of a law enforcement officer. The arresting officer shall issue to such person a citation which shall enumerate the specific charges against the person and the date upon which the person is to appear and answer the charges or a notation that the person will be later notified of the date upon which the person is to appear and answer the charges. Whenever an arresting officer makes an arrest concerning the operation of a motor vehicle based on information received from another law enforcement officer who observed the offense being committed, the citation shall list the name of each officer and each must be present when the charges against the accused person are heard."; in subsection (b), deleted "person" following "If the accused" near the beginning, substituted "accused" for "person" near the middle of the first sentence and near the beginning of the second sentence, inserted "or she" in the middle of the first sentence, and inserted "or her" near the end of the first sentence; and added subsection (c).

Construed with § 40-13-2.1. — Having elected to issue a citation, a deputy cannot make a custodial arrest of a driver when the driver refuses to sign the citation. Instead, a deputy shall follow the procedures set forth in O.C.G.A. § 40-13-2.1(a). The language of that statute makes clear that once a deputy or officer issues a citation, the deputy or officer is obligated to follow the procedures set forth in the statute. State v. Torres, 290 Ga. App. 804, 660 S.E.2d 763 (2008).

When physical arrest permitted. — Georgia traffic offender may only be physically arrested if, following citation for the offense, the offender fails to appear in court under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23(b), if the arresting officer has personal knowledge that the offender was intoxicated to the extent that the offender was incapable of driving safely, or if one of the other factors of O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 is present. Young v. City of Atlanta, 631 F. Supp. 1498 (N.D. Ga. 1986).

Because an officer was authorized to arrest the defendant for weaving, a decision to impound the vehicle the defendant was driving was not unreasonable, and an inventory search of the vehicle was authorized; thus, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of the search. Lopez v. State, 286 Ga. App. 873, 650 S.E.2d 430 (2007).

Trial court did not err by refusing to suppress the defendant's blood-test results based on not being under arrest prior to being read Georgia's Implied Consent notice because although the defendant's recollection differed from that of the law-enforcement officer, and although defense counsel cross-examined the officer extensively as to alleged inconsistencies in the chronology of events, the officer testified that the officer issued citations to the defendant before reading Georgia's Implied Consent notice. Chernowski v.

Probable cause to arrest. — Officer need not personally be aware of all the facts which would support a probable cause determination so long as it can be established by evidence that the officer's actions were the end result of a chain of information-sharing, one link of which is an officer in possession of probable cause. Waldrop v. State, 205 Ga. App. 864, 424 S.E.2d 31, cert. denied, 205 Ga. App. 901, 424 S.E.2d 31 (1992).

Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained after the defendant's car was impounded during a traffic stop because, even though the officer had reasonable articulable suspicion to initiate the traffic stop based on criminal database search results that the defendant's car was not insured, once the defendant provided proof of insurance in an acceptable manner, the officer did not have probable cause to arrest the defendant or issue the defendant a citation; and, without probable cause to issue the citation, the officer had no basis for impounding the defendant's vehicle. State v. Lewis, 344 Ga. App. 630, 811 S.E.2d 436 (2018).

Depositing driver's license in lieu of bail. — Any person arrested for a traffic violation, except a violation for which a license may be suspended for a first offense, may deposit that person's driver's license with the arresting officer in lieu of bail or incarceration. Young v. City of Atlanta, 631 F. Supp. 1498 (N.D. Ga. 1986).

Municipal officer had authority to arrest the defendant under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23(a) because, after observing the defendant operating the defendant's motorcycle, the officer had a reasonable suspicion that defendant had been driving under the influence and the defendant admitted that the defendant had been driving. Duprel v. State, 301 Ga. App. 469, 687 S.E.2d 863 (2009), overruled on other grounds by Zilke v. State, 299 Ga. 232, 787 S.E.2d 745 (2016).

Discretion to issue citations. — Use of the term "may arrest" in O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23 merely provides law enforcement officers with the discretion to issue citations rather than make custodial arrests for traffic offenses and does not restrict the officers' arrest authority to the issuance of citations. United States v. Wilson, 853 F.2d 869 (11th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1041, 109 S. Ct. 866, 102 L. Ed. 2d 990 (1989).

O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23 gives a police officer the option to issue a citation but does not restrict the power given to police in O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 to make custodial arrests for crimes committed in the officers' presence. Brock v. State, 196 Ga. App. 605, 396 S.E.2d 785 (1990); Polk v. State, 200 Ga. App. 17, 406 S.E.2d 548 (1991); Edwards v. State, 224 Ga. App. 332, 480 S.E.2d 246 (1997).

O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23 gives the officer the option of issuing a citation rather than going through the time-consuming ordeal of a custodial arrest, but does not mandate a citation. Baker v. State, 202 Ga. App. 73, 413 S.E.2d 251 (1991).

Option of issuing citation is not a restriction on police. — Although O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23(a) gives a police officer the option of issuing a citation, the statute does not restrict the power given to police in O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 to make custodial arrests for crimes committed in the officers' presence. Consequently, after a driver is arrested for a traffic violation, a police officer can lawfully search the interior of the driver's car. State v. Lowe, 263 Ga. App. 1, 587 S.E.2d 169 (2003).

Authority of DOT enforcement officer. — Department of Transportation enforcement officer has authority to enforce travel restrictions in high occupancy vehicle lanes. Edge v. State, 226 Ga. App. 559, 487 S.E.2d 117 (1997), overruled on other grounds by Zilke v. State, 299 Ga. 232, 787 S.E.2d 745 (2016).

Listing names of officers on citation. — Interest protected by the requirement that certain law enforcement witnesses be identified on the traffic citation is a criminal defendant's "reasonable pretrial" access to evidence. Minicucci v. State, 214 Ga. App. 468, 448 S.E.2d 34 (1994).

Failure to list the names of law enforcement officers on a traffic citation did not entitle the defendant to dismissal of the citation since the defendant did not claim unfair surprise from the testimony of the unlisted officers nor seek a continuance or mistrial. Minicucci v. State, 214 Ga. App. 468, 448 S.E.2d 34 (1994).

Failure to observe driving under the influence. — When a citizen reported that the defendant was driving erratically, but no officer observed the defendant driving, defendant's arrest for driving under the influence of alcohol to the extent that it was less safe to drive was invalid; under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23(a), an officer had to observe the defendant operating a motor vehicle, and neither the exception for arrest if an accident occurred nor O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20(a), allowing custodial arrests when an offense was committed within an officer's knowledge, applied as there was no accident and no transcript of the trial court proceedings was furnished to the appellate court to determine whether the defendant was subjected to a custodial arrest. State v. Cooper, 271 Ga. App. 771, 611 S.E.2d 90 (2005).

Juvenile charged under delinquency petition. — When a juvenile was found guilty of reckless driving in a proceeding on a juvenile delinquency petition in the juvenile court, the fact that the police officer who drew up the traffic citation, and later the petition, did not personally observe the juvenile's driving, as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23, did not require reversal because the court action was based on the petition, not on the reckless driving citation. In re J.J.H., 218 Ga. App. 557, 462 S.E.2d 449 (1995).

Officer's presence at trial. — Defendant's argument that the citation the police officer issued to defendant for hit and run had to be dismissed because the officer was not present at the defendant's bench trial had to be rejected as the statute the defendant cited for that proposition, O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23(a), only applied when the officer relied on information supplied by another officer, and not if the information was supplied by a citizen, as it was in the defendant's case. Davis v. State, 261 Ga. App. 539, 583 S.E.2d 214 (2003).

Defendant in traffic case charged by uniform traffic citation. — If a defendant in a traffic case charged by a uniform traffic citation fails to appear for trial in a probate court, a warrant may be issued regardless of whether that citation contains an affidavit of the arresting officer. Secondly, the uniform traffic citation is valid as an accusation without an affidavit and therefore tolls the statute of limitations for the prosecution of traffic violations. 1990 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U90-2.

Park ranger may regulate traffic. — Park ranger may legally be invested with power by the commissioner of natural resources to regulate traffic within a state park. 1971 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U71-2.

Warrant for failure to appear for traffic violation. — Named probate court may issue a warrant ordering apprehension of an individual charged with violating traffic laws of this state who fails to appear in court on the date and at the time specified in the citation upon which he or she was arrested. 1980 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U80-58.

What costs applicable to traffic cases in probate courts. — Cost applicable to traffic cases brought in probate courts pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 40-13-21, or when the judge of the probate court issues a warrant in traffic cases pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-4-23, are those enumerated in former paragraph (a)(27) of § 15-9-60 for public safety patrol trials, plus costs allowed for other services actually performed. 1981 Op. 17-4-24. Duty of law enforcement officers to execute penal warrants; summoning of posses.

Every law enforcement officer is bound to execute the penal warrants given to him to execute. He may summon to his assistance, either in writing or orally, any of the citizens of the neighborhood or county to assist in the execution of such warrants. The acts of the citizens formed as a posse by such officer shall be subject to the same protection and consequences as official acts.

Officer may not injure fleeing misdemeanant. — Officer may not, in the execution of a legal criminal warrant, when the charge is a misdemeanor, proceed to the extremity of shedding blood or killing, when the accused is attempting to avoid arrest by flight, even though the offender cannot be taken otherwise. Newkirk v. State, 57 Ga. App. 803, 196 S.E. 911 (1938).

Misdemeanant may not violently resist arrest. — When the law places a duty on an officer to serve a penal warrant and makes the officer indictable for neglect to serve the warrant, even though for a misdemeanor offense, the accused may not arm oneself with deadly weapons and, in company with others, by threats and a show of force prevent such arrest, and then claim protection because the offense charged is a misdemeanor, when the officer uses only such force as is necessary to overcome the resistance offered. 17-4-25. Power to make arrests in any county; arrested persons taken before judicial officer; transportation costs; holding in county other than one in which offense committed; transport to regional jail.

(a) Under a warrant issued by a judicial officer, an arresting officer may, in any county without regard to the residence of the arresting officer, arrest any person charged with a crime. It is the duty of the arresting officer to take the accused, with the warrant under which he was arrested, to the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, for examination before any judicial officer of that county.

(b) The county where the offense is alleged to have been committed shall pay the expenses of the arresting officer in taking the arrested person to the county. The arresting officer may hold or imprison the arrested person in a county other than the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed long enough to enable him to prepare to take the arrested person to the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed.

(c) Should the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed be a member of a regional jail authority created under Article 5 of Chapter 4 of Title 42, known as the "Regional Jail Authorities Act," the arresting officer shall transport the prisoner to the regional jail. The judicial officer of the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed may conduct the examination of the accused required by subsection (a) of this Code section in the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed or in facilities available at the regional jail or by audio-visual communication between the two locations and between the accused, the court, the attorneys, and the witnesses.

Officer must see enough to convince oneself and judge of crime. — What the officer sees or apprehends through the officer's senses must be sufficient to convince the officer as a fact that a violation exists, and to enable the judge when challenge is made to agree that such conviction is justified by what the observer has seen, heard, or otherwise ascertained. No bail in lieu of return of prisoner to other county. — Officials of a county in which one is arrested on a bench warrant issued from another county have no authority to admit to bail the person arrested. Weatherly v. Beavers, 139 Ga. 122, 76 S.E. 853 (1912).

Officer must return felon to county of crime where judge sets bail. — Arresting officer has no authority to accept bond from one arrested under a warrant for a felony, but should return the party arrested to the county in which the crime was alleged to have been committed for examination before a judicial officer of that county and the fixing of bail by such officer in case of commitment. Paulk v. Sexton, 203 Ga. 82, 45 S.E.2d 768 (1947).

17-4-25.1. Transport of arrested person to jurisdiction in which offense committed; transport of prisoner outside county or municipality.

(a) As provided in subsection (e) of this Code section, a sworn law enforcement officer from a county or municipality in which an offense is alleged to have been committed shall be authorized to transport an arrested person, with the warrant under which such person was arrested, from one jurisdiction to the county or municipality in which the offense is alleged to have been committed for examination before any judicial officer of that county or municipality.

(b) Unless otherwise provided by contract, the agency requesting the transportation of the arrested person pursuant to subsection (a) of this Code section shall be responsible for all costs associated with the transport. Such officer may hold or imprison the arrested person in a jurisdiction other than where the offense is alleged to have been committed long enough to enable such officer to prepare to take the arrested person to the jurisdiction in which the offense is alleged to have been committed.

(c) A sworn law enforcement officer from a county or municipality shall be authorized to transport a prisoner who is lawfully in the custody of such officer to a medical facility, juvenile detention facility as defined in Code Section 49-4A-1, or court appearance outside such county or municipality or to transport such prisoner to a location outside such county or municipality for any lawfully required or necessary purpose.

(d) This Code section shall not be construed to provide any general state-wide police powers or authority for county or municipal law enforcement officers or expand the arrest powers of such officers outside their properly authorized jurisdiction.

(e) Sheriffs and, with the approval of its governing authority, municipal or other law enforcement agency heads are authorized to enter into a contract for the purposes of transporting arrested individuals from the jurisdiction of the arrest to an appropriate detention facility where the alleged crime is to have occurred. In the absence of a written contract between the sheriff and municipal or other law enforcement agency head, the sheriff or his or her designee has the right of first refusal, as evidenced in writing, of transporting persons arrested on a warrant to an appropriate detention facility where the crime is alleged to have occurred. Any responsibility arising as a result of the transportation of an arrested individual as authorized in this Code section shall be that of the agency whose employee is transporting the arrested individual.

Any offense occurring before January 1, 2014, shall be governed by the statute in effect at the time of such offense and shall be considered a prior adjudication for the purpose of imposing a disposition that provides for a different penalty for subsequent adjudications, of whatever class, pursuant to this Act. The enactment of this Act shall not affect any prosecutions for acts occurring before January 1, 2014, and shall not act as an abatement of any such prosecutions."

17-4-26. Duty to bring persons arrested before judicial officer within 72 hours; notice to accused of time and place of commitment hearing; effect of failure to notify.

Every law enforcement officer arresting under a warrant shall exercise reasonable diligence in bringing the person arrested before the judicial officer authorized to examine, commit, or receive bail and in any event to present the person arrested before a committing judicial officer within 72 hours after arrest. The accused shall be notified as to when and where the commitment hearing is to be held. An arrested person who is not notified before the hearing of the time and place of the commitment hearing shall be released.

Analysis

General Consideration
Limitations on Release for Delay

General Consideration

Person who is arrested and released within the time prescribed by law on an appearance bond is not entitled to a commitment hearing. Watts v. Pitts, 253 Ga. 501, 322 S.E.2d 252 (1984).

Time for holding commitment hearing. — O.C.G.A. § 17-4-26 requires that a person arrested be brought before a committing judicial officer within 72 hours after arrest, but the statute does not require a commitment hearing within that time; to the extent that the language in footnote 3 of Boyd v. St. Lawrence, 281 Ga. 300 n. 3 (2006), conflicts with this holding, it is hereby disapproved. Tidwell v. Paxton, 282 Ga. 641, 651 S.E.2d 714 (2007).

Failure to hold commitment hearing. — There was no constitutional error after a magistrate failed to hold a commitment hearing when an accused was brought before the magistrate within 72 hours of arrest. State v. Godfrey, 204 Ga. App. 58, 418 S.E.2d 383, cert. denied, 204 Ga. App. 922, 418 S.E.2d 383 (1992).

Sanction for violating O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62 is that the defendant shall be released and does not require suppression of evidence gathered in the interim. Chisholm v. State, 231 Ga. App. 835, 500 S.E.2d 14 (1998).

Duty of custodians. — Although the plain language of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-4-21 and 17-4-26 directs the "arresting" officer to bring the detainee before a judicial officer, but omits any similar directive for custodians or third party entities entrusted with incarcerating the arrestee, the court was unwilling to allow Burke County, Georgia, to hide behind a technicality. However, whether the county's inaction amounted to a constitutional violation could not be resolved until the facts surrounding the agreement between the City of Midville and Burke County and the relationship between the Midville Police Department and the Burke County Sheriff's Department were more fully developed. Bunyon v. Burke County, 306 F. Supp. 2d 1240 (S.D. Ga. 2004).

It was not the intent of this section to require a useless act. Johnson v. State, 215 Ga. 839, 114 S.E.2d 35 (1960), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 849, 82 S. Ct. 81, 7 L. Ed. 2d 47 (1961).

Indictment of defendant in capital case within three days. — After a defendant was indicted in a capital case within 72 hours after the defendant's arrest, the incarceration was by reason of the indictment and not the warrant; this section could have no application since a committal court would have no jurisdiction to determine whether or not there was probable cause for indictment after the indictment had already been returned. Johnson v. State, 215 Ga. 839, 114 S.E.2d 35 (1960), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 849, 82 S. Ct. 81, 7 L. Ed. 2d 47 (1961).

Failure to bring defendant to magistrate not unconstitutional. — Though this section required that an officer arresting under a warrant bring the person arrested before a committing officer within 72 hours after arrest, failure to take an arrestee before a magistrate was not a federal constitutional issue. Stephenson v. Gaskins, 539 F.2d 1066 (5th Cir. 1976).

Requirement for hearing within three days. — Defendant arrested on a warrant must be taken before the committing magistrate within 72 hours after the defendant's arrest but this means that the defendant must be presented to the committing magistrate and notified as to when and where the committal hearing is to be held, not that the hearing itself must be within the 72-hour period. Whitfield v. State, 115 Ga. App. 231, 154 S.E.2d 294 (1967).

Release not required if hearing not within three days. — First sentence of this section imposed no penalty if the arresting officer failed to take the accused before a committing officer within 72 hours, nor was there any provision that the offender was to be released if no committal hearing was held within 72 hours. Pennaman v. Walton, 220 Ga. 295, 138 S.E.2d 571 (1964).

Detention illegal without hearing in three days. — When the facts show that the arresting officers did bring the defendant before the magistrate within 72 hours after the arrest, the fact that the magistrate set the committal hearing more than 72 hours after the arrest does not make the defendant's detention illegal. Dodson v. Grimes, 220 Ga. 269, 138 S.E.2d 311 (1964).

There is no requirement for a hearing within 72 hours after the arrest and the fact that one is not set until more than 72 hours after such arrest would not make the prisoner's detention illegal. Beavers v. State, 132 Ga. App. 94, 207 S.E.2d 550 (1974).

Denial of hearing ground for preindictment habeas corpus. — Although not ground for post-conviction habeas corpus due to mootness, denial of a commitment hearing would be ground for a preindictment habeas corpus. McClure v. Hopper, 234 Ga. 45, 214 S.E.2d 503 (1975).

Failure to conduct commitment hearing moot after grand jury indictment. — Issue of whether the defendant was entitled to habeas relief on the ground that the defendant was denied the defendant's right to a commitment hearing prior to the indictment was moot after the defendant had been indicted by the grand jury. Spears v. Johnson, 256 Ga. 518, 350 S.E.2d 468 (1986).

Court still has jurisdiction despite illegal detention. — Although an arresting officer may be liable in damages for false arrest and imprisonment when the officer detains the defendant in an illegal manner, this is ordinarily immaterial so far as the jurisdiction of the court over the defendant is concerned after jurisdiction has been acquired by accusation or indictment, and appearance and pleading by the defendant, in a criminal case. French v. State, 99 Ga. App. 149, 107 S.E.2d 890 (1959).

Delay does not invalidate trial and judgment. — Delay in the holding of the commitment hearing within the requirements of this section in no way vitiated the indictment, trial, verdict, and judgment of conviction and sentence. Heard v. State, 126 Ga. App. 62, 189 S.E.2d 895 (1972); Robinson v. State, 182 Ga. App. 423, 356 S.E.2d 55 (1987).

Arrestee misbehavior may justify delay. — What is reasonable diligence depends upon the peculiar facts of each case; the conduct of the prisoner may excuse the delay. Blocker v. Clark, 126 Ga. 484, 54 S.E. 1022, 7 L.R.A. (n. s.) 268, 8 Ann. Cas. 31 (1906).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Probation violators. — O.C.G.A. § 17-4-26 applies equally to probation violators who are arrested under warrants secured at the instance of probation supervisors. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-14.

Magistrate court may, sua sponte, order the release of arrestees who have been arrested without a warrant and when no warrant has been procured as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-4-26, and also when an individual has been arrested with a warrant, but has not been afforded a first appearance hearing within 72 hours of arrest as required by that section. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-14.

Waiver. — While it is possible for an individual to waive the individual's statutory right to a "first appearance," in writing, it would be necessary in every instance for a court to ensure that such a waiver is intelligently and competently made, and that the court's findings be made a part of the record of the case. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-14.

police, or heads of any other law enforcement agencies of this state, when any such person is charged with an offense against the laws of this state, any other state, or the United States. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Completion of standard form after invoking right to counsel. — When a suspect in custody invoked the right to counsel, and the officer proceeded to complete a standard form used by the department as an arrest record, which inquired as to names and addresses of family members, this inquiry was normally attendant to arrest and custody, and had absolutely nothing to do with interrogation regarding the criminal offense under investigation. Thus, the defendant's subsequent, self-initiated statement was not unlawfully obtained. Hibbert v. State, 195 Ga. App. 235, 393 S.E.2d 96 (1990).

ARTICLE 3

WARRANTS FOR ARREST

U.S. Code. — Arrest warrants, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 4. Grand juries, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 6.

17-4-40. Persons who may issue warrants for arrest of offenders against penal laws; warrants requested by others; persons who may issue warrants for arrest of law enforcement or peace officers or school teachers or administrators.

(a) Any judge of a superior, city, state, or magistrate court or any municipal officer clothed by law with the powers of a magistrate may issue a warrant for the arrest of any offender against the penal laws, based on probable cause either on the judge's or officer's own knowledge or on the information of others given to the judge or officer under oath. Any retired judge or judge emeritus of a state court may likewise issue arrest warrants if authorized in writing to do so by an active judge of the state court of the county wherein the warrants are to be issued.

(b)(1) If application is made for a warrant by a person other than a peace officer or law enforcement officer and the application alleges the commission of an offense against the penal laws, the judge or other officer shall schedule a warrant application hearing as provided in this subsection unless the person accused has been taken into custody by a peace officer or law enforcement officer or except as provided in paragraph (6) of this subsection; provided, however, that a warrant may be denied without the notice required in paragraph (2) of this subsection where the application form and any testimony from the affiant provided at the time of the application do not demonstrate probable cause for issuing a warrant.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (6) of this subsection, a warrant application hearing shall be conducted only after attempting to notify the person whose arrest is sought by any means approved by the judge or other officer which is reasonably calculated to apprise such person of the date, time, and location of the hearing.

(3) If the person whose arrest is sought does not appear for the warrant application hearing, the judge or other officer shall proceed to hear the application and shall note on the warrant application that such person is not present.

(4) At the warrant application hearing, the rules of evidence at a commitment hearing shall apply as set forth in paragraph (1) of subsection (d) of Code Section 24-1-2. The person seeking the warrant shall have the customary rights of presentation of evidence and cross-examination of witnesses. The person whose arrest is sought may cross-examine the person or persons applying for the warrant and any other witnesses testifying in support of the application at the hearing. The person whose arrest is sought may present evidence that probable cause does not exist for his or her arrest. The judge or other officer shall have the right to limit the presentation of evidence and the cross-examination of witnesses to the issue of probable cause.

(5) At the warrant application hearing, a determination shall be made whether or not probable cause exists for the issuance of a warrant for the arrest of the person whose arrest is sought. If the judge or other officer finds that probable cause exists, the warrant may issue instanter.

(6) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed as prohibiting a judge or other officer from immediately issuing a warrant for the arrest of a person upon application of a person other than a peace officer or law enforcement officer if the judge or other officer determines from the application or other information available to the judge or other officer that:

(A) An immediate or continuing threat exists to the safety or well-being of the affiant or a third party;

(B) The person whose arrest is sought will attempt to evade arrest or otherwise obstruct justice if notice is given;

(C) The person whose arrest is sought is incarcerated or otherwise in the custody of a local, state, or federal law enforcement agency;

(D) The person whose arrest is sought is a fugitive from justice;

(E) The offense for which application for a warrant is made is deposit account fraud under Code Section 16-9-20, and the person whose arrest is sought has previously been served with the ten-day notice as provided in paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of Code Section 16-9-20; or

(F) The offense for which application for the warrant is made consists of an act of family violence as defined in Code Section 19-13-1.

In the event that the judge or officer finds such circumstances justifying dispensing with the requirement of a warrant application hearing, the judge or officer shall note such circumstances on the face of the warrant application.

(7) No warrant shall be quashed nor evidence suppressed because of any irregularity in proceedings conducted pursuant to this subsection not affecting the substantial rights of the accused under the Constitution of this state or of the United States.

(8) Nothing contained in this subsection shall prohibit a judge from denying a warrant based upon the application and testimony heard at the time such application is made without requiring notice to the person whose arrest is sought.

(c) Any warrant for the arrest of a peace officer, law enforcement officer, teacher, or school administrator for any offense alleged to have been committed while in the performance of his or her duties may be issued only by a judge of a superior court, a judge of a state court, or a judge of a probate court.

Editor's notes. — In light of the similarity of the statutory provisions, decisions under former Code 1933, § 21-102 are included in the annotations for this Code section.

Oath needed to make affidavit basis of trial. — Before an alleged affidavit can become the basis of a legal proceeding it must appear that an oath was actually administered to the affiant, or that something was done by the affiant "signifying that he consciously took upon himself the obligation of an oath." J.C. Penney Co. v. Green, 108 Ga. App. 155, 132 S.E.2d 83 (1963).

Affiant's belief equivalent to swearing of facts. — Often times affiant's knowledge of matters stated in the affidavit must, of necessity, rest upon information derived from others; and when this is the case it is generally sufficient if the affiant avers that such matters are true to the best of the affiant's knowledge and belief. Belief is to be considered an absolute term in this connection; hence to swear that one believes a thing to be true is equivalent to swearing that it is true, and perjury may be assigned on such affidavit. Hutto v. State, 116 Ga. App. 140, 156 S.E.2d 498 (1967).

Signatures. — It was sufficiently clear that a reasonable officer would have understood that the affidavit or other statement that formed the basis for an arrest warrant had to be made under oath; therefore, summary judgment as to plaintiff's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claims against the arresting officer in the arresting officer's individual capacity was denied. Perrin v. City of Elberton, No. 3:03-CV-106 (CDL), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13230 (M.D. Ga. July 1, 2005).

Justice of peace issuing warrant judicial act, but not act of court. — Issuing of a criminal warrant by a justice of the peace is a judicial act, the beginning of a judicial proceeding, but it is not the act of a court. Ormond v. Ball, 120 Ga. 916, 48 S.E. 383 (1904).

Mayor may issue a warrant against an ordinance violator. Williams v. Sewell, 121 Ga. 665, 49 S.E. 732 (1905).

Judge of small claims court has power to issue criminal warrants for offenses committed in that county. Bush v. Wilcox, 223 Ga. 89, 153 S.E.2d 701 (1967).

Clerk of courts can issue a warrant upon receipt of an affidavit. Wadley v. McCommon, 154 Ga. 420, 114 S.E. 357 (1922).

Deputy clerk of a city court cannot issue a warrant, even upon receipt of an affidavit. Cox v. Perkins, 151 Ga. 632, 107 S.E. 863, 16 A.L.R. 918 (1921).

Warrant application hearing not required. — Record supported a district court's decision granting summary judgment in favor of sheriff's deputies in an action an arrestee filed under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 alleging, inter alia, that the deputies violated the arrestee's constitutional rights by procuring an arrest warrant without probable cause and in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-4-40, and using excessive force during an illegal arrest; because a deputy who obtained the arrest warrant was a law enforcement officer, the official who issued the warrant was not required to hold a preliminary warrant application hearing pursuant to § 17-4-40. Smith v. Mercer, 572 Fed. Appx. 676 (11th Cir. 2014) (Unpublished).

Arrest warrant for murder supported by probable cause. — Arrest warrant for murder was supported by probable cause as the record clearly showed that the magistrate issuing the warrant was provided the officer's affidavit and was informed by the same officer that a surviving victim had identified the appellant from a photographic line-up as one of the shooters and the appellant's identification and use of a gun during the shooting were corroborated by the facts and circumstances officers had gathered from witnesses and evidence at the scene of the shooting. Williams v. State, 298 Ga. 538, 783 S.E.2d 594 (2016).

Mandamus would not lie to compel a magistrate to issue an arrest warrant against an individual for false swearing in a notary public application when no abuse of discretion was shown. Chisholm v. Cofer, 264 Ga. 512, 448 S.E.2d 369 (1994).

When a city council member issued a warrant for a citizen's arrest for a state criminal offense the warrant was void because issuance was an unauthorized application of a city ordinance. Kelly v. City of Marietta, 253 Ga. 579, 322 S.E.2d 885 (1984).

Any citizen may procure warrant. — Procurement of an arrest warrant is not peculiar to the official duties of a peace officer. Any private citizen may do so and the procedure followed is the same. Cleland v. U.S. Fid. & Guar. Ins. Co., 99 Ga. App. 130, 107 S.E.2d 904 (1959) (decided under former Code 1933, § 21-102).

Wife accusing other woman of adultery with husband. — Wife cannot make out an affidavit, or sign an accusation, which furnishes the basis for a warrant charging another woman with adultery committed with the complainant's husband. Smith v. State, 14 Ga. App. 614, 81 S.E. 912 (1914).

Husband accusing other man of adultery with wife. — Husband is not competent to make out an affidavit to support an accusation charging another man with adultery with the first man's wife. Batchelor v. State, 41 Ga. App. 843, 155 S.E. 58 (1930).

Civil protective custody did not constitute a criminal arrest. — Custody authorized by an order to apprehend a defendant for a mental health evaluation pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 37-3-41(a) and 37-7-41(b) is plainly civil protective custody, not a criminal arrest, and a peace officer executing such an order does not thereby arrest the person to be examined such that a search incident to an arrest under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1(a) is authorized; the common thread running through statutes addressing criminal arrests such as O.C.G.A. §§ 17-4-1, 17-4-40, and 17-4-60 is that authority to make a criminal arrest arises from a determination that there is probable cause to believe the person is an offender against the Georgia penal laws, and under Georgia's Mental Health Code, by contrast, taking a person into civil custody is not an arrest of a criminal offender based on probable cause. Lindsey v. State, 282 Ga. App. 644, 639 S.E.2d 584 (2006).

Challenge to arrest warrant unwarranted. — Defendant failed to show trial counsel's performance was deficient for failing to challenge the arrest warrant on the basis that it was not properly sworn because the record showed that the defendant was taken into custody and arrested before the warrant was issued and there was a valid, warrantless arrest of defendant, making the later-issued warrant superfluous; thus, any defect in the arrest warrant was moot, and a challenge to the arrest warrant would have been futile. Williams v. State, 326 Ga. App. 784, 757 S.E.2d 448 (2014).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Judges who may issue warrants to arrest peace officer. — Warrant for the arrest of a peace officer may be issued by a judge of the superior court, a judge of the state court, or a judge of the probate court, in the alternative, and the power of a probate judge to issue such a warrant is not dependent upon the absence of the superior court and state court judges from the county where the offense is alleged to have occurred. 1975 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U75-48.

Probate judges may issue arrest warrants only in certain traffic cases and for peace officers accused of any offense in the performance of the officers' duties. 1983 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U83-13.

Justice of the peace may issue warrants. — Under former Code 1933, § 27-102 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-40), the power of ex officio justice of the peace includes the authority to issue warrants for the arrest of offenders against the penal laws of this state. 1960-61 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 96.

Special small claims court judges and mayors may issue warrants. — Both a judge of the small claims court created under a special Act and a mayor who has the duty of seeing that the ordinances of the town are faithfully executed have the power to issue warrants for arrest. 1969 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 69-198.

Arrest warrants for persons under 17 years. — Magistrate may issue arrest warrants for persons under the age of 17. 1984 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U84-30.

General Consideration
Requirements for Affidavit or Warrant

Even if the arrest warrant is invalid, if an arrest is plainly supported by probable cause, the arrest is nonetheless legal. Roberts v. State, 252 Ga. 227, 314 S.E.2d 83, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 873, 105 S. Ct. 228, 83 L. Ed. 2d 157 (1984).

Mistake in citation of statute irrelevant. — Affidavit given in support of an arrest warrant for the defendant contained all of the required information and was valid; the fact that the affidavit mis-cited the statute that the defendant was accused of violating was irrelevant. Golden v. State, 299 Ga. App. 407, 683 S.E.2d 618 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1904, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 56 (Ga.), cert. denied, 560 U.S. 941, 130 S. Ct. 3358, 176 L. Ed. 2d 1250 (2010), overruled on other grounds by Collier v. State, 834 S.E.2d 769, 2019 Ga. LEXIS 708 (Ga. 2019).

vits for arrest against a complainant who had sworn a warrant application against one of the officers; had the prosecutor signed the affidavit for the arrest personally, the prosecutor would not have received absolute immunity because the document would have been a sworn factual statement. Because the prosecutor's actions were not in preparation of the prosecutor's own case, were not part of the judicial process, and the prosecutor would not have received absolute immunity had the prosecutor signed the documents personally, the district court erred in granting the prosecutor absolute immunity for giving legal advice to the police. Holden v. Sticher, No. 10-14260, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10499 (11th Cir. May 24, 2011) (Unpublished).

Requirements for Affidavit or Warrant

Necessary information for arrest affidavit. — This section required information by way of affidavit in procuring an arrest warrant as to the offense committed, the county in which committed, the time committed and, when relevant, the person against whom the offense is committed. Nicholson v. United States, 355 F.2d 80 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 974, 86 S. Ct. 1866, 16 L. Ed. 2d 684 (1966).

Affidavits and warrants must comply with statutory information standard. — This section omitted the "substantial compliance" language formerly used and, hence, requires compliance of affidavits and warrants with the statutory standard of required information. Lowe v. Turner, 115 Ga. App. 503, 154 S.E.2d 792 (1967).

Probable cause is not required for issuance of arrest warrant. Davis v. State, 155 Ga. App. 511, 271 S.E.2d 648 (1980).

Probable cause not applicable to arrest warrants. — Probable cause requirements of an affidavit on which a search warrant is issued are not applicable to arrest warrants. Smith v. Stynchcombe, 234 Ga. 780, 218 S.E.2d 63 (1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1089, 96 S. Ct. 882, 47 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1976).

Because the defendant was lawfully arrested pursuant to the fifth warrant for the crime of armed robbery, and the warrant was sworn to, signed, and executed, the defendant's arrest was not illegal, and the defendant's fingerprints were not subject to exclusion; moreover, there was no requirement in Georgia that an arrest warrant had to meet the probable cause requirements of an affidavit for a search warrant. Skaggs-Ferrell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 872, 652 S.E.2d 891 (2007).

Arrest legal when affidavit meets statutory requirements. — When affidavit serving as basis for arrest warrant issued against the defendant satisfies the statutory requirements of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-4-41 and 17-4-45, an arrest is not illegal and confessions obtained as the product of such affidavit and arrest are not tainted evidence. Hammond v. State, 157 Ga. App. 647, 278 S.E.2d 188 (1981).

Warrant affidavit complying with O.C.G.A. § 17-4-41 is not alone sufficient to demonstrate the validity of an arrest warrant because probable cause must still be shown to the issuing magistrate. Devier v. State, 253 Ga. 604, 323 S.E.2d 150 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

All that is required for issuance of an arrest warrant is an affidavit stating the offense; the time, date, and place of occurrence of the offense; the person against whom such offense was committed; and a statement describing the offense, or offenses. Davis v. State, 155 Ga. App. 511, 271 S.E.2d 648 (1980).

Affidavit must give sufficient information. — Substantial compliance with the provisions of former Penal Code 1910, §§ 904 and 906 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-4-41 and 17-4-46) with reference to affidavits and warrants for the arrest of offenders against the penal laws, and the form of such warrants, was all that was required. Kumpe v. Hall, 167 Ga. 284, 145 S.E. 509 (1928).

Affidavit in support of a battery defendant's arrest was sufficient since the affidavit stated that the defendant committed the battery at a given time, date, and place, and the affidavit stated that the defendant intentionally caused physical harm to the victim by choking and hitting the victim with the defendant's fists. Dunn v. State, 234 Ga. App. 623, 507 S.E.2d 170 (1998).

Requirements for affidavits satisfied. — Defendant's plea counsel did not render ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to challenge the legality of arrest warrants because all four of the supporting affidavits unquestionably satisfied the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-4-41(a), and based on the information provided in the supporting affidavits, the officer in the case supplied the issuing magistrate with sufficient information to support an independent finding that probable cause existed for the issuance of the warrants; the defendant failed to demonstrate that the defendant's plea counsel's failure to challenge the legality of the warrants prejudiced the defendant because even if counsel had challenged the warrants and was able to suppress any inculpatory statement the defendant made, there was nothing to suggest that the defendant's guilty plea resulted from such a statement. Murray v. State, 307 Ga. App. 621, 705 S.E.2d 726 (2011).

Only name of offense necessary, not details. — Under the former provisions of this section, it was only necessary to name the offense committed by the defendant, in the affidavit and warrant, and it was not necessary to set out the facts which constitute the offense. McAlpin v. Purse, 86 Ga. 271, 12 S.E. 412 (1890); Brown v. State, 109 Ga. 570, 34 S.E. 1031 (1900); Tollison v. George, 153 Ga. 612, 112 S.E. 896 (1922).

Affidavit naming crime and warrant citing "misdemeanor." — When an affidavit upon which a criminal warrant was founded stated that the accused did commit the offense of a misdemeanor by disposing of a radio upon which another held mortgage, and the warrant stated that the accused "did commit the offense of misdemeanor," the affidavit and warrant were sufficient to charge a crime. Cain v. Kendrick, 199 Ga. 147, 33 S.E.2d 417, answer conformed to, 72 Ga. App. 392, 33 S.E.2d 883 (1945).

Affidavit need only give date and county of crime. — This section did not require the exact time of day or the specific location in the county to be given. It was sufficient to state the date the alleged offense was committed and the county in which the offense allegedly occurred. Courtenay v. Randolph, 125 Ga. App. 581, 188 S.E.2d 396 (1972); Lyle v. State, 131 Ga. App. 8, 205 S.E.2d 126 (1974).

Warrant void without time and place of offense. — Warrant that does not allege when or where the crime was committed is void. Thorpe v. Wray, 68 Ga. 359 (1882).

Omitting time does not invalidate warrant. — Failure to state the time of commission is a mere technical defect and does not void the warrant. Courtenay v. Randolph, 125 Ga. App. 581, 188 S.E.2d 396 (1972); Thompson v. State, 142 Ga. App. 888, 237 S.E.2d 419, rev'd on other grounds, 240 Ga. 296, 240 S.E.2d 87 (1977).

Standard accusation form sufficient with affidavit for arrest. — Standard printed affidavit and accusation form, accompanied by a previously prepared affidavit for arrest, is legally sufficient. Faulkner v. State, 146 Ga. App. 604, 247 S.E.2d 147 (1978).

No arrest affidavit on record makes standard accusation insufficient. — Standard printed affidavit and accusation form is insufficient when no affidavit for arrest is included in the record. Faulkner v. State, 146 Ga. App. 604, 247 S.E.2d 147 (1978).

Merely charging "misdemeanor" insufficient. — Accusation supported only by an affidavit charging the commission of a "misdemeanor" and not naming the specific offense is legally insufficient. Faulkner v. State, 146 Ga. App. 604, 247 S.E.2d 147 (1978).

Requirements for Affidavit or Warrant (Cont'd)

Misdemeanor accusation did not have to be based on arrest warrant. — There was no merit to a defendant's argument that reversal of the defendant's theft by deception conviction was required because the arrest warrant was not supported by a sufficient affidavit under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-41. Because the defendant had not identified any evidence obtained as a result of the arrest, a new trial was not required; moreover, a misdemeanor accusation did not have to be based on an arrest warrant. Bruster v. State, 291 Ga. App. 490, 662 S.E.2d 265 (2008).

Accusation incorporated by reference not sufficient. — Affidavit which sets forth only that the defendant has committed the offense of misdemeanor and purports to incorporate by reference the substance of an accusation does not serve as the basis for an accusation and does not comport with this section. Bickley v. State, 150 Ga. App. 669, 258 S.E.2d 306 (1979).

Additional information needed if reliance on informer. — If reliance under this section was based on an informer, the affidavit submitted must contain sufficient facts to show: (1) reasons for the informer's reliability; (2) that the affidavit either specifically states how the informant obtained the informant's information or describes the alleged criminal activity in such detail that the magistrate may know that it is more than a casual rumor circulating in the underworld or an accusation based merely on an individual's general reputation; and (3) that the information is not stale. Dailey v. State, 136 Ga. App. 866, 222 S.E.2d 682 (1975).

Counsel found ineffective when affidavits deficient. — Defendant's trial counsel was ineffective after counsel failed to make minimal inquiries which would have revealed that the arrest of the defendant was predicated on warrants issued without any showing of probable cause before the issuing magistrate; the warrants for defendant's arrest were apparently issued solely on the basis of the attached affidavits which, although satisfying the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-4-41, did not supply the magistrate with sufficient judgment that probable cause existed for the issuance of the warrants. Pitts v. State, 209 Ga. App. 47, 432 S.E.2d 643 (1993).

Remedies for unjustified arrest. — If the plaintiff was arrested under a void warrant, the action is for false imprisonment; if the warrant is valid, malicious prosecution is the remedy. Courtenay v. Randolph, 125 Ga. App. 581, 188 S.E.2d 396 (1972).

Verbal error not fatal if affidavit upholds warrant. — Mere verbal inaccuracy will not, if the meaning is clear, vitiate an affidavit or warrant, but the affidavit must uphold the warrant. Dickson v. State, 62 Ga. 583 (1879).

For larceny (now theft) affidavit held sufficient in city court trial, see Taylor v. State, 120 Ga. 484, 48 S.E. 158 (1904).

For misdemeanor properly charged in affidavit, see Williams v. State, 107 Ga. 693, 33 S.E. 641 (1899).

For proper allegation of assault with intent to murder, see Sasser v. McDaniel, 73 Ga. 547 (1884).

Arrest warrant for murder supported by probable cause. — Arrest warrant for murder was supported by probable cause as the record clearly showed that the magistrate issuing the warrant was provided the officer's affidavit and was informed by the same officer that a surviving victim had identified the appellant from a photographic line-up as one of the shooters and the appellant's identification and use of a gun during the shooting was corroborated by the facts and circumstances officers had gathered from witnesses and evidence at the scene of the shooting. Williams v. State, 298 Ga. 538, 783 S.E.2d 594 (2016).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Signature in presence of magistrate. — Affidavit which is prepared to support an accusation must be signed by the arresting officer in the presence of a magistrate or anyone else who has authority to issue criminal warrants. 1980 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U80-2.

Multiple criminal charges in single warrant. — At the present time, multiple criminal charges may be contained on a single arrest warrant provided that the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-4-41 are met and that the affidavit contains probable cause as to any charge alleged in the warrant. 1986 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U86-24.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Invalidity of extraterritorial warrants. — Under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-44, Georgia arrest warrants were invalid because the warrants were executed in Florida, outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the issuing court; thus, the warrants did not insulate a Georgia sheriff's deputy from liability from a Florida resident's false imprisonment and Georgia state law claims under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. General Consideration
Requirements for Affidavit

General Consideration

Any citizen may procure arrest warrant. — Procurement of an arrest warrant is not peculiar to the official duties of a peace officer. Any private citizen may do so and the procedure followed is the same. Cleland v. U.S. Fid. & Guar. Ins. Co., 99 Ga. App. 130, 107 S.E.2d 904 (1959).

Mistake in citation of statute was irrelevant. — Affidavit given in support of an arrest warrant for the defendant contained all of the required information and was valid; the fact that the affidavit mis-cited the statute that the defendant was accused of violating was irrelevant. Golden v. State, 299 Ga. App. 407, 683 S.E.2d 618 (2009), cert. denied, No.

Requirements for Affidavit

Complete statutory information required on affidavits and warrants. — This section omits the "substantial compliance" language formerly used and, hence, requires compliance of affidavits and warrants with the statutory standard of required information. Lowe v. Turner, 115 Ga. App. 503, 154 S.E.2d 792 (1967).

Only information required on affidavit for warrant. — In procuring an arrest warrant, this section required an affidavit containing information as to the offense committed, the county in which committed, the time committed and, when relevant, the person against whom the offense was committed. Nicholson v. United States, 355 F.2d 80 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 974, 86 S. Ct. 1866, 16 L. Ed. 2d 684 (1966).

All that is required for issuance of an arrest warrant is an affidavit stating the offense; the time, date and place of occurrence of the offense; the person against whom such offense was committed; and a statement describing the offense, or offenses. Davis v. State, 155 Ga. App. 511, 271 S.E.2d 648 (1980).

Arrest legal when affidavit meets statutory requirements. — When affidavit serving as basis for arrest warrant issued against the defendant satisfies statutory requirements of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-4-41 and 17-4-45, arrest is not illegal and confessions obtained as the product of such affidavit and arrest are not tainted evidence. Hammond v. State, 157 Ga. App. 647, 278 S.E.2d 188 (1981).

Standard accusation form sufficient with affidavit for arrest. — Standard printed affidavit and accusation form, accompanied by a previously prepared affidavit for arrest, is legally sufficient. Faulkner v. State, 146 Ga. App. 604, 247 S.E.2d 147 (1978).

Arrest affidavit on record. — Standard printed affidavit and accusation form is insufficient when no affidavit for arrest is included in the record. Faulkner v. State, 146 Ga. App. 604, 247 S.E.2d 147 (1978).

Affidavit not specifying crime insufficient. — Accusation supported only by an affidavit charging the commission of a "misdemeanor" and not naming the specific offense is legally insufficient. Faulkner v. State, 146 Ga. App. 604, 247 S.E.2d 147 (1978).

Probable cause is not required for issuance of arrest warrant. Davis v. State, 155 Ga. App. 511, 271 S.E.2d 648 (1980).

Georgia law imposes no requirements for probable cause evidentiary facts in the affidavits; insofar as the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution imposes a requirement of probable cause, a determination as to such prerequisite may be made based upon oral testimony independent of written information contained in an affidavit. Ayers v. State, 181 Ga. App. 244, 351 S.E.2d 692 (1986).

Affidavit for warrant sufficient although founded on belief. — Affidavit made to secure the issuance of a warrant for the arrest of an offender against the penal laws is sufficient when the affidavit is founded on knowledge or belief. Dobbs v. Anderson, 170 Ga. 826, 154 S.E. 342 (1930).

If positive evidence, no grounds for release of prisoner. — If the affidavit is positive on its face, it is no ground for discharge of the prisoner that evidence shows that the affidavit was founded on information and belief, especially when evidence of a positive character tends to establish the guilt of the prisoner. Dobbs v. Anderson, 170 Ga. 826, 154 S.E. 342 (1930).

Subornation of perjury could be predicated upon the affidavit prescribed by this section. Herring v. State, 119 Ga. 709, 46 S.E. 876 (1904).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Valid warrant for arrest of probation violator must be accompanied by an affidavit, and to be valid the affidavit must be sworn to under oath and signed by the affiant. 1981 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 81-99.

Affiant need not have personal knowledge of information to which the affiant swears when executing affidavit under O.C.G.A. § 42-8-38 for arrest of probation violator. 1981 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 81-99.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Affidavits and warrants must provide all information statute requires. — This section omitted the "substantial compliance" language formerly used and, hence, required compliance of affidavits and warrants with the statutory standard of required information. Lowe v. Turner, 115 Ga. App. 503, 154 S.E.2d 792 (1967).

Evidence needed that affiant gave oath or equivalent. — This section provided for a showing that something was done by the affiant signifying that the affiant consciously took upon the affiant the obligation of an oath. Segars v. Cornwell, 128 Ga. App. 245, 196 S.E.2d 341 (1973).

Standard accusation form sufficient with affidavit for arrest. — Standard printed affidavit and accusation form, accompanied by a previously prepared affidavit for arrest, is legally sufficient. Faulkner v. State, 146 Ga. App. 604, 247 S.E.2d 147 (1978).

No arrest affidavit on record makes standard accusation form insufficient. — Standard printed affidavit and accusation form is insufficient when no affidavit for arrest is included in the record. Faulkner v. State, 146 Ga. App. 604, 247 S.E.2d 147 (1978).

Accusation failing to name crime. — Accusation supported only by an affidavit charging the commission of a "misdemeanor" and not naming the specific offense is legally insufficient. Faulkner v. State, 146 Ga. App. 604, 247 S.E.2d 147 (1978).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Valid warrant for arrest of probation violator must be accompanied by an affidavit, and to be valid the affidavit must be sworn to under oath and signed by the affiant. 1981 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 81-99.

Application to affidavit for arrest of probation violator. — Although O.C.G.A. § 42-8-38, pertaining to the arrest of a probation violator, does not state that personal knowledge of the affiant is required, an analogy may be made to general arrest warrants, which do not require the affiant to have personal knowledge. 1981 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 81-99.

Warrant may levy arrestee's property to pay on costs if convicted. — Arrest warrant can contain directions to the arresting officer to levy on a sufficiency of the property of the arrested party to pay the costs in the event of the party's final conviction. 1967 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 67-357.

Levy is optional with judge. — Legislative intent was to make the provision for the levying on the property of the arrested party in order to pay costs an optional provision to be left to the discretion of the judicial body from which the warrant originated. 1967 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 67-357.

17-4-47. Issuance of warrants by video conference; testimony; initial bond hearings; oaths.

(a) A judge of any court in this state authorized to issue arrest warrants pursuant to Code Section 17-4-40 may, as an alternative to other laws relating to the issuance of arrest warrants, conduct such applications for the issuance of arrest warrants by video conference. The issuance of an arrest warrant by video conference shall be valid irrespective of the physical location of the judge at the time of the video conference, provided that the judge issuing the warrant is authorized by law to issue such warrant, and, at the time such warrant is issued, he or she is physically located within this state.

(b) Arrest warrant applications heard by video conference shall be conducted in a manner to ensure that the judge conducting the hearing has visual and audible contact with all affiants and witnesses giving testimony.

(c) The affiant participating in an arrest warrant application by video conference shall sign the affidavit for an arrest warrant and any related documents by any reasonable means which identifies the affiant, including, but not limited to, his or her typewritten name, signature affixed by electronic stylus, or any other reasonable means which identifies the person signing the affidavit and any related documents. The judge participating in an arrest warrant application by video conference shall sign the affidavit for an arrest warrant, the arrest warrant, and any related documents by any reasonable means which identifies the judge, including, but not limited to, his or her typewritten name, signature affixed by electronic stylus, or any other reasonable means which identifies the judicial officer signing the affidavit and warrant and any related documents. Such authorization shall be deemed to comply with the signature requirements provided for in Code Sections 17-4-45 and 17-4-46.

(d) A judge may also utilize a video conference to conduct hearings relating to the issuance of an initial bond connected with an offense for which an arrest warrant is issued, provided that the setting of such bond is within the jurisdiction of that court.

(e) A judge hearing matters pursuant to this Code section shall administer an oath to any person testifying by means of a video conference.

Analysis

General Consideration
Offense Committed in Presence or Within Knowledge
Escaped Felons

General Consideration

During emergency, citizen protected by law. — Private citizen has quite as much power to arrest a fugitive felon, when the emergency calls for immediate action, as a public officer, and while so doing, is equally under the protection of the law. Johnson v. Jackson, 140 Ga. App. 252, 230 S.E.2d 756 (1976).

Arrest to prevent felony. — Private person has the right to arrest under certain circumstances in order to prevent a felony from being committed, which felony has not yet been attempted. Johnson v. Jackson, 140 Ga. App. 252, 230 S.E.2d 756 (1976).

Apprehension for felony must be only to bring criminal to magistrate. — When a felony has been committed, a private person acting upon a reasonable and probable ground of suspicion may apprehend a suspect without a warrant, but it is only for the purpose of taking the offender before a magistrate. The suspect may be taken and detained until the suspect can be committed to the custody of the law. Croker v. State, 114 Ga. App. 492, 151 S.E.2d 846 (1966).

Warrantless detention by a private person amounts to a false imprisonment unless the detention comes within certain specific exceptions listed in this section. McWilliams v. Interstate Bakeries, Inc., 439 F.2d 16 (5th Cir. 1971).

To avoid liability for false imprisonment, it must be shown not only that the arrest was valid but also that the arresting officer had probable cause to believe the charged offense had been committed. Amason v. Kroger Co., 204 Ga. App. 695, 420 S.E.2d 314 (1992).

In a false imprisonment case, the existence of probable cause standing alone is not a complete defense because, even if probable cause to believe a crime has been committed exists, a warrantless arrest would still be illegal unless the arrest was accomplished pursuant to one of the "exigent circumstances" applicable to law enforcement officers enumerated in O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20 or applicable to private persons as set forth in O.C.G.A. § 17-4-60. Arbee v. Collins, 219 Ga. App. 63, 463 S.E.2d 922 (1995).

Citizen's arrest not valid defense to offense of false imprisonment. — Trial evidence showed that the defendant confined the victim in the bedroom without lawful authority. In light of the defendant's testimony that the victim had not been confined at all, trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to pursue jury instructions based on an inconsistent theory that the defendant had in fact confined the victim, but was legally authorized to do so. Smith v. State, 314 Ga. App. 583, 724 S.E.2d 885 (2012).

Citizen holding offender four days after violation. — Private citizen who forcibly detained a man on the grounds that he had indecently exposed himself to the victim four days previously, when the arrest did not occur until four days after the alleged offense, was guilty of falsely imprisoning the plaintiff. McWilliams v. Interstate Bakeries, Inc., 439 F.2d 16 (5th Cir. 1971).

Civil protective custody did not constitute a criminal arrest. — Custody authorized by an order to apprehend a defendant for a mental health evaluation pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 37-3-41(a) and 37-7-41(b) is plainly civil protective custody, not a criminal arrest, and a peace officer executing such an order does not thereby arrest the person to be examined such that a search incident to an arrest under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1(a) is authorized; the common thread running through statutes addressing criminal arrests such as O.C.G.A. §§ 17-4-1, 17-4-40, and 17-4-60 is that authority to make a criminal arrest arises from a determination that there is probable cause to believe the person is an offender against the Georgia penal laws, and under Georgia's Mental Health Code, by contrast, taking a person into civil custody is not an arrest of a criminal offender based on probable cause. Lindsey v. State, 282 Ga. App. 644, 639 S.E.2d 584 (2006).

Use of unreasonable force. — Although a private person may make a citizen's arrest under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-60, only force that is reasonable under the circumstances may be used to restrain the individual arrested; an alleged assault of an individual with a baseball bat entailed unreasonable force and could not have been part of a legitimate citizen's arrest. Carter v. State, 269 Ga. 891, 506 S.E.2d 124 (1998).

In defendant's trial on a charge of felony murder, defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to request an instruction on citizen's arrest under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-60 as the defendant used more force than was reasonable in making such an arrest when the defendant shot an intruder through the wall of a storage building. Patel v. State, 279 Ga. 750, 620 S.E.2d 343 (2005).

Arrester has burden to deny tort if no warrant. — Whoever arrests a person without a warrant is guilty of a tort, unless the person can justify under one of the exceptions prescribed by law; and the burden of proof that the case lies within the exception rests upon the person making the arrest. Piedmont Hotel Co. v. Henderson, 9 Ga. App. 672, 72 S.E. 51 (1911).

Innocent party shot by arresting party. — Private citizen, who in arresting a person, kills an innocent bystander, is guilty of a tort, unless the arresting party can justify actions under one of the exceptions prescribed by law; and the burden of proof that the case lies within the exception rests upon the person making the arrest. Piedmont Hotel Co. v. Henderson, 9 Ga. App. 672, 72 S.E. 51 (1911).

Arrest for murder three years after its commission, see Snelling v. State, 87 Ga. 50, 13 S.E. 154 (1891).

Warrant by private person insufficient. — Mere possession of a warrant does not authorize a private person to arrest the person named therein. Coleman v. State, 121 Ga. 594, 49 S.E. 716 (1905).

No mandamus since citizen's arrest legal remedy. — When the petitioners seek mandamus to compel the mayor, aldermanic board, and sheriff to enforce laws regulating sale of liquor, mandamus is an improper remedy since the law provides for a citizen's arrest of the offenders or for the issuance of a warrant upon complaint by the citizen for the arrest of the violators. Mandamus will not lie if there is an adequate legal remedy. Solomon v. Brown, 218 Ga. 508, 128 S.E.2d 735 (1962).

Citizen's or warrantless arrest for distilling liquor. — See Williams v. State, 148 Ga. 310, 96 S.E. 385 (1918).

Difference between arrest of escaped felons and recapture of property. — See Drew v. State, 136 Ga. 658, 71 S.E. 1108 (1911).

Sheriff without warrant may seize illegal property in public place. — Sheriff may seize unlawfully kept property without a warrant for search, seizure, or arrest of the offender when the sheriff lawfully enters a place of business open to the sheriff as well as other members of the public under an implied invitation to enter, and finds "slot machines" illegally kept by the owner or operator of such place of business. But these powers would not authorize search of private premises of the owner to find slot machines, in the absence of a warrant. Elder v. Camp, 193 Ga. 320, 18 S.E.2d 622 (1942).

Failure of officer to disclose the officer's position places the officer in the same position as a private person when attempting an arrest. Franklin v. Amerson, 118 Ga. 860, 45 S.E. 698 (1903).

Distinctions between arrests by private persons and officers. — See Delegal v. State, 109 Ga. 518, 35 S.E. 105 (1900).

Citizen's arrest by officer outside officer's jurisdiction. — Defendant's admission that the defendant was driving in violation of the law was sufficient to justify an officer, then outside the officer's jurisdiction, to act as a private person and effect a citizen's arrest. Glazner v. State, 170 Ga. App. 810, 318 S.E.2d 233 (1984), but see Zilke v. State, 2016 Ga. LEXIS 422 (Ga. 2016).

Uniformed off-duty officer. — Off-duty officer was treatable as a private citizen vested with the authority to make a citizen's arrest for a battery committed in the officer's presence. Wells v. State, 206 Ga. App. 513, 426 S.E.2d 231 (1992), overruled on other grounds by State v. Burns, 829 S.E.2d 367, 2019 Ga. LEXIS 400 (Ga. 2019).

Charge held harmless. — If the arrest was made without a warrant, and the only basis for the arrest without a warrant was that the crime was being committed in the presence of the person making the arrest, whether the defendant acted as an officer or as a private citizen was immaterial, since the officer's authority as either was the same; therefore, the charge injecting this issue in the case could not have been confusing to the jury or harmful to the defendant. Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Wegner, 90 Ga. App. 267, 83 S.E.2d 58 (1954).

Grounds for suspicion of burglary question for jury. — What are reasonable and probable grounds for suspicion is for the determination of the jury as is whether the circumstantial evidence was sufficient to establish the commission of a burglary. Johnson v. Jackson, 140 Ga. App. 252, 230 S.E.2d 756 (1976).

Unreasonable attempt to arrest with unlicensed semi-automatic weapon. — There was no evidence that the defendant, who murdered the victim with a rifle, was attempting to effect a valid citizen's arrest and, hence, the defendant was not entitled to an involuntary manslaughter charge. It was not reasonable for the defendant to attempt an arrest with a semi-automatic weapon which the defendant was not licensed to carry as deadly force in effecting an arrest is limited to self-defense or to a situation in which it is necessary to prevent a forcible felony. Hayes v. State, 261 Ga. 439, 405 S.E.2d 660 (1991).

Offense Committed in Presence or Within Knowledge

Citizen's duty to arrest during or after crime. — It is not only the right but the duty of a private citizen when a felony is committed to apprehend the felon; and, after a felony is committed, any private person may arrest the felon upon reasonable and probable ground of suspicion of a felon's guilt. Johnson v. Jackson, 140 Ga. App. 252, 230 S.E.2d 756 (1976).

Admission of offense by defendant. — Offense is within the presence of the arresting party when, although the arresting party cannot be cognizant of the offense by means of the arresting party's senses, the defendant actually admits that the offense is in fact being so committed. Moore v. State, 128 Ga. App. 20, 195 S.E.2d 275 (1973).

Admission of an offense by an accused to the arresting party is tantamount to the commission of the offense in the presence of the party making the arrest. Young v. State, 238 Ga. 548, 233 S.E.2d 750 (1977).

"Presence" and "knowledge" synonymous. — Words "in his presence" in former Code 1933, § 27-207 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20) and "within his immediate knowledge" as used in the former provisions (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-60) were synonymous. Piedmont Hotel Co. v. Henderson, 9 Ga. App. 672, 72 S.E. 51 (1911); Novak v. State, 130 Ga. App. 780, 204 S.E.2d 491 (1974); Forehand v. State, 130 Ga. App. 801, 204 S.E.2d 516 (1974).

Crime known by senses is within knowledge. — Phrases "in his presence" and "within his immediate knowledge" are synonymous and a crime is committed in one's presence if by the exercise of any of the person's senses the person has knowledge of the crime's commission. Johnson v. Jackson, 140 Ga. App. 252, 230 S.E.2d 756 (1976).

Presence or knowledge determine arrest legality. — Whether an arrest by a private citizen is lawful depends on whether the offense was committed in the person's presence or within the person's immediate knowledge. Walker v. State, 144 Ga. App. 838, 242 S.E.2d 753 (1978).

Arrest must immediately follow misdemeanor in presence. — Private person may make an arrest for a misdemeanor offense only when that offense occurs in the person's presence and, moreover, the arrest must occur immediately after the perpetration of the offense. McWilliams v. Interstate Bakeries, Inc., 439 F.2d 16 (5th Cir. 1971); Williams v. State, 171 Ga. App. 807, 321 S.E.2d 386 (1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1191, 105 S. Ct. 966, 83 L. Ed. 2d 970 (1985).

No citizen's arrest for city ordinance violation. — Since former Penal Code 1910, § 921 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-60) was a codification of preexisting law, that statute did not authorize a private person to arrest another for a violation of a municipal ordinance committed in the person's presence when the act does not constitute a felony or a misdemeanor. Graham v. State, 143 Ga. 440, 85 S.E. 328, 1917A Ann. Cas. 595 (1915).

Sheriff may arrest without warrant for crime committed in presence. — Like other police officers or private persons, a sheriff has the power to arrest an offender without a warrant if the offense is committed in the sheriff's presence. Elder v. Camp, 193 Ga. 320, 18 S.E.2d 622 (1942).

Private detective may arrest. — Private detective may arrest offenders who commit crimes in the detective's presence. DuPre v. State, 153 Ga. 798, 113 S.E. 428 (1922).

Night watchman may arrest. — A night watchman of a railroad may arrest offenders who commit crimes in the watchman's presence. Hickman v. State, 142 Ga. 630, 83 S.E. 508 (1914).

Railroad officer may arrest. — Officer of a railroad with probable cause may arrest a person to prevent the person from stealing a ride and use reasonable means to prevent the person's escape. Summers v. Southern Ry., 118 Ga. 174, 45 S.E. 27 (1903).

Evidence of lawful arrest. — When the defendant's shoplifting offense was committed in the presence of the food manager, and within the immediate knowledge of the store manager, both were authorized by law to arrest the defendant, and the trial court did not err in refusing to give requested jury instructions regarding the unlawful arrest by a private person and defendant's alleged right to use force to resist the attempted arrest. Merneigh v. State, 242 Ga. App. 735, 531 S.E.2d 152 (2000).

Charge held harmless. — When the arrest was made without a warrant, and the only basis for the arrest without a warrant was that the crime was being committed in the presence of the person making the arrest, whether the defendant acted as an officer or as a private citizen was immaterial, since the person's authority as either was the same; therefore, the charge injecting this issue in the case could not have been confusing to the jury or harmful to the defendant. Atlantic C.L.R.R. v. Wegner, 90 Ga. App. 267, 83 S.E.2d 58 (1954).

Escaped Felons

Citizen may arrest escaped felon on suspicion. — Private person may arrest an escaped felon on probable ground of suspicion without a warrant. Harper v. State, 129 Ga. 770, 59 S.E. 792 (1907).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Officials subject to citizen's arrest. — Any citizen may arrest another person, including sheriffs but not electors, members of the General Assembly, and militiamen, and a coroner, as a private citizen, would be allowed to arrest a sheriff. 1973 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 73-93.

Private citizen may not serve warrant. — While it is true that a private citizen may effect an arrest under this section, only a peace officer has the authority to make an arrest by serving a warrant. 1973 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 73-93.

Private security officer limited to rights of citizen. — Private security officer (not deputized) has the same arrest powers of any private citizens as set forth in this section. 1972 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U72-127.

School security guards. — Power of a public officer to make arrests under former Code 1933, § 27-207 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20) can be conferred solely by law and the State Board of Education was not possessed of any lawful power to make its security guards "officers" within the meaning of that section, or to otherwise confer upon a security guard the arrest powers of a peace officer; the only power to arrest which a security guard employed by the State Board of Education would or could possess under law would be that limited power possessed by a private citizen under former Code 1933, § 27-211. 1978 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 78-3.

Drug inspectors. — Drug inspectors do not have official authority to make arrests nor to carry weapons in the performance of the inspectors' duties; inspectors would not be considered arresting officers. 1962 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 413.

City police officer on college campus. — Municipal police officer may make an arrest upon property under the jurisdiction of the Board of Regents in the officer's private capacity as an individual citizen. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 70-69.

Officer from other state in hot pursuit arresting for municipal violations. — An officer from another state may proceed across the state line into Georgia in hot pursuit of an offender, but when the officer does so the officer assumes the character of a private individual and the officer is not clothed with the authority to make arrests for infractions of municipal ordinances. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 72.

Emergency squad members must be deputized in counties of operation. — Police intelligence unit should provide that members of emergency squads be qualified as de jure deputy sheriffs in all counties in which the squads intend to operate. 1969 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 69-473.

Duties of multi-government emergency squads. — Multi-government emergency squads may combat common disaster, civil disorder, riot, and other emergency situations. 1969 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 69-473.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Analysis

General Consideration
Improper Detention
Delivery

General Consideration

Full adversarial hearing not required. — O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62 does not require that a full adversarial hearing be held following a warrantless arrest, but merely seeks to ensure that an arrest and continuing detention of an accused is reviewed by a neutral factfinder and is satisfied when police obtain an arrest warrant within 48 hours of a valid warrantless arrest. Dean v. State, 250 Ga. 77, 295 S.E.2d 306 (1982); Ellison v. State, 242 Ga. App. 636, 530 S.E.2d 524 (2000).

Person who is arrested and released within the time prescribed by law on an appearance bond is not entitled to a commitment hearing. Watts v. Pitts, 253 Ga. 501, 322 S.E.2d 252 (1984).

Delay due to defendant's request for lab analysis. — Defendant, who was arrested without a warrant, charged with, inter alia, possession of a controlled substance, and confined in the city jail, was deprived of liberty without due process after the defendant requested a lab analysis and, pursuant to the practice of the municipal court, the case was reset, delaying the determination of probable cause until over two months later. Lambert v. McFarland, 612 F. Supp. 1252 (N.D. Ga. 1984).

Justification for temporary imprisonment question for jury. — This section allowed detention for a reasonable time of a person who had been arrested. It was a question for the jury whether the exigencies of the case authorized a temporary imprisonment of the accused. King v. State, 6 Ga. App. 332, 64 S.E. 1001 (1909).

Appeal moot. — Appeal from an arrestee's pretrial habeas corpus petition was moot because the arrestee, who argued that the arrestee had not received a commitment hearing within 48 hours of arrest under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62, had been indicted after filing an appeal; once an indictment had been returned against a defendant, the question of whether a commitment hearing should have been held became moot. Tidwell v. Paxton, 282 Ga. 641, 651 S.E.2d 714 (2007).

Rights not violated. — Although the state failed to carry the state's burden of proving that the defendants knowingly and voluntarily waived the defendants' right to a first appearance hearing under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62, the defendants were not entitled to immediate release on the defendants' own recognizance, regardless of whether the defendants had first appearance and bail hearings within the time allowed by law, because: (1) a magistrate issued arrest warrants for two of the defendants within 48 hours of their arrest, satisfying § 17-4-62; and (2) the state obtained valid arrest warrants for the remaining two defendants either within or outside of the 48 hours after those defendants were arrested, and the remedy for a violation was only available during the period of illegal detention, which ended when the state obtained valid arrest warrants from a neutral and detached magistrate. Capestany v. State, 289 Ga. App. 47, 656 S.E.2d 196 (2007).

Improper Detention

Release under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62 is from custody, not trial. — Requirement that one arrested without a warrant and not conveyed before an officer authorized to issue warrants within 48 hours shall be released means that such person shall be released from imprisonment or custody until a warrant is obtained — not that the person shall be released from trial after the person has been indicted for a crime. Vaughn v. State, 248 Ga. 127, 281 S.E.2d 594 (1981); State v. Cade, 184 Ga. App.

347, 361 S.E.2d 494 (1987).

Exclusionary rule inapplicable. — Court declined to extend the exclusionary rule as a sanction to enforce O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62. Battle v. State, 254 Ga. 666, 333 S.E.2d 599 (1985).

Sanction for violating O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62 is that the defendant shall be released and does not require suppression of evidence gathered in the interim. Chisholm v. State, 231 Ga. App. 835, 500 S.E.2d 14 (1998).

Section cannot justify illegal warrantless arrest. — This section presupposed a legal arrest without a warrant and cannot be used as a basis for legitimatizing an otherwise illegal arrest. Raif v. State, 109 Ga. App. 354, 136 S.E.2d 169 (1964).

Escaped convict cannot be unreasonably detained. Harris v. City of Atlanta, 62 Ga. 290 (1879).

Unreasonable detention makes entire transaction trespass. — Imprisonment or detention beyond the reasonable time not only renders the imprisonment or detention illegal, but makes the entire transaction, including the arrest, a trespass ab initio. Potter v. Swindle, 77 Ga. 419, 3 S.E. 94 (1886); Piedmont Hotel Co. v. Henderson, 9 Ga. App. 672, 72 S.E. 51 (1911); Great Am. Indem. Co. v. Beverly, 150 F. Supp. 134 (M.D. Ga. 1956).

Reason for requiring speedy appearance before judge. — Requirement of taking arrested persons before a judicial officer without delay is in large measure prompted by the knowledge that "the seeds of coercion sprout readily in the earth of illegal detention." Blake v. State, 109 Ga. App. 636, 137 S.E.2d 49, cert. denied, 379 U.S. 924, 85 S. Ct. 281, 13 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1964).

Habeas corpus if delay over 48 hours. — This section controlled time of captivity before a hearing; habeas corpus will lie if the time before a hearing exceeded 48 hours. Hyatt v. State, 134 Ga. App. 703, 215 S.E.2d 698 (1975).

Illegal detention does not void court's jurisdiction. — Although an arresting officer may be liable in damages for false arrest and imprisonment when the officer detains the defendant in an illegal manner, this is ordinarily immaterial so far as the jurisdiction of the court over the defendant is concerned after jurisdiction has been acquired by accusation or indictment, and appearance and pleading by the defendant, in a criminal case. French v. State, 99 Ga. App. 149, 107 S.E.2d 890 (1959).

Illegal detention does not void arrest ab initio. — Provision of this section that a person arrested without a warrant and not conveyed before an officer authorized to issue a warrant within 48 hours "shall be released" means only that the person shall be released from imprisonment or custody until a warrant was obtained; it does not mean that an arrest legally made was rendered void ab initio. Peters v. State, 115 Ga. App. 743, 156 S.E.2d 195 (1967).

Defendant, an arresting deputy, could not assume plaintiff arrestee would make bail as the deputy had a duty under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62 to seek an arrest warrant within 48 hours of arrest, and since it was clearly established at the time that a ten day detention without probable cause violated the Fourth Amendment, the deputy had no qualified immunity on the arrestee's Fourth Amendment claim. Young v. Graham, No. CV 304-066, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20882 (S.D. Ga. Aug. 11, 2005).

Breath test not rendered inadmissible. — This section does not automatically void the legality of the arrest itself in such manner as to render inadmissible the result of a "breathalyzer" test because the test was not a product of a "legal arrest." Hyatt v. State, 134 Ga. App. 703, 215 S.E.2d 698 (1975).

Voluntary confession not rendered inadmissible. — Fact that a person is arrested without a warrant and is not conveyed before an officer authorized to issue a warrant within a reasonable time allowed for the purpose, as required by this section, does not of itself render the person's confession, voluntarily given during the person's unlawful detention, inadmissible in evidence. Blake v. State, 109 Ga. App. 636, 137 S.E.2d 49, cert. denied, 379 U.S. 924, 85 S. Ct. 281, 13 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1964); Dollar v. State, 161 Ga. App. 428, 288 S.E.2d 689 (1982).

Fact that O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62 is not complied with does not of itself render an otherwise voluntary confession inadmissible. McCorquodale v. Balkcom, 525 F. Supp. 408 (N.D. Ga. 1981), aff'd, 721 F.2d 1493 (11th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 954, 104 S. Ct. 2161, 80 L. Ed. 2d 546 (1984).

Confession admissibility state question. — Admissibility of a voluntary confession obtained during an unlawful detention in a state judicial proceeding remains a matter for state determination. Blake v. State, 109 Ga. App. 636, 137 S.E.2d 49, cert. denied, 379 U.S. 924, 85 S. Ct. 281, 13 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1964).

Statements at scene admissible even though made without attorney. — Investigation by police officers at the scene on the officers' arrival, and the defendant's statements to the police, not being tainted by the overtones of coercion incident to prolonged illegal detention, are not objectionable although the defendant may not at that time have had counsel. Dukes v. State, 109 Ga. App. 825, 137 S.E.2d 532 (1964).

Delay in warrant does not require release after indictment. — Provision of this section that a person arrested without a warrant and not conveyed before an officer authorized to issue warrants within 48 hours "shall be released," means that such person shall be released from imprisonment or custody until a warrant is obtained; not that the person shall be released from trial after the person has been indicted for a crime. Blake v. State, 109 Ga. App. 636, 137 S.E.2d 49, cert. denied, 379 U.S. 924, 85 S. Ct. 281, 13 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1964).

Conviction not void after delay. — This section did not require that a prisoner be released after the prisoner had been indicted or after the prisoner has been convicted, despite delaying longer than 48 hours in bringing the accused before an officer for the issuance of a warrant. Donlavey v. Smith, 426 F.2d 800 (5th Cir. 1970).

Failure to hold a commitment hearing within 48 hours as required by this section did not render a conviction invalid nor require the exclusion of evidence. Sanders v. State, 235 Ga. 425, 219 S.E.2d 768 (1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 976, 96 S. Ct. 2177, 48 L. Ed. 2d 800 (1976); Dollar v. State, 161 Ga. App. 428, 288 S.E.2d 689 (1982); Chiasson v. State, 250 Ga. App. 63, 549 S.E.2d 503 (2001).

Effect on verdict. — While the law requires a hearing within 48 hours, nevertheless, a detention or imprisonment beyond a reasonable time does not render the verdict of a jury after indictment illegal or void. Furman v. State, 225 Ga. 253, 167 S.E.2d 628 (1969), rev'd on other grounds, 408 U.S. 238, 92 S. Ct. 2726, 33 L. Ed. 2d 346, vacated in part on other grounds, 229 Ga. 731, 194 S.E.2d 410 (1972).

Reasonableness of time is question of fact. — This section commented that application for a warrant be made without delay, and makes illegal any imprisonment beyond a reasonable time necessary to obtain a warrant. Whether imprisonment was protracted for an unreasonable time under that section was a question of fact. Blake v. State, 109 Ga. App. 636, 137 S.E.2d 49, cert. denied, 379 U.S. 924, 85 S. Ct. 281, 13 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1964).

Time may be unreasonable although under 48 hours. — What is a reasonable time is a question of fact and it may well be less than 48 hours, the statutory outer limit of reasonableness. Dukes v. State, 109 Ga. App. 825, 137 S.E.2d 532 (1964).

Detention overnight is not illegal. Johnson v. Mayor of Americus, 46 Ga. 80 (1872).

Delivery

Delivery to a police officer is insufficient. Ocean S.S. Co. v. Williams, 69 Ga. 251 (1882).

Fugitive from another state must be carried to an officer who can issue a warrant. Lavina v. State, 63 Ga. 513 (1879).

Person arrested on authority of sheriff of another county should be delivered to that sheriff. Manning v. Mitchell, 73 Ga. 660 (1884).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Warrant needed for all state penal law violations. — Laws of Georgia envision that a warrant be issued in all cases involving a violation of the penal laws of the state. 1960-61 Att'y Gen. p. 92.

Drug inspectors do not have official authority to make arrests nor to carry weapons in the performance of the inspectors' duties; inspectors would not be considered arresting officers. 1962 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 413.

Magistrate court may, sua sponte, order the release of arrestees who have been arrested without a warrant and when no warrant has been procured as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-4-26, and also when an individual has been arrested with a warrant, but has not been afforded a first appearance hearing within 72 hours of arrest as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-14.

Probation violators. — If a probation violator is arrested without a warrant, it would be incumbent upon the probation supervisor or other arresting officer to procure a warrant within the 48-hour period of time specified in O.C.G.A. § 17-4-62. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-14.

Waiver. — While it is possible for an individual to waive the individual's statutory right to a "first appearance," in writing, it would be necessary in every instance for a court to ensure that such a waiver is intelligently and competently made, and that the court's findings be made a part of the record of the case. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-14.

Warrant issued only for authorized searches. — Search warrant may be issued only for searches authorized at common law or by statute. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965).

Criminal enterprises not constitutionally protected from government agents. — While U.S. Const., amend. 4 protects reasonable expectations of privacy, and while the use of deception by a government agent to gain access to a protected area may certainly result in an unlawful invasion of that privacy, the Constitution does not protect persons who engage in criminal transactions from the risk that those with whom they choose to do business may be government agents or informants. Shuman v. State, 155 Ga. App. 300, 271 S.E.2d 18 (1980).

When the home is converted into a commercial center to which outsiders are invited for purposes of transacting unlawful business, that business is entitled to no greater sanctity than if the business were carried on in a store, a garage, a car, or on the street. A government agent, in the same manner as a private person, may accept an invitation to do business and may enter upon the premises for the very purposes contemplated by the occupant. Shuman v. State, 155 Ga. App. 300, 271 S.E.2d 18 (1980).

Authorized search when parent with joint access. — Parent's joint access and unhindered control over the room authorized the trial court to conclude that the parent had common authority over the room searched by the officers and a sufficient relationship to the premises to consent to the search. Smith v. State, 264 Ga. 87, 441 S.E.2d 241 (1994).

Incidental Seizure of Unrelated Evidence

General Consideration

Purpose of search and seizure laws is to safeguard the privacy and security of individuals against arbitrary invasion by governmental officials. Thacker v. State, 226 Ga. 170, 173 S.E.2d 186 (1970), vacated on other grounds, 408 U.S. 936, 92 S. Ct. 2861, 33 L. Ed. 2d 753, vacated in part on other grounds, 229 Ga. 731, 194 S.E.2d 410 (1972).

Search incident to arrest. — Officers were authorized under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1 to search the vehicle incident to the defendant's arrest, and the fact that the officers might have expected to find contraband did not lessen the officers' authority to search. Polke v. State, 241 Ga. App. 891, 528 S.E.2d 537 (2000).

Reasonable basis for search. — Without any evidence that an officer had a reasonable basis for concluding that defendant was armed, or posed a threat to the officer's safety, a pat-down search is not authorized and violated the defendant's Fourth Amendment rights. Edgell v. State, 253 Ga. App. 775, 560 S.E.2d 532 (2002).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence of contraband as the defendant's nervous behavior and the fact that the police officer's experience allowed the officer to conclude that where drugs were involved, as was true in the defendant's case, weapons were usually found, made the officer's patdown search of the defendant for weapons permissible and the resulting methamphetamine that was found in defendant's pocket was properly seized since the officer knew exactly what it was when the officer touched it while patting down the defendant. Holmes v. State, 267 Ga. App. 651, 601 S.E.2d 134 (2004).

No not guilty verdict on basis of illegal arrest. — Defendant in a criminal case cannot claim a verdict declaring the defendant to be not guilty on the ground that the defendant was illegally arrested. Morton v. State, 132 Ga. App. 329, 208 S.E.2d 134 (1974).

Standing to contest search. — Defendant has no standing to complain of warrantless search of a stolen automobile. Montgomery v. State, 159 Ga. App. 446, 283 S.E.2d 663 (1981).

Rule governing vehicle searches. — For purposes of searching a vehicle contemporaneously with the lawful arrest of an individual, the state rule is the same as the federal rule. Such a search, legal under federal law, is legal under state law. Daniel v. State, 199 Ga. App. 180, 404 S.E.2d 466 (1991).

"Plain-feel" doctrine only applies when item is immediately apparent as contraband. — Motion to suppress was properly granted when during a Terry pat-down an officer felt a lump in the defendant's coin pocket but during the officer's testimony the officer did not articulate any distinguishing characteristics that would reasonably lead the officer to believe that the object was contraband rather than a legal substance. State v. Henderson, 263 Ga. App. 880, 589 S.E.2d 647 (2003).

Justification for Warrantless Search

Section permits seizure of evidence when lawful arrest effected. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1 permits the discovery and seizure of an instrumentality, or any item, substance, object or thing which is tangible evidence of the commission of the crime, when a lawful arrest has been effected and the search is made in the area of the person's immediate presence. Watkins v. State, 160 Ga. App. 9, 285 S.E.2d 758 (1981).

Since the defendant's warrantless arrest after being found at the home of a friend was justified under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20(a) in connection with the murder of another of defendant's friends and the disappearance of defendant's spouse, a search incident to the arrest pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1(4) permitted the police to search a duffel bag that was on the floor in the bedroom where the defendant was arrested because the bag was in the defendant's "immediate presence" and could be seized and searched for items used in the commission of the crime or crimes. Wright v. State, 276 Ga. 454, 579 S.E.2d 214 (2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1106, 124 S. Ct. 1059, 157 L. Ed. 2d 892 (2004).

Because the police were authorized to seize marijuana found in plain view, seen through the window of an apartment where the police were executing an arrest warrant on another individual, once the defendant answered a knock on the apartment door, police also had the right to search incident to the defendant's arrest for possession of marijuana and based on the exigency of the circumstances; hence, the trial court erred in granting a motion to suppress the marijuana without explaining the court's interpretation of the evidence or ruling on the credibility of the witnesses. State v. Venzen, 286 Ga. App. 597, 649 S.E.2d 851 (2007).

Because an officer had probable cause to arrest the defendant at the scene of an accident for driving without the defendant's driver's license in the defendant's immediate possession, O.C.G.A. § 40-5-29, the officer's search of the defendant's person as the officer placed the defendant in handcuffs and in the squad car was a valid search incident to an arrest pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1; gun evidence seized from the car was admissible because the car was impounded due to being undriveable from the accident. State v. McCloud, 344 Ga. App. 595, 810 S.E.2d 668 (2018), cert. denied, No. S18C0899, 2018 Ga. LEXIS 577 (Ga. 2018).

Section permits seizure of evidence from vehicle compartment when lawful arrest. — When a defendant was pulled over for playing the car radio too loudly in violation of city noise ordinances and the officer noted that the windshield was cracked, and after the officer confirmed by radio that the defendant's license had been suspended, there was probable cause for arrest; because of the lawful arrest and the necessity to impound the defendant's vehicle due to the vehicle's unsafe condition, the officer was authorized to search the passenger compartment. Thus, the trial court properly refused to suppress evidence of contraband on the basis that the evidence stemmed from a pretextual stop unsupported by articulable suspicion or probable cause. Freeman v. State, 195 Ga. App. 357, 393 S.E.2d 496 (1990).

Defendant had standing to raise a challenge to a search of a vehicle in which the defendant was riding as a passenger because the defendant could challenge the prolonged detention and the subsequent vehicle search. However, the taint of the illegal detention was thereafter purged by the intervening arrest of the defendant on outstanding warrants, which then justified the officer's lawful search incident to an arrest and, accordingly, marijuana found in the passenger compartment of the car was not subject to suppression under the principles established by U.S. Const., amend. IV, Ga. Const. Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, or the Georgia Code. State v. Cooper, 260 Ga. App. 333, 579 S.E.2d 754 (2003).

As the defendant was lawfully arrested for traffic violations, the search of the vehicle's passenger compartment incident to that arrest was valid under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1, the Fourth Amendment, and the Georgia Constitution. Garcia v. State, 293 Ga. App. 422, 667 S.E.2d 205 (2008).

Property taken from defendant at sheriff's office. — There was no error in the warrantless search of the shoes taken from the defendant at the sheriff's office and later introduced into evidence. Property which the arrestee elected to take with the arrestee to jail was subject to search under an analysis similar to that allowing search incident to an arrest. Batton v. State, 260 Ga. 127, 391 S.E.2d 914 (1990).

Elements needed to show informer gives probable cause for search. — To establish probable cause (whether for the issuance of a warrant by a magistrate or, under exigent circumstances, for a search without a warrant) three elements are essential: that there is reason to accept an informer's reliability; that the facts are sufficient to show how the informer obtained the information or that the criminal activity is described in such detail as to negate its being a mere rumor; and, that the information is current, not stale. State v. Watts, 154 Ga. App. 789, 270 S.E.2d 52 (1980).

Informer's past reliability versus veracity of current information. — One may act on the information of an informer as to whom the magic phrase "has given reliable information in the past" cannot be applied. An averment of previous reliability is not essential; the question is whether the informant's present information is truthful and reliable. Meneghan v. State, 132 Ga. App. 380, 208 S.E.2d 150 (1974).

Information can come from informer through other police. — Factual information relayed by police to other law enforcement officers is not per se subject to a "double hearsay" objection, the question being whether probable cause is shown. Meneghan v. State, 132 Ga. App. 380, 208 S.E.2d 150 (1974).

Probable cause does not justify invasion of house without proving emergency. — Probable cause, however well founded, can provide no justification for a warrantless intrusion of a person's home absent a showing "that the exigencies of the situation" made that course imperative. Clare v. State, 135 Ga. App. 281, 217 S.E.2d 638 (1975).

When the circumstances are insufficient to warrant an arrest. — Under former Code 1933, § 326-2614 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-11-44), Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 1 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1) did not offer a basis for the officer's warrantless intrusion of the defendant's apartment. Clare v. State, 135 Ga. App. 281, 217 S.E.2d 638 (1975).

Civil protective custody is not a criminal arrest. — Drug evidence found in a defendant's pocket by a police officer who was executing a civil order to apprehend the defendant for a mental health evaluation under O.C.G.A. §§ 37-3-41(a) and 37-7-41(b) should have been suppressed because such an order authorized civil protective custody, not a criminal arrest pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1; because no criminal arrest had taken place based on probable cause, the defendant had not been arrested such that a search incident to an arrest was authorized. Lindsey v. State, 282 Ga. App. 644, 639 S.E.2d 584 (2006).

Reasonable nature of seizure varies with case. — Whether a search and seizure is unreasonable within the meaning of U.S. Const., amend. 4 depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Martasin v. State, 155 Ga. App. 396, 271 S.E.2d 2 (1980) (opinion of Smith, J., concurring specially).

Justification for Warrantless Search (Cont'd)

Reasonable nature of seizure is not determined by ease in getting search warrant. — Practicability of procuring a search warrant is not a sine qua non to the reasonableness of a search. Some flexibility will be accorded law officers. Thomas v. State, 118 Ga. App. 359, 163 S.E.2d 850 (1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 943, 89 S. Ct. 1273, 22 L. Ed. 2d 477 (1969).

Search can be made with consent as well as lawful arrest. — Legal search may be made incident to a lawful arrest or by consent of the owner of the premises or property. Abrams v. State, 223 Ga. 216, 154 S.E.2d 443 (1967).

Prevention of destruction of contraband. — Trial court's finding that an officer's right to search defendant upon arresting the defendant encompassed the right to ask the defendant to empty the defendant's mouth of its contents; furthermore, because the arrest was lawful, the officer was authorized to discover or seize any item that was unlawful to possess, and, even though the officer did not know exactly what was in the defendant's mouth, the officer's suspicion that it may have been an unlawful item was reasonable under the circumstances. Sanders v. State, 247 Ga. App. 170, 543 S.E.2d 452 (2000).

Bloody clothing freely given is admissible evidence. — Bloody sweater and shoes of a defendant who is charged with robbery by intimidation, when voluntarily given to the officer, are admissible and the defendant cannot complain of being compelled to testify against oneself. Moton v. State, 225 Ga. 401, 169 S.E.2d 320 (1969).

Consent after momentary stop with reasonable suspicion not consent after illegal arrest. — When the momentary detention of the defendant's car was "an intrusion short of arrest" and when the officer had "specific and articulable facts" to provoke a "reasonable and founded suspicion," assertions that the consent to search was not valid because consent was given after an illegal arrest were without merit. Huffman v. State, 149 Ga. App. 464, 254 S.E.2d 489, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 918, 100 S. Ct. 236, 62 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1979).

Head of household gives effective consent. — Voluntary consent of the head of a household to the search of premises owned or controlled by such head of the household is sufficient to authorize a search of the premises without a search warrant, and such search does not violate the constitutional prohibition against unreasonable searches and seizures. Montgomery v. State, 155 Ga. App. 423, 270 S.E.2d 825 (1980).

Third party car owner who turns over defendant's suitcases. — If an individual, in whose car defendant's luggage is placed prior to the defendant's arrest, is torn between two unattractive alternatives — keeping the unwanted luggage or turning the luggage over — and finally decides to take a police receipt and give the luggage to the police, the individual's consent is voluntary and effective. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

When the defendant, in making no provision for the luggage, in effect abandons the luggage in an individual's automobile with no undertaking from the individual to keep the luggage, the individual is at best a reluctant bailee, and thus the defendant's argument that the individual has no authority to dispose of the luggage, by turning the luggage over to the police, is clearly erroneous. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Test determining whether consent to search is voluntary is the "totality of the circumstances" under Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 93 S. Ct. 2041, 36 L. Ed. 2d 854 (1973) and United States v. Scott, 578 F.2d 1186 (6th Cir.) cert. denied 439 U.S. 870, 99 S. Ct. 201, 58 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1978); Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Burden on state to show consent. — Whether or not consent to search was freely given is an issue on which the state must carry the burden of proof. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert.

Search for weapons or contraband incident to arrest. — Once defendant has been placed under custodial arrest, police may search the defendant's person, incident to that arrest, for weapons or contraband. Paxton v. State, 160 Ga. App. 19, 285 S.E.2d 741 (1981).

Transcript showed that deputies were conducting a legitimate Terry search of the defendant's jacket for weapons when the cocaine was discovered; therefore, seizure of the cocaine was incident to a lawful arrest. Montoya v. State, 232 Ga. App. 24, 499 S.E.2d 699 (1998).

Because the defendant was handcuffed to ensure the officers' safety after a pistol-like device was found and the handcuffs were removed before the agent spoke with the defendant, the defendant's statement to the agent that the defendant used drugs that evening gave the agent probable cause for the defendant's arrest; the defendant was then searched incident to a lawful arrest. Bond v. State, 271 Ga. App. 849, 610 S.E.2d 609 (2005).

Immediate search of area for weapons. — Officer is entitled to make a reasonable search of the immediate area for weapons. Mobley v. State, 130 Ga. App. 80, 202 S.E.2d 465 (1973), overruled on other grounds, Patterson v. State, 238 Ga. 204, 232 S.E.2d 233 (1977).

Search including area where defendant might reach. — It is reasonable for an officer to search an area surrounding the arrest area into which a suspect might reach to obtain a weapon. Banks v. State, 246 Ga. 178, 269 S.E.2d 450 (1980).

In exigent circumstances, police officers are authorized, pursuant to a lawful arrest, to enter upon the premises and conduct a reasonable search of the suspects' persons and immediate presence, including a search under a piece of furniture where one of the suspects was observed reaching for or disposing of an unknown object, which might reasonably be thought to be either a weapon or evidence. Dennis v. State, 166 Ga. App. 715, 305 S.E.2d 443 (1983).

Weapons within lunging area properly seized. — Trial court properly denies a motion to suppress evidence of weapons found in a box within the arrestee's "lunging area" when the law enforcement officer knew that the arrestee was armed. Smallwood v. State, 166 Ga. App. 247, 304 S.E.2d 95 (1983).

Officer may remove weapons. — It is reasonable that when a lawful arrest is made the arresting officer may remove any weapons that the suspect might seek to use to try to resist arrest or to escape. Banks v. State, 246 Ga. 178, 269 S.E.2d 450 (1980).

If limited "pat down" sufficient, only limited "stop and frisk" allowed. — If a search of a person is conducted pursuant to this section and a limited "pat down" of the person's outer clothing would be sufficient to satisfy the police officer's suspicion that a weapon was being concealed, only a limited "stop and frisk" search is permitted. Merritt v. State, 133 Ga. App. 956, 213 S.E.2d 84 (1975).

Limitations on search incident to arrest. — Except under exigent and unusual circumstances, a search incident to arrest can be held reasonable only for the purposes of preventing the defendant from accessing a weapon or evidence which the defendant may destroy, and this usually limits the search to the defendant's person and clothing, and that very narrow area surrounding the defendant where the defendant might reach even though under restraint. Scott v. State, 122 Ga. App. 204, 176 S.E.2d 481 (1970).

Seizure of instrumentalities used to commit crime. — Instrumentalities used to commit a crime may also be seized during arrest without search warrants. Abrams v. State, 223 Ga. 216, 154 S.E.2d 443 (1967).

Searching entire house to discover occupants and preserve evidence permitted. — Subsequent to warrantless entrance under exigent circumstances, officers were authorized to make a search of the entire house for the limited purpose of securing the house, i.e., discovering the presence of all occupants and eliminating the possibility of harm to the officers and the destruction of evidence. Lentile v. State, 136 Ga. App. 611, 222 S.E.2d 86 (1975).

Officer was entitled to search the defendant's person and immediate presence pursuant to the defendant's valid arrest for marijuana possession, and was further entitled to a limited search of the entire house, and to seizure of cocaine that was spotted in plain view. Jenkins v. State, 223 Ga. App. 486, 477 S.E.2d 910 (1996).

Searching trailer justified when defendant took guns and lied about location. — When a murder had just been committed by the defendant and the defendant retreated to the defendant's trailer with the gun in the defendant's hand and misstated the gun's location upon arrest, the limited immediate search conducted by an officer to find the murder weapon was reasonable and any error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. Moody v. State, 244 Ga. 247, 260 S.E.2d 11 (1979).

Searching house justified if police likely noticed by defendants. — When several persons were in the house before the defendant's arrest, two persons were seen fleeing the house after the defendant's arrest, and the defendant had brought out only a third of the agreed-on sale of marijuana — giving the officers reason to believe that the officers' presence and identity had been detected, and that there was a substantial possibility that the remaining occupant or occupants would attempt to escape or destroy evidence, set up resistance to an eventual entry or plan a desperate flight, a warrantless search was justified. Lentile v. State, 136 Ga. App. 611, 222 S.E.2d 86 (1975).

Evidence of consent sufficient to authorize search of vehicle. — When the state presents evidence of defendant's free and voluntary consent to search the trunk of the defendant's vehicle and of the subsequent creation of probable cause as to the suitcase by defendant's statement to the officers that the suitcase contained marijuana, along with the exigent circumstances arising from the mobility of the automobile, these were circumstances which authorized a warrantless search of the vehicle. Smith v. State, 160 Ga. App. 690, 287 S.E.2d 44 (1981).

With regard to a defendant's convictions for possession of methamphetamine with intent to distribute, possession of a firearm during the commission of a drug offense, and carrying a concealed weapon, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the items seized from the defendant's vehicle and the defendant's person after a traffic stop as the defendant's failure to wear a seatbelt and to have insurance on the vehicle justified the traffic stop. Thereafter, after being released from the traffic stop and being asked to come back, the defendant consented to the search of the vehicle and of the defendant's person, which led to the seizure of the contraband. Hughes v. State, 293 Ga. App. 404, 667 S.E.2d 163 (2008).

Consensual search following lawful warrantless arrest valid. — When the warrantless arrest was legal, the search of the accused's car 30 minutes later with the accused's consent, as an incident to a lawful arrest, was proper. Knighton v. State, 166 Ga. App. 390, 304 S.E.2d 512 (1983).

Search of automobile incident to arrest. — Once passenger was placed under arrest, officer could lawfully search the entire passenger compartment of the defendant's vehicle as a search incident to arrest. Tutu v. State, 252 Ga. App. 12, 555 S.E.2d 241 (2001).

Police officers lawfully arrested the defendant after the officers saw the defendant's companion drive at a high rate of speed and hit a stop sign; furthermore, the officers were allowed to search the car that the defendant's companion was driving after the defendant was arrested, and the trial court erred by suppressing items associated with the use and manufacture of methamphetamine which police found when police searched the car. State v. Lowe, 263 Ga. App. 1, 587 S.E.2d 169 (2003).

Search of the defendant's vehicle incident to the defendant's arrest for driving with a suspended license was not illegal under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1; there was no claim that the defendant was unlawfully arrested, and no violation of a deputy's authority to search incident to the defendant's arrest. Hurley v. State, 287 Ga. App. 482, 651 S.E.2d 748 (2007), cert.

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress as the officers could lawfully search the interior of the defendant's car. A sergeant who had received a report of a speeding car had a reasonable and articulable suspicion of criminal activity having occurred, and after the defendant fled and disobeyed an order to stop, a second officer had probable cause to arrest the defendant for obstruction following which the car interior could be lawfully searched under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1. Spence v. State, 295 Ga. App. 583, 672 S.E.2d 538 (2009).

Seizure of automobile as instrumentality of crime. — When police officers had probable cause to seize an automobile as an instrumentality of crime, a search was made of the automobile contemporaneously with the automobile's seizure, the police had no way of determining who might have access to the vehicle and could remove and destroy the evidence, and the evidence contained in the automobile was in plain view, there was no error in allowing the results of the warrantless search into evidence since the search was reasonable. Collins v. State, 171 Ga. App. 906, 321 S.E.2d 757 (1984).

Officer may search automobile to find and protect evidence. — Officer at the time of a lawful custodial arrest may, without a warrant, make a full search of the accused, a limited area within the control of the person arrested, and of the automobile in the person's possession at the scene of the arrest for the discovery and preservation of criminal evidence. Stoker v. State, 153 Ga. App. 871, 267 S.E.2d 295 (1980).

If probable cause justifies a search of a lawfully stopped vehicle, it justifies the search of every part of the vehicle and the vehicle's contents that may conceal the object of the search; contraband lawfully discovered and seized from the passenger area of a vehicle furnishes probable cause for believing that more contraband is contained in the vehicle. Medlin v. State, 168 Ga. App. 551, 309 S.E.2d 639 (1983); Watson v. State, 190 Ga. App. 696, 379 S.E.2d 817 (1989), overruled on other grounds, Berry v. State, 248 Ga. App. 874, 547 S.E.2d 664 (2001), overruled on other grounds, Bius v. State, 254 Ga. App. 634, 563 S.E.2d 527 (2002).

Warrantless search of an automobile glove compartment was justified for the purpose of attempting to find a robbery weapon which was not found on the defendant's person at the time of arrest since the defendant was in the vehicle when the defendant was arrested for armed robbery. Cain v. State, 178 Ga. App. 247, 342 S.E.2d 742 (1986).

When a driver was lawfully arrested for operating a car without a license and for not having proof of insurance, a police officer did not exceed the permissible scope of a search incident to arrest when the officer searched the car. Vega v. State, 236 Ga. App. 319, 512 S.E.2d 65 (1999).

Evidence insufficient for arrest and evidence seized required suppression. — Because the circumstances of the defendant's low-speed flight from an uniformed detective, who was driving an unmarked vehicle, were insufficient to present law enforcement with evidence of a particular crime, the defendant could not be charged with the crime of attempting to elude an officer, and the police lacked probable cause sufficient to warrant an arrest for the offense; thus, the search incident to the arrest was invalid, warranting suppression of the evidence seized. Stephens v. State, 278 Ga. App. 694, 629 S.E.2d 565 (2006).

Search of automobile for proof of intoxication. — Search of a vehicle is proper for the purpose of obtaining evidence of the basis of a suspect's intoxication. Stoker v. State, 153 Ga. App. 871, 267 S.E.2d 295 (1980); State v. Holden, 162 Ga. App. 33, 290 S.E.2d 130 (1982); State v. Elliott, 205 Ga. App. 345, 422 S.E.2d 58 (1992).

If a person is lawfully arrested for driving under the influence of any substance, the officer may conduct a warrantless search of the passenger compartment of the vehicle for the purpose of obtaining evidence of intoxication as an incident to that lawful arrest. Knox v. State, 216 Ga. App. 90, 453 S.E.2d 120 (1995).

Abandoned vehicle was searchable. — Although after committing a traffic violation the defendant attempted to evade arrest so that the defendant's vehicle was no longer in the defendant's immediate presence when the defendant was arrested, that fact did not deprive the officer of authority to search the vehicle. State v. Nichols, 225 Ga. App. 609, 484 S.E.2d 507 (1997).

Police have probable cause to believe that car contains contraband. — Automobile in which contraband goods are concealed and transported may be searched without a warrant provided the police have probable cause for believing that the automobile contains the contraband. Still v. State, 149 Ga. App. 792, 256 S.E.2d 133 (1979).

Rationale for search of automobile without warrant. — Automobile in which contraband goods are concealed and transported may be searched without a warrant provided the police have probable cause for believing that the automobile which the police search contains the contraband. The reason for this rule is obvious. An automobile, unlike a home or place of business, is mobile and can be quickly moved out of the locality or jurisdiction; therefore, a search without a warrant is allowed when it is impractical to obtain a warrant. Meneghan v. State, 132 Ga. App. 380, 208 S.E.2d 150 (1974).

Search of automobile and closed container therein. — Broad scope of authority granted to police officers in conducting searches of automobiles pursuant to the search incident to arrest exception extends to the entire passenger compartment of the automobile and any closed containers therein. Bagwell v. State, 214 Ga. App. 15, 446 S.E.2d 739 (1994).

Probable cause needed to search and seize moving vehicle. — One of the exigent circumstances justifying a warrantless search is a situation where there is a seizure and search of a moving vehicle, and when the vehicle is indeed moving there is only the requirement that the search and seizure be based upon sufficient probable cause. State v. Watts, 154 Ga. App. 789, 270 S.E.2d 52 (1980).

Police may search car later at station house. — Police officers with probable cause to search an automobile on the scene where it was stopped may constitutionally do so later at the station house without first obtaining a warrant. Shaw v. State, 149 Ga. App. 853, 256 S.E.2d 150 (1979).

Impoundment of car when occupants arrested. — When occupants of a car are arrested, and no one remains to take custody of the car, which has been stopped in a traffic lane, the police are authorized to impound the car, and a resultant inventory is proper. Hansen v. State, 168 Ga. App. 304, 308 S.E.2d 643 (1983).

Limited stop when there is articulable suspicion. — Limited stop by police officers when there is an articulable suspicion is permissible even though no probable cause exists. Smith v. State, 160 Ga. App. 690, 287 S.E.2d 44 (1981).

Permissible extent of momentary stop. — Investigatory stop is a brief stop, limited in time to that minimally necessary to investigate the allegation invoking suspicion, and limited in scope to identification, licensing of a driver and a vehicle if appropriate, a protective "pat down" of the outer surface of clothing for weapons if the officer has reasonable apprehension that the person is armed or dangerous, and questioning reasonably related to the circumstances that justified the initiation of the momentary stop. Clinkscale v. State, 158 Ga. App. 597, 281 S.E.2d 341 (1981).

Articulable suspicion less than probable cause. — Articulable suspicion is less than probable cause to make an arrest or conduct a search, but must be more than mere caprice or arbitrary harassment. Clinkscale v. State, 158 Ga. App. 597, 281 S.E.2d 341 (1981).

Specific and articulable suspicion found. — When, based on the information received from an informant, as well as the officer's own observations, the officer had specific and articulable facts which reasonably warranted a stop of the defendant's vehicle, because the defendant had been identified as a possible suspect in the distribution of illegal drugs, there was sufficient articulable suspicion for the officer to temporarily detain and question the defendant and, after the defendant's arrest, to search the defendant for weapons and contraband. Johnson v. State, 246 Ga. App. 197, 540 S.E.2d 212 (2000).

Search without warrant or seizure before seeing magistrate both justified with probable cause. — For constitutional purposes, there is no difference between on the one hand seizing and holding a car before presenting the probable cause issue to a magistrate and on the other hand carrying out an immediate search without a warrant; given probable cause to search, either course is reasonable under U.S. Const., amend. 4. State v. Watts, 154 Ga. App. 789, 270 S.E.2d 52 (1980).

Warrantless arrest for fleeing. — Flight accompanied by other suspicious circumstances will sometimes authorize a warrantless arrest even though the officers do not at the time know that the particular crime for which the arrestee is brought to trial has been committed. Morton v. State, 132 Ga. App. 329, 208 S.E.2d 134 (1974).

Search based on outstanding arrest warrant. — Marijuana found in a search of the defendant incident to the defendant's arrest was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 because a police dispatcher's statement to an officer that there was an outstanding arrest warrant for the defendant provided the probable cause necessary to arrest the defendant and, as a consequence, the search incident to the arrest was lawful under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1. State v. Edwards, 307 Ga. App. 267, 704 S.E.2d 816 (2010).

Searching car stopped for traffic violation without further suspicion. — If a defendant, while operating an automobile, runs a stop light upon entering a state highway, in the presence of a state police officer, who immediately arrests the defendant for that offense and searches the automobile without the consent of the defendant, and the police officer gives as the officer's only reason for searching the automobile that it was the officer's usual practice to search stopped cars, and no other reason appears from the evidence on a hearing upon a motion to suppress, such a search is unreasonable and illegal. Rowland v. State, 117 Ga. App. 577, 161 S.E.2d 422 (1968).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence that a police officer gathered incident to a traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle as the officer was justified in stopping the defendant's vehicle because the officer observed the defendant weave substantially outside the defendant's lane of travel, which was a traffic violation that permitted the officer to stop the defendant's vehicle. Spence v. State, 263 Ga. App. 377, 587 S.E.2d 766 (2003).

Warrantless automobile search must be reasonable. — If search of an automobile is made by a police officer without a warrant, the test of the search's legality is whether the search was reasonable. Meneghan v. State, 132 Ga. App. 380, 208 S.E.2d 150 (1974).

Violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-5-33 did not justify the defendant's continued detention by the police and the officer's decision to detain the defendant while the officer waited for another officer to bring a written warning book was unreasonable; thus, under the totality of the circumstances, the officer did not have specific, articulable facts that could constitute a particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was involved in any criminal activity thereby making the search unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment and requiring suppression of the evidence seized from the vehicle. Bennett v. State, 285 Ga. App. 796, 648 S.E.2d 126 (2007).

Reasonableness is question for trial judge, not appellate court. — Reasonableness is not determined by the hindsight of appellate court judges after weeks of academic deliberation; it is determined by the foresight of the officer on the scene who must act in the public interest in a very short space of time. The reasonableness of the officer's action must be judged in relation to the circumstances then existing and is in the first instance a question for the trial judge to determine. Meneghan v. State, 132 Ga. App. 380, 208 S.E.2d 150 (1974).

Incidental Seizure of Unrelated Evidence

Motive for search under section immaterial. — Whenever a search is made pursuant to Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, §§ 1 and 2 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-5-1 and 17-5-2), the motive for the search is irrelevant. Carson v. State, 241 Ga. 622, 247 S.E.2d 68 (1978).

Right to search based on officer's reasonable belief, not right to arrest. — Right to search and the validity of the seizure are not dependent on the right to arrest. They are dependent on the reasonable cause the seizing officer has for the belief that the contents of the automobile offend the law. Meneghan v. State, 132 Ga. App. 380, 208 S.E.2d 150 (1974).

Officer needs only probable cause to believe articles stolen. — Law does not require knowledge by the officer seizing articles subsequent to an arrest that the articles have been stolen. Probable cause to believe the articles have been stolen is sufficient. Boyd v. State, 133 Ga. App. 136, 210 S.E.2d 251 (1974).

Items in plain view giving probable cause to believe crime occurring. — When articles are in plain view without a search and are in sufficient connection with the totality of the circumstances to constitute probable cause for the belief that a crime is being committed in the police officers' presence, the arrest is valid and the search incident thereto is reasonable. Anderson v. State, 123 Ga. App. 57, 179 S.E.2d 286 (1970).

Plain view. — Officers are not required to ignore articles that are in plain view and readily observable and seizure of the articles under these circumstances does not make the articles the fruit of an unlawful search since, being in plain view, no search is involved. Scott v. State, 122 Ga. App. 204, 176 S.E.2d 481 (1970).

"Plain view" doctrine will support a warrantless search and seizure if the agents are lawfully in a position to obtain the view, the discovery is inadvertent, and the object viewed is immediately seen to be incriminating. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Trial court did not err by limiting the admissibility of admissible items in a defendant's felony murder trial to those items seized incident to the defendant's arrest in the early morning hours and in plain view during the processing of the crime scene as an approximately 15-minute video recording of the premises, which was viewed by the trial court, supported the officers' testimony that guns, shell casings, significant amounts of cash, and items appearing to be crack cocaine were all in plain view and, under the circumstances, presented probable cause as being contraband or evidence of the crime of the felony murder of an officer. Fair v. State, 284 Ga. 165, 664 S.E.2d 227 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the tennis shoes and jeans found in the defendant's motel room with blood on them and the results of the DNA tests showing that the victims' blood was found on them because a Georgia Bureau of Investigation agent lawfully seized the shoes and clothes under the plain view doctrine, and the agent seized the shoes and clothes during the execution of the search warrant as the agent knew at the time of the seizure, based on the agent's training and experience, that shoes and clothes worn by the suspect could be evidence of the crimes being investigated. Saffold v. State, 298 Ga. 643, 784 S.E.2d 365 (2016).

Entry based on exception to warrant requirement. — If the initial intrusion that brings the police within plain view of an article is supported, not by a warrant, but by one of the recognized exceptions to the warrant requirement, the seizure is also legitimate. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Warrantless search and seizure when sheriff given entry by defendant's spouse. — If evidence establishes that a warrantless arrest and seizure were unrelated as when a sheriff who seized the items in question was permitted inside defendant's home by a person identified as defendant's spouse, and the items seized were either in plain view or voluntarily given to the sheriff, the evidence does not show a seizure pursuant to an illegal warrantless arrest that should be suppressed. Dickerson v. State, 151 Ga. App. 429, 260 S.E.2d 535 (1979).

If officer's presence is lawful, plain view doctrine applies. — If a police officer has a right to be in the position from which an object is seen lying in plain view, the object is admissible as evidence. Dennis v. State, 166 Ga. App. 715, 305 S.E.2d 443 (1983).

There was evidence that when police officers entered the hotel room, the officers saw a pistol butt protruding from under the pillow on which the defendant was lying, clearly within arm's reach, therefore, the introduction of the pistol at trial was not suppressed, although the officers had an arrest warrant for the defendant and not a search warrant for the room. Majors v. State, 203 Ga. App. 139, 416 S.E.2d 156 (1992).

Seizure of fruits of crime within plain view. — In a trial for murder and armed robbery, the trial court did not err in refusing to suppress items seized in the room where the defendant was arrested, which were believed to be clothing belonging to the victim, as the items were possible fruits of the crime and were within plain view of the officers at the time of the arrest. Batton v. State, 260 Ga. 127, 391 S.E.2d 914 (1990).

Police may seize evidence not specifically in warrant. — When peace officers entered a defendant's residence with an arrest warrant and a search warrant, arrested the defendant and searched the premises, certain articles in plain view having strong evidentiary value as to the crimes charged are not subject to a motion to suppress although not specifically named in the search warrant. Scott v. State, 122 Ga. App. 204, 176 S.E.2d 481 (1970).

Offense influences what objects incidentally seizable. — Nature of the offense for which the accused is arrested has an important bearing upon what objects may be seized as incidental to the arrest. Abrams v. State, 223 Ga. 216, 154 S.E.2d 443 (1967); Scott v. State, 122 Ga. App. 204, 176 S.E.2d 481 (1970).

Seizure of marijuana is valid when the defendant is arrested for driving under the influence and police officers are searching the defendant's automobile for the source of the defendant's intoxication. Howe v. State, 132 Ga. App. 840, 209 S.E.2d 258 (1974).

Because the underlying crime that was the basis for issuance of an arrest warrant involved threatening a person in an attempt to obtain firearms, officers were justified in searching the bedroom where the defendant was arrested for weapons and any confederates or other persons who might pose a danger to the officers. Powell v. State, 245 Ga. App. 796, 538 S.E.2d 857 (2000).

"Papers" not immune from searches. — There is nothing inherent in "papers" which immunizes the papers from searches otherwise proper under U.S. Const., amend. 4. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Obviously sexually oriented materials not immune if no warrant. — Since the sexually oriented materials offered for sale and seized were obviously for the primary purpose of stimulation of human genital organs in violation of former Code 1933, § 26-2101 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-12-80) and the materials were in plain view to the officers in a lawful position to view and see the materials, no warrant was necessary to make a lawful seizure. Ball v. State, 149 Ga. App. 270, 253 S.E.2d 886 (1979).

Shotgun in plain view following armed robbery not immune if no warrant. — When officers were advised following a robbery of the description of the robber and details of the robbery, upon finding the suspect and the suspect's car, no search warrant was necessary as the shotgun was in plain view and the alleged shotgun had been used in the robbery. Duffey v. State, 151 Ga. App. 673, 261 S.E.2d 421 (1979).

Weapon discovered in vehicle. — Search of defendant's vehicle, after the defendant had been arrested for a traffic violation, resulting in the discovery of a .38 caliber revolver "stuffed down" between the front seat and the console, was justified as a search incident to a lawful arrest. Daniel v. State, 199 Ga. App. 180, 404 S.E.2d 466 (1991).

Police may not open closed containers without warrant. — Once officers are entitled to go throughout the house for the limited purpose of securing the house, the officers are free to seize the marijuana in plain sight on the bed and in open suitcases. The officers are not authorized to open up closed containers or otherwise discover contraband which is not in plain view, and this is true whether the officers are conducting the warrantless search incident to the lawful arrest of the occupants or under the exigencies of the situation. Lentile v. State, 136 Ga. App. 611, 222 S.E.2d 86 (1975).

Search of the area within arrested person's "immediate presence" did not mean that a search of the defendant's bedroom closets and dresser drawers was justified as a "search incident to arrest" when the defendant was arrested in the kitchen. Brannon v. State, 231 Ga. App. 847, 500 S.E.2d 597 (1998).

Warrant required for search of house when all occupants detained. — After it is determined that all of the occupants of the house plus the defendant are in custody, no exigency exists which would justify a general search of the entire house. At that point, the officers could and should procure a search warrant to discover whatever contraband or other evidence may be on the premises, not in plain view. Lentile v. State, 136 Ga. App. 611, 222 S.E.2d 86 (1975).

Items in plain view during routine inventory search of vehicle. — When a driver is arrested and removed from the driver's vehicle, and the vehicle is on a highway or other public property, and there is no third person present to whom it is or might properly be turned over, or for some other sufficient reason a decision to impound it is properly made, and when in connection with such impoundment an "inventory search" is a recognized and routine procedure, contraband which appears in plain view in the course of such inventory is properly seized, and may be introduced in evidence. Martasin v. State, 155 Ga. App. 396, 271 S.E.2d 2 (1980).

Police may itemize the vehicle's property. — When the police take custody of any sort of container such as an automobile, it is reasonable to search the container to itemize the property to be held by the police. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980).

Inventory search requires no warrant or probable cause. — In circumstances involving noncriminal inventory searches, when probable cause to search is irrelevant, search warrants are not required, linked as the warrant requirement textually is to the probable-cause concept. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980).

Inventory searches have two purposes: to protect the vehicle and the property in the vehicle, and to safeguard the police or other officers from claims of lost possessions. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980); Thompson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 101, 270 S.E.2d 313 (1980).

Inventory not just to protect property. — Police seizure and inventory is not dependent for its validity upon the absolute necessity for the police to take charge of property to preserve the property. The police are permitted to take charge of property under broader circumstances than that. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980).

Inventory also permissible to protect police from danger. — An inventory search serves three distinct purposes: the protection of personal property; the protection of the police against claims arising from property allegedly lost or stolen; and the protection of the police from possible danger. Gaston v. State, 155 Ga. App. 337, 270 S.E.2d 877 (1980).

Routine searches when cars impounded permitted by U.S. Const., amend. 4. — When vehicles are impounded, police routinely follow caretaking procedures by securing and inventorying the cars' contents. These procedures have been widely sustained as reasonable under U.S. Const., amend. 4. Martasin v. State, 155 Ga. App. 396, 271 S.E.2d 2 (1980).

Impound search of the automobile in an armed robbery trial was not illegal as it followed defendant's arrest by an undercover officer. Smith v. State, 151 Ga. App. 697, 261 S.E.2d 439 (1979).

Inventory search rationale must inhere in decision to seize and inventory. — Unless the rationale for an inventory search inheres in the decision to seize and inventory, the impoundment itself may be unreasonable and the resulting inventory search invalid. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980).

Seizure of marijuana legal during arrest for forgery. — When arresting officer acted with reasonable caution in believing that the appellant was involved in the forgery scheme being perpetrated on a bank, marijuana which fell from the appellant's hand was lawfully seized incident to the appellant's arrest. Denson v. State, 159 Ga. App. 713, 285 S.E.2d 69 (1981).

Inventory search proper when defendant allows car to be driven to police station. — After the lawful initial stop and arrest of the defendant, the subsequent inventory search of the defendant's automobile, which revealed additional contraband, was proper when the defendant made no request that someone be called to retrieve the vehicle but, instead, voluntarily acquiesced to an officer's driving the automobile to the police station where the vehicle would be impounded. Kilgore v. State, 158 Ga. App. 55, 279 S.E.2d 239 (1981).

Evidence of traffic violation justifies search. — If there was probative evidence that the defendant was driving in excess of the lawful speed limit, there was evidence from which the trial court could reasonably conclude that the police officer did not overstep the officer's bounds in stopping the defendant, arresting the defendant for a traffic violation, and conducting a protective search of the immediate vicinity of the defendant's automobile. Kilgore v. State, 158 Ga. App. 55, 279 S.E.2d 239 (1981).

If a police officer stopped the defendant's car for having an improper tag, determined that the defendant appeared intoxicated and arrested the defendant, the search of the defendant's car was proper, and cocaine found during the search was seized lawfully. It was not error to deny the defendant's motion to suppress. Lewis v. State, 195 Ga. App. 59, 392 S.E.2d 563 (1990).

Evidence of other crimes found in container during search for marijuana. — When officers were lawfully conducting a search for marijuana in the house when the officers found a closed container with unknown contents apparently stored or hidden in the attic, the officers had the right to open any receptacle that could reasonably hold the substance or thing being sought and to discover or seize any item, substance, object, thing, or matter, the possession of which is unlawful or which is tangible evidence of the commission of a crime in the State of Georgia. Whittington v. State, 165 Ga. App. 763, 302 S.E.2d 617 (1983).

Admission into evidence of substances contained within boxes and envelopes found on the defendant's person during a search incident to the defendant's arrest for a violation of the Georgia Controlled Substances Act, O.C.G.A. § 16-13-1 et seq., is not error. Dasher v. State, 166 Ga. App. 237, 304 S.E.2d 87 (1983).

Search of bag not incident to arrest. — Trial court properly suppressed evidence gathered in connection with a warrantless search of a bag owned by the defendant after the defendant's arrest at a friend's house. The search was not incident to the defendant's arrest under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1 as the defendant was already secured in a patrol car and there was no contention that the bag was related to the outstanding warrant on which the defendant had been arrested; the consent given by the defendant's friend to the search of the friend's home did not override the privacy interest that the defendant, a visitor, had in the bag; and there was no testimony that the bag was searched as part of an inventory of the defendant's personal effects. State v. McCarthy, 288 Ga. App. 426, 654 S.E.2d 239 (2007).

General Consideration

Jury instructions. — There was no showing the trial court erred in failing to give the defendant's written request to charge the language of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-2 regarding the defendant's right to an inventory of property seized from the defendant at the time of arrest when the defendant did not suggest how the defendant was harmed by the trial court's failure to give the defendant's written request. Ingram v. State, 211 Ga. App. 821, 441 S.E.2d 74 (1994).

Cited in Touchstone v. State, 121 Ga. App. 602, 174 S.E.2d 450 (1970); Gunter v. State, 182 Ga. App. 548, 356 S.E.2d 276 (1987).

Inventory Search Rationale

This section relates only to search without a warrant. Williams v. State, 125 Ga. App. 170, 186 S.E.2d 756 (1971).

Noncriminal inventory searches do not involve probable cause. — In circumstances involving noncriminal inventory searches, when probable cause to search is irrelevant, search warrants are not required, linked as the warrant requirement textually is to the probable cause concept. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980).

Seizure of observable item permitted through exception to warrant requirement. — When the initial intrusion that brings the police within plain view of an article is supported, not by a warrant, but by one of the recognized exceptions to the warrant requirement, the seizure is also legitimate. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

"Plain view" doctrine will support warrantless search and seizure if the agents are lawfully in a position to obtain the view, the discovery is inadvertent, and the object viewed is immediately seen to be incriminating. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Discovery of death note during reasonable search. — When police officers acting in good faith and while carrying out an inventory procedure without investigative intent, discovered and read a "death note" contained in the defendant's open ended shopping bag, the search was deemed reasonable and, therefore, was not violative of the defendant's rights under U.S. Const., amend. 4. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Second glance doctrine. — When one officer pursuant to a valid and proper inventory read and called attention to a "death note" found in the defendant's possessions and since the discovery and disclosure of the note were appropriate police actions, the subsequent acts of other officers, in rereading and perusing the documents in question were plainly justified under the "second glance doctrine." Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

"Papers" not immune from searches. — There is nothing inherent in

"papers" which immunizes the papers from searches otherwise proper under U.S. Const., amend. 4. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Suspicion of contraband does not invalidate search. — Inventory rationale is one which may be abused and stretched to cover unnecessary searches; but even some suspicion that contraband will be found will not avoid an otherwise valid inventory search. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Failure to give defendant inventory does not invalidate search. — When the circumstances authorized a warrantless search, the failure to make an inventory, being merely a ministerial act, did not affect the validity of the search and the arrest. Williams v. State, 125 Ga. App. 170, 186 S.E.2d 756 (1971).

Failure to furnish the defendant an inventory of the items taken from the defendant's home does not establish that an unlawful search and seizure took place or that this evidence is inadmissible. Such failure is a ministerial act and does not affect the validity of the search. Carter v. State, 232 Ga. 654, 208 S.E.2d 474 (1974).

Failure to give defendant inventory does not exclude evidence. — Failure to furnish a defendant with the inventory required by this section does not operate to exclude the recovered evidence from the trial. United States v. Baty, 486 F.2d 240 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 942, 94 S. Ct. 1948, 40 L. Ed. 2d 294 (1974).

Failure to give inventory or follow other procedures does not necessarily suppress evidence. — When the executing officers give the defendant an inventory of the items seized, the officers' failure to deliver a similar inventory to the magistrate issuing the warrant as required by Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 2 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-2) and a return thereof on the warrant as required by Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 2 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-29) and a delivery to the sheriff of the items seized and a report to the commissioner of revenue are not cause for the suppression of the evidence. Holloway v. State, 134 Ga. App. 498, 215 S.E.2d 262 (1975).

Failure to provide the defendant with an inventory as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-2 provides no basis for suppressing the inventory at trial. Ingram v. State, 211 Ga. App. 821, 441 S.E.2d 74 (1994).

Failure to furnish inventory is ministerial act. — Seizure of evidence is not made invalid when the sheriff fails to make a written inventory as required by this section since failure to furnish an inventory to a defendant is a ministerial act and does not affect the validity of the search and seizure. Carson v. State, 241 Ga. 622, 247 S.E.2d 68 (1978).

Ministerial act does not affect rights of defendant. — That the making and filing of an inventory pursuant to Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 2 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-2) is merely a ministerial act not affecting the substantive rights of an accused is borne out by the fact that failure to file an inventory is not a ground for a motion to suppress under the provisions of Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30). Williams v. State, 125 Ga. App. 170, 186 S.E.2d 756 (1971).

Custodial seizures and accompanying inventory searches are reasonable. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Standard police practice required for reasonable custodial seizure. — Inventory searches are reasonable if conducted in accordance with standard police practice. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979); Gaston v. State, 155 Ga. App. 337, 270 S.E.2d 877 (1980).

Reasonable to search car to itemize contents. — When the police take custody of any sort of container such as an automobile it is reasonable to search the container to itemize the property to be held by the police. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980).

Custody of arrestee's property for safekeeping. — Fourth Amendment is not violated when police take custody of property of persons the police arrest to store that property for safekeeping.

Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Motive immaterial for search under section. — Whenever a search is made pursuant to Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, §§ 1 and/or 2 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1 and/or § 17-5-2) the motive for the search is irrelevant. Carson v. State, 241 Ga. 622, 247 S.E.2d 68 (1978).

Inventory must not be done with investigative intent, but it should be incident to the caretaking function of the police. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Inventory searches have two purposes: to protect the vehicle and the property in the vehicle, and to safeguard the police or other officers from claims of lost possessions. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980); Thompson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 101, 270 S.E.2d 313 (1980).

Inventory not just to protect property. — Police seizure and inventory is not dependent for its validity upon the absolute necessity for the police to take charge of property to preserve the property. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979); Thompson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 101, 270 S.E.2d 313 (1980).

Inventory can be for broader reason than just to protect property. — Police seizure and inventory is not dependent for its validity upon the absolute necessity for the police to take charge of property to preserve the property. The police are permitted to take charge of property under broader circumstances than that. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980); Thompson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 101, 270 S.E.2d 313 (1980).

Inventory justified in order to protect police from danger. — Only so long as the scope of the search is reasonable, taking into consideration the three interests to be protected by the inventory (the protection of the owner's property while property remains in police custody; the protection of police against claims or disputes over lost or stolen property; and the protection of the police from potential danger), will the search be held to be a constitutionally permissible intrusion. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Inventory not at prisoner's discretion. — Inventory is not for the exclusive protection of the owner, but also serves to protect the police and, therefore, it is not necessary that police ask a prisoner whether the prisoner wants personal items to be inventoried. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Accused need not be present for inventory search. — There is no requirement for the accused's presence during a routine inventory of valuables in an impounded car done in accordance with Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 2. Carson v. State, 241 Ga. 622, 247 S.E.2d 68 (1978).

Seizure of car not part of crime permitted even when not threat to public. — Any inference from the language in both Dunkum v. State, 138 Ga. App. 321, 226 S.E.2d 133 (1976) and State v. McCranie, 137 Ga. App. 369, 223 S.E.2d 765 (1976) suggesting that seizure and inventorying of an automobile not involved in an offense against the law may be justified only when the automobile poses some threat to the traveling public, such as impeding the roadway, is mistaken. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Impoundment may be illegal. — Even though the decision to seize and inventory need not be based upon the absolute necessity to do so, unless the rationale for an inventory search inheres in the decision to seize and inventory, the impoundment itself may be unreasonable and the resulting inventory search invalid. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980); Thompson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 101, 270 S.E.2d 313 (1980).

Consent to General Searches

Test of consent is totality of circumstances. — Test as to whether or not consent to search was freely given is the "totality of the circumstances" under

Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 93 S. Ct. 2041, 36 L. Ed. 2d 854 (1973) and United States v. Scott, 578 F.2d 1186 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 870, 99 S. Ct. 201, 58 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1978). Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Burden on state to show consent voluntary. — Whether or not consent to search was freely given is an issue on which the state must carry the burden of proof. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Third-party car owner who gives defendant's luggage to police does so voluntarily. — When an individual, in whose car defendant's luggage was placed prior to the defendant's arrest, is torn between two unattractive alternatives — keeping the unwanted luggage or turning the luggage over — and finally decides to take a police receipt and gives the luggage to the police, the individual's consent is voluntary and effective. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Abandonment of defendant's suitcase in owner's automobile. — When the defendant, in making no provision for the luggage, in effect abandons the luggage in an individual's automobile with no undertaking from the individual to keep the luggage, the individual is at best a reluctant bailee, and thus the defendant's argument that the individual has no authority to dispose of the luggage, by turning the luggage over to the police, is clearly erroneous. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Seizure of defendant's luggage from another's car for protective custody. — When an officer requests and seizes the defendant's luggage, as a protective custody action, from an individual in whose automobile the luggage had been placed prior to the defendant's arrest, the officer's acts are not improper and issues of probable cause and time to obtain a warrant do not arise. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

17-5-20. Requirements for issuance of search warrant generally.

(a) A search warrant may be issued only upon the application of an officer of this state or its political subdivisions charged with the duty of enforcing the criminal laws or a currently certified peace officer engaged in the course of official duty, whether said officer is employed by a law enforcement unit of:

(1) The state or a political subdivision of the state; or

(2) A university, college, or school.

(b) A search warrant shall not be issued upon the application of a private citizen or for his aid in the enforcement of personal, civil, or property rights.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Only a law enforcement officer may successfully apply for a search warrant. Holstein v. State, 183 Ga. App. 610, 359 S.E.2d 360, cert. denied, 183 Ga. App. 906, 359 S.E.2d 360 (1987).

When the officer who obtains a search warrant is not a certified police officer, the officer has no authority to obtain a search warrant, and evidence obtained as a result of that warrant is inadmissible. Rottenberg v. State, 184 Ga. App. 331, 361 S.E.2d 533 (1987).

Lack of certification precluding application. — Noncompliance with the conditions of O.C.G.A. Ch. 8, T. 35, by the express terms of O.C.G.A. § 35-8-17(a), renders the exercise of any powers of a law enforcement officer unauthorized. Thus, due to an officer's lack of certification, the officer had no authority to apply for a search warrant, and the evidence seized pursuant to the execution of the illegal warrant should have been suppressed. Holstein v. State, 183 Ga. App. 610, 359 S.E.2d 360, cert. denied, 183 Ga. App. 906, 359 S.E.2d 360 (1987).

Warrant application. — City of Atlanta police officer, who is also a deputy sheriff of Fulton County, has the authority to apply for, obtain, and execute a search warrant in Clayton County. Bruce v. State, 183 Ga. App. 653, 359 S.E.2d 736 (1987).

Absence of signature on affidavit did not invalidate search warrant. — Absence of a signature on the affidavit left in the magistrate court's file did not invalidate a search warrant for vehicles because there were multiple original affidavits, only one of which was unsigned, and the warrant actually served contained the affiant's signature; the affiant explained that the affiant took three identical search warrants to the magistrate, that the affiant signed two of the affidavits but inadvertently failed to sign the third one and that the affiant served the defendants with the warrants by leaving copies for the defendants at the jail. Prado v. State, 306 Ga. App. 240, 701 S.E.2d 871 (2010).

Section inapplicable to disposition of seized property. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-20 deals with the requirements for the issuance of search warrants generally and does not deal in any way with the disposition of the seized property. Wallace v. State, 165 Ga. App. 804, 302 S.E.2d 718 (1983).

Juvenile court probation officer has no authority to apply for a search warrant. Huff v. Walker, 125 Ga. App. 251, 187 S.E.2d 343 (1972).

Private litigants not entitled to search warrant. — Search warrants are criminal in nature, having no relation to civil process and are unavailable to an individual for the maintenance of a mere private right. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965).

Temporary protective order not substitute for search warrant. — Temporary protective order (TPO) obtained by the defendant's girlfriend did not constitute a valid search warrant and was not a substitute for a search warrant authorizing entry into the defendant's home and, therefore, the trial court erred by denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the TPO did not meet the warrant and probable cause standard of the Fourth Amendment and O.C.G.A. § 17-5-20 and the state did not articulate a need to deviate from the requirement of obtaining a warrant to search the defendant's home. State v. Burgess, 349 Ga. App. 486, 826 S.E.2d 352 (2019).

Sufficient particularity in warrant. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence police officers found at a residence because the fact that the investigator who submitted the affidavit for the search warrant did not leave a copy of the affidavit with the warrant at the premises did not render the warrant invalid; the warrant satisfied the particularity requirement of the Fourth Amendment and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII on the warrant's face because the warrant listed the address of the place to be searched and contained a description of the home, and the warrant also listed items to be seized, including marijuana, weighing devices, and other paraphernalia used in the distribution of drugs. Pass v. State, 309 Ga. App. 440, 710 S.E.2d 641 (2011).

Sufficient probable cause. — Because the magistrate was presented with a substantial basis for concluding that evidence of child molestation would be found in the cameras and film located in the defendant's car, and such provided probable cause to support the issuance of a search warrant, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of the search warrant. Manders v. State, 281 Ga. App. 786, 637 S.E.2d 460 (2006).

With regard to a defendant's convictions on drug-related offenses, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized from the defendant's apartment upon execution of a search warrant since the affidavit of a deputy, which was based on an informant's tip, sufficiently established probable cause as the informant had been in the defendant's apartment and had personally viewed the drugs. Rocha v. State, 284 Ga. App. 852, 644 S.E.2d 921 (2007).

Trial court properly found that under the totality of the circumstances, the affidavit in support of a search warrant for a residence suspected of being a marijuana "grow house" gave the magistrate a substantial basis for concluding that probable cause existed because the affidavit set forth the fact that similar investigations and seizures had taken place in several grow houses in the area, the house under surveillance had characteristics similar to those houses, and two men fled from the residence and were apprehended with large amounts of cash; the information from the stop was not excludable as "stale" because there was a substantial basis for believing that the electrical ballasts and light fixtures identified in the search warrant could still be found at the residence and the items were not perishable. Prado v. State, 306 Ga. App. 240, 701 S.E.2d 871 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a detective found in the defendant's home because given the totality of the circumstances, the magistrate who issued the search warrant was authorized to conclude that there was a fair probability that contraband would be found at the defendant's home; the detective's affidavit in support of the warrant contained ample facts by which the magistrate could independently evaluate the veracity and reliability of anonymous informants and their information, and a confidential informant's controlled buy of marijuana from the defendant at the defendant's residence on the day the detective applied for the warrant independently confirmed that illegal drug activities were taking place at the home. Taylor v. State, 306 Ga. App. 175, 702 S.E.2d 28 (2010).

Trial court did not err in refusing to suppress the defendant's hospital records, which showed that the defendant used drugs on the day the defendant shot the victim, because on the evidence's face, the affidavit for the search warrant issued for the records demonstrated a fair probability that evidence of the defendant's drug use would be found in the hospital records; the alleged omissions in the affidavit, which was based on the statements of the defendant's spouse, had the potential to impeach the statements made by the spouse, but the omissions did not eliminate the existence of probable cause because if the omitted material were included in the warrant, probable cause would still exist. Herrera v. State, 288 Ga. 231, 702 S.E.2d 854 (2010).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Constable or small claims court bailiff is not charged with the general duty of enforcing the criminal laws of this state. 1975 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U75-17.

Authority of "registered" or "exempt" peace officers. — "Registered" or "exempt" peace officer who is in compliance with the requirements for certification under the Georgia Peace Officer Standards and Training Act, O.C.G.A. § 35-8-1 et seq., has the same authority and limitations as that of a "certified" peace officer in all respects relevant to law enforcement duties, including the ability to apply for a search warrant. 1999 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 99-7.

17-5-21. Grounds for issuance of search warrant; scope of search pursuant to search warrant; issuance by retired judge or judge emeritus.

(a) Upon the written complaint of any certified peace officer of this state or its political subdivisions charged with the duty of enforcing the criminal laws and otherwise as authorized in Code Section 17-5-20 under oath or affirmation, which states facts sufficient to show probable cause that a crime is being committed or has been committed and which particularly describes the place or person, or both, to be searched and things to be seized, any judicial officer authorized to hold a court of inquiry to examine into an arrest of an offender against the penal laws, referred to in this Code section as "judicial officer," may issue a search warrant for the seizure of the following:

(1) Any instruments, articles, or things, including the private papers of any person, which are designed, intended for use, or which have been used in the commission of the offense in connection with which the warrant is issued;

(2) Any person who has been kidnapped in violation of the laws of this state, who has been kidnapped in another jurisdiction and is now concealed within this state, or any human fetus or human corpse;

(3) Stolen or embezzled property;

(4) Any item, substance, object, thing, or matter, the possession of which is unlawful; or

(5) Any instruments, articles or things, any information or data, and anything that is tangible or intangible, corporeal or incorporeal, visible or invisible evidence of the commission of the crime for which probable cause is shown, other than the private papers of any person.

(b) When the peace officer is in the process of effecting a lawful search, nothing in this Code section shall preclude such officer from discovering or seizing any stolen or embezzled property, any item, substance, object, thing, or matter, the possession of which is unlawful, or any item, substance, object, thing, or matter, other than the private papers of any person, which is tangible evidence of the commission of a crime against the laws of this state, the United States, or another state. Other personnel, sworn or unsworn, acting under the direction of a peace officer executing a search warrant may assist in the execution of such warrant. While in the process of effecting a lawful arrest or lawful search, nothing in this Code section nor in Code Section 16-11-62 shall be construed to preclude the use of any device, as such term is defined in Code Section 16-11-60, by the peace officer executing the search warrant or other personnel assisting in the execution of such warrant.

(c) Any retired judge or judge emeritus of a state court may issue search warrants as authorized by this Code section if authorized in writing to do so by an active judge of the state court of the county wherein the warrants are to be issued.

(d) Notwithstanding any provisions of Code Section 17-5-20 or other provisions of this Code section to the contrary, with respect to the execution of a search warrant by a certified peace officer employed by a university, college, or school, which search warrant will be executed beyond the arrest jurisdiction of a campus policeman pursuant to Code Section 20-3-72, the execution of such search warrant shall be made jointly by the certified peace officer employed by a university, college, or school and a certified peace officer of a law enforcement unit of the political subdivision wherein the search will be conducted.

General Consideration

Editor's notes. — In light of the similarity of the statutory provisions, decisions under former Code 1933, Ch. 27-3 and Ga. L. 1951, p. 291, § 8 are included in the annotations for this Code section.

Authority of judicial officer to issue search warrant does not vanish within restricted area. — O.C.G.A. 17-5-22 (when considered with O.C.G.A. §§ 17-5-21 and 17-7-20) means that the authority of a judicial officer to issue a search warrant to be executed within the area of the officer's jurisdiction does not vanish when the officer physically steps into an area where the officer's authority is restricted within the county in which the officer serves. State v. Varner, 248 Ga. 347, 283 S.E.2d 268 (1981).

Seizure of sexually explicit videos. — Sexually explicit VCR tapes and photographs, although in the private possession of the defendant, were seizable as evidentiary items used in accomplishing a crime, aggravated sodomy, and such tapes could also be used to show bent of mind of the defendant to commit such crimes. Tyler v. State, 176 Ga. App. 96, 335 S.E.2d 691 (1985).

Discovery of evidence of another crime. — Evidence of another crime, discovered while searching pursuant to a valid search warrant, may be lawfully seized. Bing v. State, 178 Ga. App. 288, 342 S.E.2d 762 (1986).

Probable cause may rely on evidence inadmissible at trial. — While a warrant may issue only upon a finding of "probable cause," the term means less than evidence which would justify condemnation, and a finding of probable cause may rest upon evidence which is not legally competent in a criminal trial. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965).

Facts must lead prudent man to believe crime committed. — Whether by recitals in the affidavit or by an independent showing before the magistrate, the facts must be such as to lead a man of prudence and caution to believe that the offense has been committed. Mere speculation, conjecture, or opinion is not enough, nor is mere rumor. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965).

Probable cause must be determined by magistrate, not police. — Determination as to whether there is probable cause is not to be made by one who applies for issuance of the warrant; it must be made by the magistrate from a consideration of the facts submitted under oath. It must exist before the search is made and cannot be supplied by after-discovered facts. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965).

Probate court judge could issue search warrant. — Defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized pursuant to a warrant issued by a probate court judge was properly denied because the probate court judge was authorized to hold a court of inquiry under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-20 and, therefore, was authorized to issue a search warrant under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21(a). O.C.G.A. § 40-13-21(b), assuming the statute required the state court to issue a warrant, pertained to the jurisdiction of probate courts in misdemeanor traffic cases and did not apply in this felony case. Joyner v. State, 347 Ga. App. 159, 817 S.E.2d 822 (2018).

Preferable to incorporate facts in affidavit. — While probable cause may be made to appear by a showing under oath before the magistrate when issuance of the warrant is sought, it is better, even necessary, that the facts then made to appear as showing probable cause be incorporated in the affidavit. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965).

Judicial officer other than magistrate may issue warrant. — At common law, justices of the peace had general power to issue search warrants for stolen goods. So long as a judicial determination of the existence of probable cause is made, there is no constitutional inhibition against designation by the General Assembly of persons other than a justice of the peace for doing it. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965).

Juvenile court probation officer has no authority to apply for a search warrant. Huff v. Walker, 125 Ga. App. 251, 187 S.E.2d 343 (1972) (decided under Ga. L. 1951, p. 291, § 8).

Private papers. — Warrant for the seizure of private papers that did not clearly limit the items to be seized to those involving the named participants was overly broad and allowed for an impermissible exercise of discretion by the searching officers. Grant v. State, 220 Ga. App. 604, 469 S.E.2d 826 (1996).

Defendant's rights were not violated when the contents of a handwritten letter were not used against the defendant and only the characteristics of the handwriting were used by a handwriting expert for comparison purposes. Hale v. State, 220 Ga. App. 667, 469 S.E.2d 871 (1996).

Private papers, as referred to in O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21, are restricted to those covered by an applicable privilege, and slips of paper listing pornographic internet sites were not within the coverage. Walsh v. State, 236 Ga. App. 558, 512 S.E.2d 408 (1999).

Defendant's assertion that the contents of a notebook were private papers exempt from seizure under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21 was rejected since the contents were voluntarily handed over to the police for review. Heckman v. State, 276 Ga. 141, 576 S.E.2d 834 (2003).

Judgment of divorce not private paper. — As to the defendant's conviction for possession with the intent to distribute, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress papers found in a residence because O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21 authorizes the seizure of certain private papers, but the defendant's judgment of divorce, a public record, was not a private paper subject to suppression. Flemister v. State, 317 Ga. App. 749, 732 S.E.2d 810 (2012).

Medical records were not private papers. — Defendant's argument that the defendant's medical records could not have been obtained via search warrant because the records constituted "private papers," which were exempt from search warrants pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21, was unavailing; medical records could have been properly seized pursuant to a search warrant. Brogdon v. State, 299 Ga. App. 547, 683 S.E.2d 99 (2009), aff'd, 287 Ga. 528, 697 S.E.2d 211 (2010).

Blood sample. — Search warrant is an appropriate vehicle for obtaining a blood sample from a defendant. State v. Slavny, 195 Ga. App. 818, 395 S.E.2d 56 (1990).

Use of thermal scanning device. — Fruits of a search warrant allowing the police to use a thermal scanning device to search the defendant's home for anomalous heat loss were not suppressed because "anomalous heat loss" was tangible evidence, under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21(a)(5), as "anomalous heat loss" was definable and measurable and could, at least in some cases, be perceived through the sense of touch. Brundige v. State, 310 Ga. App. 900, 714 S.E.2d 681 (2011), aff'd, 291 Ga. 677, 735 S.E.2d 583 (2012).

Thermal imaging evidence. — Giving the word tangible full effect, the Supreme Court of Georgia finds that it appears that the Georgia General Assembly intends tangible evidence under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21 to mean evidence that is essentially an object with material form that could be touched by a person. Brundige v. State, 291 Ga. 677, 735 S.E.2d 583 (2012).

Concerned citizens' call to police. — Search warrant for the defendant's trailer was supported by probable cause given multiple calls from concerned citizens that the defendant was firing a gun outside the defendant's home at all hours and the defendant's prior convictions for felony drug and firearms offenses, and marijuana plants outside a second trailer gave probable cause for a warrant for that trailer. State v. Dotson, 337 Ga. App. 284, 787 S.E.2d 262 (2016), cert. denied, No. S16C1717, 2016 Ga. LEXIS 829 (Ga. 2016).

Search of probationer's residence. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress because the court did not err in determining that the law-enforcement officers who searched the defendant's home had reasonable suspicion to suspect criminal activity or violations of probation based on the probation officer's concerns that the defendant was using drugs and attempting to avoid detection; thus, the search was conducted for probationary purposes, rather than for law-enforcement purposes. Whitfield v. State, 337 Ga. App. 167, 786 S.E.2d 547 (2016).

Sufficiency of Warrant

1. Technical Requirements for Affidavit

Strict construction. — Proceedings for issuance of search warrants are to be strictly construed, and every constitutional and statutory requirement must be fully met, including all formalities required by statute, before a valid search warrant may issue. Moreover, a section prescribing the method of issuing search warrants must be read and construed in the light of, and conform in all essential respects to, the provisions of the Constitution granting immunity from unreasonable searches and seizures. Pruitt v. State, 123 Ga. App. 659, 182 S.E.2d 142 (1971).

Requirements of section must be met. — It is only after requirements of this section are met that the warrant may be issued and the search instituted. Wood v. State, 224 Ga. 121, 160 S.E.2d 368 (1968).

1. Technical Requirements for Affidavit (Cont'd)

Police as officer of state. — Police officer employed by county is an "officer of the state or its political subdivisions charged with the duty of enforcing the criminal laws" within the meaning of this section. Hawkins v. State, 130 Ga. App. 426, 203 S.E.2d 622 (1973).

Common sense reading of affidavit required. — Common-sense reading of the entire affidavit is all that is required. Butler v. State, 130 Ga. App. 469, 203 S.E.2d 558 (1973).

No place for minor technical errors in reading of affidavit. — Affidavits for search warrants must be tested and interpreted by magistrates and courts in a common-sense and realistic fashion and technical requirements of elaborate specificity have no proper place in this area. Driscoll v. State, 129 Ga. App. 702, 201 S.E.2d 11 (1973).

Warrant given preference when affidavit uncertain. — Although in a particular case it may not be easy for the court to determine when an affidavit demonstrates the existence of probable cause, the resolution of doubtful or marginal cases in this area should be largely determined by the preference to be accorded to warrants. Bradley v. State, 131 Ga. App. 271, 205 S.E.2d 463 (1974).

Information can be in wrong part of form. — When grounds for a search warrant appear on the face of the printed search warrant form, the fact that the grounds may be stated in the wrong place on the form is immaterial. Butler v. State, 130 Ga. App. 469, 203 S.E.2d 558 (1973).

There is no requirement that probable cause for the issuance of a warrant be set out only in that section of the printed affidavit form designated "probable cause." The affidavit is to be read as a whole. Butler v. State, 130 Ga. App. 469, 203 S.E.2d 558 (1973).

Not all information must appear within affidavit. — It is not necessary that all the information relied upon in seeking a warrant must appear within an affidavit. Hornsby v. State, 124 Ga. App. 724, 185 S.E.2d 623 (1971).

Exculpatory material. — There is no requirement that exculpatory material be included in an ex parte application for a search warrant. Hayes v. State, 182 Ga. App. 319, 355 S.E.2d 700 (1987).

Written complaint must be signed by the attesting officer in order to be valid. State v. Barnett, 136 Ga. App. 122, 220 S.E.2d 730 (1975).

General warrants void. — General warrant, one which does not sufficiently specify the place or the person to be searched, is void. Willis v. State, 122 Ga. App. 455, 177 S.E.2d 487 (1970).

Search area must be described. — Warrant should not leave the place to be searched to the discretion of the officer. State v. Sanders, 155 Ga. App. 274, 270 S.E.2d 850 (1980).

Legal search not invalidated by overbroad warrant. — If a search as it was actually conducted is lawful, it is not rendered invalid merely because the warrant pursuant to which the search was made was overbroad or founded upon erroneous beliefs. Butler v. State, 130 Ga. App. 469, 203 S.E.2d 558 (1973).

Description sufficient if person and place can be definitely located. — Description is sufficient if prudent officer executing the warrant can locate the person and place definitely and with reasonable certainty. Buck v. State, 127 Ga. App. 72, 192 S.E.2d 432 (1972); Cooksey v. State, 149 Ga. App. 572, 254 S.E.2d 892 (1979); State v. Sanders, 155 Ga. App. 274, 270 S.E.2d 850 (1980); Barfield v. State, 160 Ga. App. 228, 286 S.E.2d 516 (1981).

Description in the warrant itself must be sufficient to enable the officer who serves the warrant to ascertain with reasonable certainty and identify the place intended. Vaughn v. State, 141 Ga. App. 453, 233 S.E.2d 848 (1977).

Incomplete description of suspect does not void seizure. — Lack of description of the person to be searched does not void the search and seizure of items found in a search of the place. Holloway v. State, 134 Ga. 498, 215 S.E.2d 262 (1975).

Lack of description of the person to be searched does not void the search and seizure of items found in a search of the place; even a "John Doe" warrant is legally sufficient "for a search of described premises." Giles v. State, 149 Ga. App. 263, 254 S.E.2d 154 (1979), overruled on other grounds, State v. Thackston, 289 Ga. 412, 716 S.E.2d 517 (2011).

Although the search warrant only described the defendant as a "black male unknown," it was not an invalid warrant. A warrant is sufficient if it particularly describes the place or person, or both, to be searched and things to be seized. The warrant had a very specific description of the location of the defendant's residence — the place from which the defendant was observed leaving. Smith v. State, 187 Ga. App. 231, 369 S.E.2d 549 (1988).

Warrant omitting name of owner or occupant. — Search warrant otherwise sufficient is not rendered invalid by the omission of the name of the owner or occupant of the premises to be searched. Giles v. State, 149 Ga. App. 263, 254 S.E.2d 154 (1979), overruled on other grounds, State v. Thackston, 289 Ga. 412, 716 S.E.2d 517 (2011).

Premises described exactly if owner's or occupant's name not given. — When the name of the owner or the occupant is not given, the description of the premises must be exact. State v. Sanders, 155 Ga. App. 274, 270 S.E.2d 850 (1980).

Warrant may list owner, not occupant. — It is not fatal to list the owner of the premises, rather than the occupant of the premises, when the primary object of the warrant is the search of the premises. Giles v. State, 149 Ga. App. 263, 254 S.E.2d 154 (1979), overruled on other grounds, State v. Thackston, 289 Ga. 412, 716 S.E.2d 517 (2011).

Failure to include street address in body of clear warrant not fatal. — When a search warrant clearly authorized the search of the premises described in the caption of the warrant, the failure to reflect the street address or description in the body of the warrant is a technical irregularity which did not affect the substantial rights of the defendants and did not authorize suppression of the evidence. Latimer v. State, 134 Ga. App. 372, 214 S.E.2d 390 (1975).

Omission of county and state not fatal. — Description in warrant itself can be sufficient to enable the officer who served the warrant to ascertain with reasonable certainty the identity of the place intended, despite the omission of the county and state therein. Miller v. State, 155 Ga. App. 399, 270 S.E.2d 822 (1980).

Warrant describing car, house, and address sufficient. — Search warrant, in giving specific directions on how to find the house, the street address, a house description ("one-story frame dwelling"), and the description and license number of the appellant's car, gives a sufficient description. Cooksey v. State, 149 Ga. App. 572, 254 S.E.2d 892 (1979).

Exact specification of instrumentalities not essential. — Though specificity is to be desired, when circumstances make an exact description of instrumentalities a virtual impossibility, the searching officer can only be expected to describe the generic class of items the officer is seeking. Dugan v. State, 130 Ga. App. 527, 203 S.E.2d 722 (1974); Cooper v. State, 212 Ga. App. 34, 441 S.E.2d 448 (1994).

Mere room number change on warrant permissible. — When both the affidavit and the warrant recited probable cause to believe drugs would be found on the person of the named defendant and on the premises under the defendant's possession, custody, and control, namely hotel room 327, the search of room 337 of the hotel constituted a reasonable search under the warrant, without amendment, upon the discovery before the warrant's execution that the defendant was registered in room 337, and the actions of the officer in phoning the issuing magistrate and obtaining authorization to make the correction were reasonable and proper. State v. Sanders, 155 Ga. App. 274, 270 S.E.2d 850 (1980).

Warrant narrowly drafted. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the results of a blood-alcohol-content test that was obtained via the seizure of the defendant's blood samples and pursuant to a search warrant because the warrant was narrowly drafted to seek only the blood samples and medical records from the hospital where the defendant was treated on the night of the accident; even if the warrant could be construed as authorizing a broader seizure of all of the defendant's medical records instead of only those relevant to the defendant's treatment related to the accident, the defendant failed to show that any such broader seizure occurred and, thus, failed to show any harm. Jones v. State, 313 Ga. App. 590, 722 S.E.2d 202 (2012).

Description in warrant held sufficient. — Affidavit and warrant, each headed "Gwinnett County," contained a description sufficient to enable an officer who served a warrant to ascertain with reasonable certainty the identity of the place intended, which is more specifically known as Tucker, Georgia. Mosier v. State, 160 Ga. App. 415, 287 S.E.2d 357 (1981).

Information provided in an affidavit and a search warrant issued was not insufficient to set out with exactitude a description of the premises to be searched. Martin v. State, 165 Ga. App. 760, 302 S.E.2d 614 (1983).

With regard to the defendant's conviction for possession of marijuana with the intent to distribute, even if the defendant had not waived the issue of defense counsel being ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress, the challenge was meritless since the search warrant properly named the package the police sought to seize, which the defendant picked up at a mailing store, and the warrant did not need to name the defendant's vehicle, which the defendant entered into with the package. Ferguson v. State, 292 Ga. App. 7, 663 S.E.2d 760 (2008).

Taped affidavit. — Fact that a taped "affidavit" was not in written form when the affidavit was presented to the magistrate was a technical defect; accordingly, the court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence. Williams v. State, 188 Ga. App. 334, 373 S.E.2d 42 (1988).

Affidavit based on information from ISP. — GBI agent was authorized to rely on information regarding sexually explicit images of children as reported by an internet service provider (ISP) pursuant to the ISP's statutory reporting obligation set forth in 42 U.S.C. § 13032(b)(1); the ISP's report was the equivalent of one made from a law-abiding concerned citizen, and therefore was afforded a preferred status insofar as testing the credibility of the information. Manzione v. State, 312 Ga. App. 638, 719 S.E.2d 533 (2011), cert. denied, No. S12C0485, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 308 (Ga. 2012).

Suppression motion should have been granted based on confidential informant's testimony. — Denial of the defendant's suppression motion was error as a search warrant was based upon the statements of a confidential informant (CI) whose reliability, credibility, and source of information were unknown, law enforcement officers had failed to corroborate the CI's claim that the defendant was selling drugs from the residence, and the officers did not observe the CI's conduct before or after the controlled buy. Chatham v. State, 323 Ga. App. 51, 746 S.E.2d 605 (2013).

Insufficient corroboration of anonymous informant. — Given the complete lack of information regarding the anonymous informant, the informant's motives, or the basis for the informant's knowledge, the informant's allegations, standing alone, were insufficient to establish probable cause for the search of the defendant's home and, thus, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence discovered during a search of the defendant's home. Wiggins v. State, 331 Ga. App. 447, 771 S.E.2d 135 (2015).

2. Probable Cause

Evaluation of evidence by magistrate. — Task of the issuing magistrate is simply to make a practical, common-sense decision, whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit before the magistrate, including the veracity and basis of knowledge of persons supplying hearsay information, there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place. State v. Farmer, 177 Ga. App. 18, 338 S.E.2d 489 (1985); Hayes v. State, 182 Ga. App. 319, 355 S.E.2d 700 (1987).

Magistrate must decide probable cause. — Law requires that the question of probable cause for the issuance of the search warrant must be independently determined by a neutral and detached magistrate and not by the officer engaged in the often competitive enterprise of ferreting out crime. Patterson v. State, 126 Ga. App. 753, 191 S.E.2d 584 (1972).

Basis for determining if sufficient probable cause. — Determination of whether or not there was a sufficient showing of probable cause to justify the issuance of a search warrant depends on the resolution of two questions: first, whether or not the facts as stated in the affidavit constitute a sufficient showing of probable cause and, second, whether in the light of all of the sworn evidence placed before the magistrate, the magistrate was justified in issuing the warrant. Campbell v. State, 226 Ga. 883, 178 S.E.2d 257 (1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 1002, 91 S. Ct. 1246, 28 L. Ed. 2d 535 (1971).

Duty of a reviewing court is simply to ensure that the magistrate had a "substantial basis" for concluding that probable cause existed when the magistrate issued the warrant, while the issuing magistrate must make a practical, common-sense decision whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit before the magistrate, including the veracity and basis of knowledge of persons supplying hearsay information, there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place. In determining if an affidavit contained sufficient information for a magistrate to determine that probable cause existed to issue a search warrant, the reviewing court may consider the remainder of an affidavit after a portion has been excised in combination with the totality of the circumstance. Porter v. State, 264 Ga. App. 526, 591 S.E.2d 436 (2003).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress because probable cause to conduct the search to take the defendant's blood at the hospital existed based on evidence of the odor of alcohol combined with evidence from a witness that the driver lost control of the vehicle and crashed into a tree; thus, there was a fair probability that a test of the defendant's blood would reveal evidence of driving under the influence of alcohol. Mason v. State, 353 Ga. App. 404, 837 S.E.2d 711 (2020).

Affidavit needs sufficient facts for magistrate to determine probable cause. — Law requires that sufficient facts be set forth in the affidavit required by this section to enable the magistrate to make an independent determination as to whether probable cause exists for the issuance of a search warrant. McMahan v. State, 125 Ga. App. 491, 188 S.E.2d 183 (1972).

Affidavit requiring facts showing criminal activity likely at defendant's home. — When facts fail to show when taken as a whole the reasonable likelihood of any criminal activity within the defendant's home, the requirement of probable cause has not been met. McMahan v. State, 125 Ga. App. 491, 188 S.E.2d 183 (1972).

Affidavit listed salient evidence sought and gave a reason why the evidence was salient. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 to suppress evidence in a prosecution for felony murder and other charges; the search warrant was supported by probable cause pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21(a) as the application listed the salient evidence sought, and gave a reason why the evidence, including pornographic materials, was salient as the evidence indicated that the defendant choked a girlfriend after they got into an argument over the defendant watching pornography in their home. Lemon v. State, 279 Ga. 618, 619 S.E.2d 613 (2005).

Search warrant affidavit insufficient for residence search. — Magistrate did not have a substantial basis for concluding that marijuana and items used for growing and distributing marijuana would be found at the residence and, therefore, the trial court did not err by granting the defendants' motions to suppress because the investigator did not surveil the house to determine if there were excessive visitors to support a thriving marijuana trafficking operation or other suspicious activity, the investigator provided no information as to the tipster's identity, how the tipster was aware of the criminal activity, or what the tipster's motives for reporting the crime were, the tipster reported it had been at least two years since the tipster had been inside the house, and it was reasonably possible that the marijuana trash came from another nearby person or address. State v. Cartee, 355 Ga. App. 326, 844 S.E.2d 202 (2020).

Magistrate must have reason to believe items on premises. — Probable cause finding must be based on more than the conclusion that a crime was committed and that the items sought are connected with the crime. The magistrate must also have a sufficient reason to believe that the items will be found in the place to be searched. Murphy v. State, 238 Ga. 725, 234 S.E.2d 911 (1977).

Judge must realize probable cause cannot be definite. — In reaching a judgment on probable cause for a search warrant, a judge must use a common-sense approach because the judge is dealing with a probability and not a certainty that a crime has been committed. Ward v. State, 234 Ga. 882, 218 S.E.2d 591 (1975).

Probable cause means reasonable grounds and is that apparent state of facts which seems to exist after reasonable and proper inquiry. Hogan v. State, 140 Ga. App. 716, 231 S.E.2d 802 (1976); State v. Johnson, 152 Ga. App. 115, 262 S.E.2d 197 (1979).

Test of probable cause. — Test is whether it would justify a man of reasonable caution in believing that an offense has been or is being committed, and this requires merely a probability — less than a certainty but more than a mere suspicion or possibility. Butler v. State, 130 Ga. App. 469, 203 S.E.2d 558 (1973); Baxter v. State, 134 Ga. App. 286, 214 S.E.2d 578, cert. denied, 423 U.S. 895, 96 S. Ct. 194, 46 L. Ed. 2d 127 (1975); Brown v. State, 151 Ga. App. 830, 261 S.E.2d 717 (1979); Lewis v. State, 255 Ga. 101, 335 S.E.2d 560 (1985).

Level of proof need not equal level for guilt. — Considerably less is required to show probable cause for search or arrest than is required to prove guilt. Hornsby v. State, 124 Ga. App. 724, 185 S.E.2d 623 (1971).

Affidavits of probable cause are tested by much less rigorous standards than those governing the admissibility of evidence at trial. Davis v. State, 127 Ga. App. 76, 192 S.E.2d 538 (1972).

"Reasonable cause" necessary to support an arrest cannot demand the same strictness of proof as the accused's guilt upon a trial. Baxter v. State, 134 Ga. App. 286, 214 S.E.2d 578, cert. denied, 423 U.S. 895, 96 S. Ct. 194, 46 L. Ed. 2d 127 (1975).

Law sanctions a difference between the methods permitted to prove the ultimate issue of guilt and that of probable cause for search or arrest. Ward v. State, 234 Ga. 882, 218 S.E.2d 591 (1975).

When dealing with probable cause, as the name implies, one deals with probabilities, not certainty, and the quantum of proof necessary to establish probable cause is not that level which is necessary for proof of guilt in a trial. Bradford v. State, 149 Ga. App. 839, 256 S.E.2d 84, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 936, 100 S. Ct. 285, 62 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1979).

Determining probable cause from totality of information. — Judge may consider the totality of the information to determine if probable cause exists before issuing a search warrant. Ward v. State, 234 Ga. 882, 218 S.E.2d 591 (1975).

Consideration of inadmissible evidence outside affidavit. — In determining whether the magistrate was justified in issuing the search warrant, the court is not limited to the facts on the face of the affidavit, and is free to make judgments on the veracity of any or all of the evidence. Campbell v. State, 226 Ga. 883, 178 S.E.2d 257 (1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 1002, 91 S. Ct. 1246, 28 L. Ed. 2d 535 (1971).

Not only what is stated in the affidavit for the search warrant but also the totality of the sworn circumstances before the magistrate may be considered in establishing probable cause. Butler v. State, 130 Ga. App. 469, 203 S.E.2d 558 (1973); Franklin v. State, 135 Ga. App. 718, 218 S.E.2d 641 (1975); Brown v. State, 151 Ga. App. 830, 261 S.E.2d 717 (1979).

Consideration of information gathered by police. — Information gathered by arresting and investigating officers can be used to support probable cause. Giles v. State, 149 Ga. App. 263, 254 S.E.2d 154 (1979), overruled on other grounds, State v. Thackston, 289 Ga. 412, 716 S.E.2d 517 (2011).

Officer's corroboration of informant's allegations insufficient. — Defendant's motion to suppress was improperly denied as the application and affidavit for the search warrant contained insufficient information to allow a finding of probable cause to search the residence because the confidential informant had not assisted law enforcement before; the investigator only corroborated the information that was readily available to the general public; the investigator did nothing to independently confirm the informant's tip that there were items commonly associated with methamphetamine production in the trash can outside the residence; and the independent investigation did not establish the informant's reliability to any meaningful degree. Nichols v. State, 336 Ga. App. 287, 783 S.E.2d 918 (2016).

Consideration of marijuana odor. — Although there is some controversy as to whether or not the odor of burning marijuana by itself supplies sufficient probable cause for a search or an arrest, it may be considered and may be part of a totality of circumstances sufficient to validate one. State v. Medders, 153 Ga. App. 680, 266 S.E.2d 331 (1980).

Identification of marijuana odor by expert. — While odor of marijuana smoke alone does not authorize a search without a warrant, a "sufficiently distinctive" odor recognized by one "qualified to know the odor" may form a proper basis for the issuance of a search warrant. Clare v. State, 135 Ga. App. 281, 217 S.E.2d 638 (1975).

Mere suspicion of drugs insufficient. — Suspicion that drugs were being used on the premises is insufficient to constitute probable cause under this section. Clare v. State, 135 Ga. App. 281, 217 S.E.2d 638 (1975).

Absent testimony which stated objective facts which corroborated as both true and current the information supplied by the defendant's neighbors about suspected drug activity at the defendant's home, the affiant had only a mere suspicion that contraband was being kept on the premises; thus, the warrant to search for drugs was not supported by probable cause. Banks v. State of Ga., 277 Ga. 543, 592 S.E.2d 668 (2004).

Police information arising out of official investigation. — Information provided by police officers, arising out of an official investigation, may be used to establish probable cause for a search warrant. Caffo v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981).

Police officer's knowledge of suspect's reputation. — Magistrate may rely on law enforcement officer's knowledge of a suspect's reputation in issuing a search warrant. Caffo v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981).

Local law enforcement officers as reliable informants. — Local law enforcement officers participating in a common investigation are reliable informants. Caffo v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981).

Magistrate may consider inadmissible oral testimony. — Information supporting a finding of probable cause may be presented to the magistrate by means of an affidavit or by oral testimony. Bradley v. State, 131 Ga. App. 271, 205 S.E.2d 463 (1974); Franklin v. State, 135 Ga. App. 718, 218 S.E.2d 641 (1975).

This section authorizes a qualified judicial officer to issue a search warrant upon the written complaint of any state law enforcement officer under oath or affirmation which states facts sufficient to show probable cause to justify a search; although, the judicial officer may receive additional information by oral testimony that section does not require that the officer do so. All that is necessary is that the affidavit or the testimony, or both, provide probable cause for the search. State v. Barber, 148 Ga. App. 743, 252 S.E.2d 911 (1979).

Oath does not cover oral statements. — When the magistrate does not administer any oath until after the affidavit is signed, the oath covers only the truthfulness of the statements contained in the written affidavit and not the oral statements given to show probable cause.

2. Probable Cause (Cont'd)

Riggins v. State, 136 Ga. App. 279, 220 S.E.2d 775 (1975).

Hearsay sufficient for probable cause. — Affidavit to obtain a search warrant is not insufficient merely because the affiant relies on information obtained from others to show probable cause for the issuance of the warrant. DePalma v. State, 228 Ga. 272, 185 S.E.2d 53 (1971).

Probable cause for the issuance of an arrest or search warrant may be founded upon hearsay. Hornsby v. State, 124 Ga. App. 724, 185 S.E.2d 623 (1971).

Oral testimony can include hearsay upon hearsay. — Hearsay and even hearsay upon hearsay may be sufficient to furnish the basis for the issuance of a valid warrant if the magistrate is informed of the underlying circumstances supporting the affiant's underlying conclusions and the magistrate's belief that the informant was credible or the information reliable. State v. Griffin, 154 Ga. App. 361, 268 S.E.2d 412 (1980).

Probable cause when original informant shown reliable. — Fact that an affidavit for issuance of a warrant was based upon information received by the affiant from another police officer, who in turn received the information from informants, does not preclude a finding of probable cause if the reliability of such informants is established. Reece v. State, 152 Ga. App. 760, 264 S.E.2d 258 (1979).

Substantial basis for crediting hearsay needed. — Hearsay can be the basis for issuance of a warrant so long as there is a substantial basis for crediting the hearsay. Ward v. State, 234 Ga. 882, 218 S.E.2d 591 (1975).

Hearsay may support the issuance of a valid warrant if the magistrate is informed of some of the underlying circumstances supporting the affiant's conclusions and the affiant's belief that the informant was credible or the informant's information reliable. There must be a substantial basis for crediting such hearsay. Smith v. State, 136 Ga. App. 17, 220 S.E.2d 11 (1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 938, 96 S. Ct. 1671, 48 L. Ed. 2d 179 (1976).

Magistrate must be informed of circumstances supporting statement. — Constitution requires that there be presented to the judicial officer issuing the search warrant some of the underlying circumstances relied on by the officer applying for the warrant and, if the officer relies on an informant, some of the underlying circumstances from which the officer concluded that the officer's informant was reliable. Wood v. State, 118 Ga. App. 477, 164 S.E.2d 233 (1968).

Affidavit may be based on hearsay information and need not reflect the direct personal observations of the affiant so long as the magistrate is informed of some of the underlying circumstances supporting the affiant's conclusions and the affiant's belief that any informant involved whose identity need not be disclosed was credible or the informant's information reliable. Davis v. State, 127 Ga. App. 76, 192 S.E.2d 538 (1972).

Underlying circumstances must meet tests. — General tests to be applied to determine the sufficiency of the affidavit's facts and circumstances to show probable cause are: (1) that the affidavit gives reasons for the informer's reliability; (2) that the affidavit either specifically states how the informer obtained the information or the tip describes the criminal activity in such detail that the magistrate may know that it is more than a "casual rumor circulating in the underworld or an accusation based merely on an individual's general reputation"; and (3) a time period closely related to the commission of the offense must be affirmatively stated within the affidavit to show that the information contained therein is not stale. Bradley v. State, 131 Ga. App. 271, 205 S.E.2d 463 (1974); State v. Watts, 154 Ga. App. 789, 270 S.E.2d 52 (1980).

When probable cause based on informer's tip. — If hearsay such as an informer's tip is relied upon for probable cause, the sworn information placed before the justice of the peace must adequately set forth: (1) the underlying circumstances necessary to enable the magistrate independently to judge the validity of the information; and (2) the informant's credibility or reliability. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

Test requires showing how informer obtained information. — When the hearsay of an informant is relied upon, the affidavit must give the reasons for the informer's reliability and must either state how the informer obtained the information or the tip must describe the criminal activity in such detail that the magistrate may know it is more than a casual rumor circulating in the underworld or an accusation based merely on an individual's general reputation. Hornsby v. State, 124 Ga. App. 724, 185 S.E.2d 623 (1971).

Tip must give enough details to show not mere rumor. — Affidavit upon which a search warrant is issued must give the reasons for the informer's reliability and must either state how the informer obtained the information or the tip must describe the criminal activity in such detail that the magistrate may know it is more than a casual rumor circulating in the underworld or an accusation based merely on an individual's general reputation. Sams v. State, 121 Ga. App. 46, 172 S.E.2d 473, cert. denied, 400 U.S. 865, 91 S. Ct. 100, 27 L. Ed. 2d 103 (1970).

Accusation based solely on individual's reputation. — Affidavit on which the warrant issues, when the warrant depends for the warrant's efficacy upon statements made by others, must either specifically state how the informer obtained the information or the tip should describe the criminal activity in such detail that the magistrate may know it is more than a casual rumor or an accusation based merely on reputation. Dresch v. State, 125 Ga. App. 110, 186 S.E.2d 496 (1971).

One of the general tests to determine the sufficiency to show probable cause is that the affidavit either specifically states how the informer obtained the information or the tip describes the criminal activity in such detail that the magistrate may know that it is more than a casual rumor circulating in the underworld or an accusation based merely on an individual's general reputation. Cochran v. State, 136 Ga. App. 94, 220 S.E.2d 83 (1975).

Rumors from unidentified persons insufficient. — Rumors or information from unidentified persons cannot form the basis for the issuance of a search warrant. Thornton v. State, 125 Ga. App. 374, 187 S.E.2d 583 (1972).

Failure to provide basis of information in affidavit not fatal. — It clearly is the better practice, if an informant has obtained the information through personal observation or contact or through some other reliable manner, to include this fact in the affidavit or so inform the magistrate considering the affidavit's issuance; however, the failure to include a statement of the informant's "basis of knowledge" in the affidavit or to specifically inform the magistrate of that basis by sworn testimony does not always cause the resulting warrant to be fatally defective. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

Sufficient details test based on information, not separate corroboration. — In determining the reliability of the manner in which an informant obtained the information, determination of whether the tip meets the "sufficient detail" test is based exclusively on what information came from the informant without reference, at this point, to independent verification of the informant's information. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

If tip detailed enough to seem reliable, police can corroborate. — If a tip is sufficiently detailed so as to show a reliable basis for the informant's information, independent police work can corroborate the details of the tip. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

Probable cause based on arrestees' directing to address. — Magistrate had a substantial basis for concluding that probable cause existed to issue warrant given affidavit based on various arrestees' information which showed that prescription drugs were being sold at the defendant's residence. Smith v. State, 207 Ga. App. 463, 428 S.E.2d 403 (1993).

Underlying circumstances requirement not for examining informant's reliability. — Underlying circumstances requirement is designed to locate the original source of the incriminating information and to examine the validity or reliability of that information, but is not concerned with the overall reliability of the informant personally. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

Once information gathering method shown reliable, reliability of informer considered. — Reliable manner of the acquisition of the information having been demonstrated, it must now be determined whether the individual supplying this "reliable" information is a truthful person. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

Officer's reasons for believing informant. — Hearsay may support the issuance of a valid warrant if the magistrate is informed of some of the underlying circumstances supporting the affiant's conclusions and the affiant's belief that the informant was credible or the information reliable. Reece v. State, 152 Ga. App. 760, 264 S.E.2d 258 (1979).

Officer must do more than cite "reliable informant's" information. — It is not enough simply to recite that from information received from a reliable informant the affiant has come to suspect or to believe that a named person is in possession of contraband items. Courson v. State, 125 Ga. App. 373, 187 S.E.2d 554 (1972).

When the information upon which an officer seeks the issuance of a search warrant comes from an informant who is not named, it is essential that sufficient facts be stated with specificity to indicate that the informant was reliable. Courson v. State, 125 Ga. App. 373, 187 S.E.2d 554 (1972).

To show reliability, affidavit must specify informer's prior information. — Statement that the informant provided information in the past which has proven to be correct is not sufficient when standing alone and unaccompanied by any further specifics as to the type of information provided, the use to which it was put, or the length of time which has elapsed since the information was furnished, but only one of these three specifics (type of information, use to which it was put, and elapsed time since the information was furnished) must be present. Kouder v. State, 154 Ga. App. 597, 269 S.E.2d 92 (1980).

Information that the affiant knew the informer for over five years, that the informer was concerned about the drug problem, was known to be reliable and truthful, and had seen marijuana at the defendant's house within the past 96 hours, sufficiently established the reliability of both the tip and the tipster. Miller v. State, 155 Ga. App. 399, 270 S.E.2d 822 (1980).

Details showing informant trustworthy and previous help. — When the search warrant is based upon an informant's information, the law requires that there be particular facts or circumstances which justify concluding that the informant is a reliable and trustworthy person; and a warrant, in stating that the informant had a past history of reliability in similar matters which had led to three arrests and to the confiscation of illegal drugs, met this test. Cooksey v. State, 149 Ga. App. 572, 254 S.E.2d 892 (1979).

Motion to suppress was properly denied because, although an officer possibly could have provided the magistrate with more detail concerning the confidential informant's past reliability, considering the information about the informant's relationship with the defendant and how the informant came to be in the defendant's apartment; that the officer knew the informant and found the information from the informant to be reliable in the past; the recent time frame for when the informant had been in the apartment and viewed suspected drugs and paraphernalia; and the confirmation that the occupants were convicted felons, the information relayed to the magistrate provided a substantial basis for the magistrate's finding of probable cause. Galloway v. State, 332 Ga. App. 389, 772 S.E.2d 832 (2015).

Informant's lack of previous contact not fatal. — Informant's lack of previous contact with the authorities is not fatal to the informant's veracity. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

Investigation showing informant law abiding sufficient. — There is a sufficient showing of credibility and thus probability of truthfulness to authorize issuance of a search warrant when the affiant can state to the magistrate that the affiant's investigation shows that the informant is a law-abiding citizen or the informant is personally known to the affiant to be a law-abiding citizen. Miller v. State, 155 Ga. App. 399, 270 S.E.2d 822 (1980).

Officer's corroboration of informant's allegations sufficient. — Personal observation by the affiant that known violators of the law sought to be enforced frequented the defendant's home, plus information from an informant who had proven reliable in the past of specific facts sufficient to constitute probable cause will authorize the issuance of the warrant. Wood v. State, 118 Ga. App. 477, 164 S.E.2d 233 (1968).

Information received from an informant, who has proven to be reliable in the past, in conjunction with the affiant's personal observation that violators of the law sought to be enforced frequent the place to be searched is sufficient to sustain a search warrant. Thornton v. State, 125 Ga. App. 374, 187 S.E.2d 583 (1972).

When an officer's investigation of the information received from the officer's informants corroborates the informants' allegations against the defendant, the reliability of the informants is sufficiently established to justify the issuance of a search warrant. Reece v. State, 152 Ga. App. 760, 264 S.E.2d 258 (1979).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to pursue a motion to suppress the drug evidence as the magistrate had a substantial basis for concluding that probable cause existed to issue the search warrant because any deficiency in the affidavit with respect to an informant's veracity was not fatal as the informant's veracity, reliability, and basis of knowledge were merely several of a number of relevant factors that the appellate court had to review; and the informant's tip that marijuana was being sold out of a particular apartment was sufficiently corroborated by the police officers' detection of a strong odor of unburned marijuana emanating from the apartment that the informant had identified as selling the marijuana. Coleman v. State, 337 Ga. App. 304, 787 S.E.2d 274 (2016), cert. denied, No. S16C1735, 2016 Ga. LEXIS 801 (Ga. 2016).

Minor inaccuracies will not void warrant. — Existence or nonexistence of probable cause must be judged as of the time it is presented to the magistrate. Minor factual inaccuracies which are only peripherally relevant to the showing will not void the warrant when the inaccuracies' presence in the affidavit is not such as to reflect on the credibility of the affiant. Dresch v. State, 125 Ga. App. 110, 186 S.E.2d 496 (1971).

Informant's testimony consistent with major allegations in affidavit. — When, on the hearing of a motion to suppress evidence, the testimony of an informant is consistent with the material allegations in the affidavit, factual inaccuracies of peripheral relevance that are not the personal observations of the affiant do not destroy an otherwise adequate showing of probable cause. Pass v. State, 227 Ga. 730, 182 S.E.2d 779 (1971).

Informer's reliability and how information obtained necessary. — Affidavit based on informer's tip is fatally defective as basis for search warrant when an affidavit recites absolutely nothing which would show the informer's reliability nor states how the informer obtained information, and under Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) evidence thus obtained must be suppressed. Grebe v. State, 125 Ga. App. 873, 189 S.E.2d 698 (1972).

Declaration against penal interest by an informant, based on personal observation, in itself provides a substantial basis for the magistrate to credit that statement given in an affidavit for a search warrant. Tomlinson v. State, 242 Ga. App. 117, 527 S.E.2d 626 (2000).

Affidavit not showing recent offense insufficient even if informer reliable. — When an affidavit fails to show that a tip, even if from a reliable informer, relates to an offense or offenses closely related in time to the date of the affidavit, and does not show when, from whom, and under what circumstance the informer purchased the substance identified as heroin, it is deficient as a basis for probable cause. Gilliam v. State, 124 Ga. App. 843, 186 S.E.2d 290 (1971).

2. Probable Cause (Cont'd)

Test requires information to follow shortly after crime. — Warrant may issue based upon the hearsay of an informant. However, the time period involved must be closely enough related to the commission of the offense as to create a reasonable belief that the same conditions described in the affidavit still prevailed at the time of the issuance of the warrant. State v. Clark, 141 Ga. App. 886, 234 S.E.2d 713 (1977).

Information must follow crime closely enough to indicate conditions similar when warrant issued. — Proof of probable cause must be of facts so closely related to the time of the issue of the warrant as to justify a finding of probable cause at that time. Fowler v. State, 121 Ga. App. 22, 172 S.E.2d 447 (1970).

Requirement for timely execution of a search warrant under Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 5 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-25) indicates the legislative intent, as well as constitutional demand, that probable cause relate to current and not stale information. Fowler v. State, 121 Ga. App. 22, 172 S.E.2d 447 (1970).

Occurrence should be so near in point of time to the making of the affidavit and execution of the search warrant as to create a reasonable belief that the same conditions described in the affidavit still prevailed at the time of the issuance of the warrant. Kouder v. State, 154 Ga. App. 597, 269 S.E.2d 92 (1980).

Time requirements must be flexible. — In determining probable cause, it is clear that no iron-clad time rule should be established. It is a determination based on probabilities and practical considerations of everyday life on which reasonable and prudent men, not legal technicians, act. State v. Boswell, 131 Ga. App. 657, 206 S.E.2d 682 (1974).

Five days between information and affidavit not excessive. — A "five-day interval between the date of the affidavit and the date of the information" will not render a warrant invalid on the ground that the information was stale. Giles v. State, 149 Ga. App. 263, 254 S.E.2d 154 (1979), overruled on other grounds, State v. Thackston, 289 Ga. 412, 716 S.E.2d 517 (2011).

Present tense in affidavit shows facts current. — Use of the present tense in an affidavit to support a search warrant is sufficient to show that the facts recited are current and not stale. State v. Clark, 141 Ga. App. 886, 234 S.E.2d 713 (1977).

Future tense in affidavit shows facts current. — Since the "staleness" objection to information upon which a warrant is issued is without merit when the affidavit states that the activity is occurring, a fortiori there cannot be "staleness" when it is stated the activity will occur in the immediate future. Danford v. State, 133 Ga. App. 890, 212 S.E.2d 501 (1975).

Standard of prudent magistrate believing from affidavit that crime occurred. — Laying aside the question of whether the information in the affidavit was stale or too remote in point of time, in deciding whether there was probable cause, one looks to the affidavit to determine whether a reasonably prudent and discreet magistrate would be led to believe from the facts stated that a crime was probably being committed or probably had been committed. McMahan v. State, 125 Ga. App. 491, 188 S.E.2d 183 (1972).

How "staleness" measured. — "Staleness" as relates to probable cause is measured by the probability that the thing to be seized is located at the place to be searched and it involves the interval between (i) the time when the thing to be seized is indicated by the evidence or information to be at the place to be searched and (ii) the time when the search warrant is issued. Caffo v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981); Shrader v. State, 159 Ga. App. 522, 284 S.E.2d 37 (1981).

Sufficient probable cause in sexual exploitation of children case. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized from a search warrant authorizing entry into the defendant's home because the affidavit submitted in support of the warrant provided a sufficient basis for the magistrate to make a practical, commonsense decision that there was a fair probability that evidence of sexual exploitation of children would be found at the defendant's residence; the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children forwarded the information it received from a security specialist employed by the host of the website to the Georgia Bureau of Investigation (GBI), and the affidavit of a special agent with the GBI set forth facts that showed both the reliability and basis of knowledge of the specialist. James v. State, 312 Ga. App. 130, 717 S.E.2d 713 (2011), cert. denied, No. S12C0347, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 227 (Ga. 2012).

Sufficient probable cause in child abuse case. — Probable cause for issuance of a search warrant to find items used in mistreatment of deceased child was present based on testimony of social worker who had questioned deceased child's mother, and affidavit of investigator who had interviewed sister of deceased child. Lewis v. State, 255 Ga. 101, 335 S.E.2d 560 (1985).

Investigating officer's hearsay sufficient basis for warrant. — Hearsay of police officer investigating aggravated sodomy and child molestation case as to what the victim told the officer is a permissible basis for issuance of a warrant. Tyler v. State, 176 Ga. App. 96, 335 S.E.2d 691 (1985).

Evidence held sufficient to establish probable cause. — See Thomas v. State, 183 Ga. App. 819, 360 S.E.2d 75 (1987); Abraha v. State, 271 Ga. 309, 518 S.E.2d 894 (1999); Felix v. State, 241 Ga. App. 323, 526 S.E.2d 637 (1999).

Search warrant affidavit sufficient for motel room search. — Search warrant affidavit stating victims were shot with the same type of handgun; two were wrapped in large plastic bags sealed with tape; all three were crack addicts who dealt with and purchased cocaine from defendant; a photograph of defendant was found on one victim's body; defendant admitted owning guns and selling narcotics to the victims and claimed to be on a "hit list" of a rival drug dealer and sought protection for the dealer and the dealer's family but did not tell police about the motel room defendant leased provided a substantial basis to conclude probable cause existed for the issuance of a search warrant for the motel room to search for weapons, ammunition, blood, rope, tape, and garbage bags under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21(a). Fitz v. State, 275 Ga. 349, 566 S.E.2d 668 (2002).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized in a hotel suite because under the totality of the circumstances, the magistrate was authorized to make a pragmatic, commonsense judgment that there was a fair probability that a search of the suite would produce evidence that the occupants were in possession of drugs; a detective interviewed a member of the hotel's housekeeping staff who had seen drugs in the suite, and the affidavit showed that the witness, who was identified by name in the affidavit, reported that a guest in the room requested that the suite be cleaned while the guests went to get something to eat and that immediately upon entering the suite, the housekeeper observed a large quantity of what appeared to be marijuana and other drugs lying openly on the desk and television. Glass v. State, 304 Ga. App. 414, 696 S.E.2d 140 (2010).

Probable cause for search of out of state home in murder of spouse. — In a defendant's prosecution for malice murder in which the defendant's spouse was the victim, a motion to suppress evidence seized from the defendant's Florida home was properly denied because even after excision of information from an unreliable informant, the reconstituted affidavit provided probable cause to issue a search warrant under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21(a) based on an affidavit containing information about the defendant's pending divorce from the spouse and phone calls to and from the defendant at the time of the murder. Sullivan v. State, 284 Ga. 358, 667 S.E.2d 32 (2008).

Sufficient probable cause in rape case. — With regard to a defendant's convictions on multiple counts of rape and related crimes, the magistrate was presented with facts sufficient to show probable cause that a crime was being committed or had been committed to support the search of the defendant's home since, even excluding the photographic line-up identification of the defendant that was made by one victim that the state conceded was illegal, there was remaining additional evidence to have established probable cause to have searched the defendant's home. Namely, the same victim's cell phone was taken by the perpetrator and a phone call was made to the defendant's home from the cell phone, the physical description of the perpetrator by the victim matched the defendant's appearance, as did the victim's description of the perpetrator's vehicle, which matched the defendant's vehicle. Baker v. State, 295 Ga. App. 162, 671 S.E.2d 206 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0571, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 183 (Ga. 2009).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the admission of evidence of clothing, a mask, and a television seized from the defendant's apartment because probable cause existed for a search warrant as the magistrate had a substantial basis to determine that there was a fair probability that evidence of a crime would be found in the defendant's apartment because the police caught the defendant peeping into a woman's apartment in the area where the police believed a serial sexual offender was operating, and the defendant lied, falsely claiming to be spying on a girlfriend; the first victim testified that the perpetrator stole a television; and the defendant matched the description of the perpetrator given by two of the victims. Baxter v. State, 329 Ga. App. 589, 765 S.E.2d 738 (2014).

Officer's observations of stolen jonboat sufficient for probable cause. — Information from two neighbors that a jonboat had been stolen from another neighbor and that two men had been seen spray painting a jonboat and removing the jonboat's identifying numbers at the house next door, coupled with an officer's observation of the jonboat and the officer's comparison with a photo of the stolen boat, justified issuance of a search warrant. A tackle box that was improperly removed would have inevitably been discovered. State v. Kaulbach, 331 Ga. App. 610, 771 S.E.2d 245 (2015).

Probable cause to issue warrant following controlled buy. — Although the agent's affidavit lacked any information by which the magistrate could evaluate the confidential informant's credibility and reliability, the controlled buy established more than a fair probability that evidence of drug offenses would be found at the defendant's residence and, thus, the magistrate was presented with probable cause to issue the search warrant. Johnson v. State, 336 Ga. App. 888, 785 S.E.2d 424 (2016).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the need for continued investigation in the circumstances surrounding the shooting justified the issuance of the warrant for that purpose, and the affidavit also contained information about the defendant's drug activities, which supplied a possible motive for the shooting. Jones v. State, 337 Ga. App. 545, 788 S.E.2d 132 (2016).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress as the magistrate had sufficient information to find that probable cause existed for the issuance of the search warrant because a confidential informant (CI) participated in a controlled purchase of crack cocaine from the defendant; and, during the motion to suppress hearing, the officer testified that the officer told the magistrate under oath that the CI was searched before walking to the defendant's residence to make the buy with money supplied by the police; the CI had a substance believed to be an illegal drug in the CI's possession after the CI left the defendant's residence; and the officer had used the CI on two previous occasions. Woods v. State, 346 Ga. App. 323, 816 S.E.2d 156 (2018).

Officers plainly had probable cause to search the defendant's apartment as the affidavit accompanying the search warrant application stated that there were signs of a struggle in the victims' apartment, that there were two victims with stab wounds, that there were areas of blood spatter throughout the apartment, and that fresh blood was located on the entry door handle of the defendant's apartment. Bailey v. State, 301 Ga. 476, 801 S.E.2d 813 (2017).

There was sufficient probable cause to support the issuance of the warrant because the detective who received the tip and obtained the warrant surveilled the premises out of which the defendant was conducting drug sales for almost two weeks, during which time the officer observed a pattern of activity which was consistent with the description of drug activity provided by the anonymous source; the detective used a confidential source to buy narcotics, and the activity the officer observed during the buy was consistent with what the officer observed during the officer's surveillance; and law enforcement officers were not required to actually see drugs at a residence in order to establish probable cause for the issuance of the search warrant. Burgess v. State, 349 Ga. App. 635, 824 S.E.2d 99 (2019).

Probable cause to search in murder case. — Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied as a substantial basis existed for issuance of a warrant because the victim's body was discovered near the defendant's apartment as well as bloodstained items and cigarette butts wrapped in a towel; and, when the defendant belatedly disclosed that the defendant had disposed of bloodstained women's clothing before the discovery of the victim, and that the defendant smoked the brand of cigarettes found in the bloody towel, that evidence provided a substantial basis for the conclusion that the clothing belonged to the victim, that the defendant had a connection both to the clothing and cigarettes, and that the defendant's apartment had a fair probability of containing evidence of the crime. Mizell v. State, 304 Ga. 723, 822 S.E.2d 211 (2018).

Trial court erred by granting the defendant's motion to suppress all of the evidence seized at a residence because the affidavits underlying the warrants provided the magistrate with sufficient information to support probable cause as the evidence in the affidavits sufficiently corroborated the information received from the informant and established a nexus between the apartment and another address. Based on the suspect's vehicle, the investigators conducted surveillance on the apartment and the other address, a search of the other address uncovered large amounts of cocaine and methamphetamine, and a background check on the suspect connected the suspect to both the apartment and the other address. State v. Perez, 349 Ga. App. 707, 824 S.E.2d 804 (2019).

Fair probability that contraband would be found. — Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied as a search warrant was based on probable cause because Clayton County investigators purchased an illegal video poker machine from a subject in Clayton County, who said that the machine was obtained from a particular address in DeKalb County, and both DeKalb and Clayton investigators observed "several other illegal video poker machines" at that address; while the investigators could not tell from looking at the machines whether the machines were legal or not, the test was only whether the evidence established a fair probability that contraband would be found. Jones v. State, 276 Ga. App. 810, 625 S.E.2d 4 (2005).

Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied as: (1) the search warrant affidavit outlined the information provided by a New Hampshire detective's investigation, including the fact that the defendant had electronically sent the detective sexually explicit photographs of young boys; (2) the officer's affidavit also included information regarding the detective's extensive background and vast experience in the investigation of child sexual exploitation cases; (3) the detective's investigation provided probable cause to search the defendant's residence wherever that was; (4) the warrant sought sexually explicit photographs and other sexually explicit visual depictions of children, as well as the computer hardware and software used to create, store, and distribute those depictions; and (5) the affidavit contained information based on the detective's contact and electronic correspondence with the defendant indicating the likelihood that the defendant's computer files would contain evidence of child sexual exploitation, given that the affidavit stated that those who sexually exploited children often kept sexually explicit photographs and other images in their possession and often stored those images in computer files. Walthall v. State, 281 Ga. App. 434, 636 S.E.2d 126 (2006).

Disregard of false or omitted information. — Probable cause existed to issue warrant for search of a defendant's residence on the basis of a controlled buy of 3.5 grams of cocaine from the residence, regardless of allegedly false additional statements that the defendant had possessed handguns and narcotics at the residence in the recent past. Daniel v. State, 306 Ga. App. 48, 701 S.E.2d 499 (2010).

Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21(a), a magistrate properly issued the search warrant for a home, notwithstanding that false and illegally obtained information in the search warrant affidavit had been deleted, there still was sufficient untainted information regarding the location of marijuana to support a finding of probable cause for issuance of the warrant. Martinez-Vargas v. State, 317 Ga. App. 232, 730 S.E.2d 633 (2012), overruled on other grounds, State v. Kazmierczak, 331 Ga. App. 817, 771 S.E.2d 473 (Ga. Ct. App. 2015).

Seizure of Contraband Not in Warrant

Officer not permitted to seize every item considered connected. — To permit an officer to enter a home under a valid search warrant and then to extend the officer's search and seize every item in the house that the officer thinks might possibly be connected with a crime, when there is no substantiation by circumstance but just suspicion, would be contrary to constitutional guaranties of liberty. Dugan v. State, 130 Ga. App. 527, 203 S.E.2d 722 (1974).

Officer cannot use warrant to investigate unincriminating item. — Officer cannot use a warrant as a pretext for launching a full scale investigation as to the origins of an item which is not incriminating on the item's face. Hogan v. State, 140 Ga. App. 716, 231 S.E.2d 802 (1976).

General searches are prohibited. Hogan v. State, 140 Ga. App. 716, 231 S.E.2d 802 (1976).

Seizure of items not in warrant not per se general search. — Fact that a police officer seizes items not listed in the warrant does not render the search a general one nor make the search unlawful. Pass v. State, 227 Ga. 730, 182 S.E.2d 779 (1971); Jarvis v. Rubiano, 244 Ga. 735, 261 S.E.2d 645 (1979); McBee v. State, 228 Ga. App. 16, 491 S.E.2d 97 (1997).

Officers may seize contraband from crimes not in warrant. — Not only may contraband be seized if related to the crime in connection with which the search is made, but items related to other crimes may also be seized without prior enumeration in the warrant. Butler v. State, 130 Ga. App. 469, 203 S.E.2d 558 (1973).

Evidence of another crime discovered while searching pursuant to a valid search warrant may be lawfully seized. Jefferson v. State, 199 Ga. App. 594, 405 S.E.2d 575 (1991).

Officers may seize incriminating items in plain view. — When peace officers entered a defendant's residence armed with an arrest warrant and a search warrant, arrested the defendant and searched the premises, certain articles in plain view having strong evidentiary value as to the crimes charged are not subject to a motion to suppress although not specifically named in the search warrant. Scott v. State, 122 Ga. App. 204, 176 S.E.2d 481 (1970).

Officer in the process of executing a lawful search warrant was authorized under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21(b) to seize a defendant's tennis shoes, which appeared to the officer to be stained with blood, after performing a field test that confirmed the presence of blood because the shoes were in plain view as the officers lawfully searched the defendant's room for items stolen in a string of burglaries. Bryant v. State, 304 Ga. App. 456, 696 S.E.2d 439 (2010).

Discovery of contraband in room adjoining room named in warrant. — When contraband was not discovered in the room named in a search warrant, but in an adjoining room, and the defendant was occupying the room and was named in the warrant as one of the persons believed to be concealing cocaine on the premises, the search of the room was authorized by the warrant. Smith v. State, 194 Ga. App. 870, 392 S.E.2d 56 (1990).

Officers may seize marijuana in van when warrant was for portable welder. — Seizure of marijuana, which is contraband, from a closed van under a warrant for a stolen portable welder is authorized under subsection (b) of this section, which provides that while a peace officer is engaged in a lawful search the officer can seize anything, with the exception of private papers, which is unlawful or tangible evidence of the commission of a crime. Bradley v. State, 131 Ga. App. 271, 205 S.E.2d 463 (1974).

Officer not required to ignore contents of personal papers. — Officer who is properly searching the accused's personal effects for weapons or contraband is not required to ignore the contents of papers which constitute personal effects. Culbreth v. State, 152 Ga. App. 867, 264 S.E.2d 315 (1980).

Seizure of a checkbook. — Seizure of a personal paper of the defendant was harmless error in light of the defendant's admission of an offense relating to marijuana and the defendant's admission of other unlawful activity. Grant v. State, 198 Ga. App. 732, 403 S.E.2d 58, cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 897, 403 S.E.2d 58 (1991).

Seizure of drug ledgers. — Trial court did not err in admitting the drug ledgers which were found during a search of the defendant's residence as the ledgers were clearly relevant to the drug trafficking charge. Ibekilo v. State, 277 Ga. App. 384, 626 S.E.2d 592 (2006).

Papers as instrumentalities of crime. — If private papers merely constitute "tangible evidence" of the commission of a crime, those papers are not seizable. But if the papers are the instrumentalities of the crime, the papers are properly seizable under this section. Tuzman v. State, 145 Ga. App. 761, 244 S.E.2d 882, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 929, 99 S. Ct. 317, 58 L. Ed. 2d 323 (1978).

Seizure of papers to obtain a sample of defendant's handwriting did not violate the "private papers" exception to the permissible scope of search warrants under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21. Lowe v. State, 203 Ga. App. 277, 416 S.E.2d 750, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 906, 416 S.E.2d 750 (1992).

Bona fide search for item sought required. — There must be a bona fide search for the item sought to be found, but if, in the course of an authorized search, another contraband item is found on the party or premises searched, the officer is authorized to seize the item; for the search, though not productive of that which was sought, was legal. Dugan v. State, 130 Ga. App. 527, 203 S.E.2d 722 (1974).

If probable cause, seizure of car before warrant or search without warrant proper. — For constitutional purposes, there is no difference between on the one hand seizing and holding a car before presenting the probable cause issue to a magistrate and on the other hand carrying out an immediate search without a warrant; given probable cause to search, either course is reasonable under U.S. Const., amend. 4. State v. Watts, 154 Ga. App. 789, 270 S.E.2d 52 (1980).

Warrantless search of vehicle permissible only if prudent person expects contraband. — Probable cause would exist for the warrantless search of a vehicle only if the facts and circumstances would cause a reasonably prudent person to believe that contraband was present in the vehicle. Barlow v. State, 148 Ga. App. 717, 252 S.E. 214 (1979).

Officer needs probable cause to believe items part of crime. — In order to make a seizure, the officer effecting the seizure must have probable cause to believe that the articles seized were tangible evidence of the commission of the crime. Zimmerman v. State, 131 Ga. App. 793, 207 S.E.2d 220 (1974); Hogan v. State, 140 Ga. App. 716, 231 S.E.2d 802 (1976).

Probable cause cannot be found retroactively. — Rumor, suspicion, speculation, or conjecture is not sufficient to show probable cause. The police may not search and seize and then look for probable cause to justify police action. Probable cause must exist at the time of the search and seizure. Zimmerman v. State, 131 Ga. App. 793, 207 S.E.2d 220 (1974).

When the officer first viewed the rug, the officer only suspected that it was one of the stolen rugs, it was not immediately apparent to the officer that the rug was stolen property; thus, it cannot be said that the officer had probable cause to seize a rug when the rug was first seen by the officer. Hogan v. State, 140 Ga. App. 716, 231 S.E.2d 802 (1976).

Consent after seizure does not constitute retroactive consent. — Statement by the defendant that the police could take the typewriters does not operate as consent to the seizure for this statement occurred after the seizure. Zimmerman v. State, 131 Ga. App. 793, 207 S.E.2d 220 (1974).

Probable cause to believe items stolen is sufficient. — Law does not require that the officer knows that goods are the stolen property at the time the goods are seized. It is enough that the officer has probable cause to believe that this is the case. Dugan v. State, 130 Ga. App. 527, 203 S.E.2d 722 (1974).

Property immediately apparent as contraband. — Before a police officer may seize property in plain sight, it must be immediately apparent to the officer that the property to be seized is contraband. Copeland v. State, 162 Ga. App. 398, 291 S.E.2d 560 (1982).

Stolen property, contraband, and tangible evidence of other crimes subject to seizure. — Officer in the process of executing a lawful search warrant is authorized under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21(b) to seize any stolen property, contraband, or other item, other than private papers, which the officer has probable cause to consider tangible evidence of the commission of a crime, even though the property is not listed in the warrant. Whittington v. State, 165 Ga. App. 763, 302 S.E.2d 617 (1983).

Seizure of gun alleged to be stolen. — When, prior to a lawful search, a police officer had information from two sources that the defendant allegedly had a stolen gun, and the officer had a description of the gun, there was probable cause to seize the gun, and no rights were violated by the seizure of a gun hidden under a mattress. In re A.B., 194 Ga. App. 665, 391 S.E.2d 683 (1990).

Stolen articles lawfully seized during search for marijuana. — When officers lawfully conducting a search for marijuana ascertained that the contents of a bag was silverware of various patterns, one of the officers believed the patterns were consistent with certain silverware reported stolen and the fact that the silverware was concealed in a container which reasonably could hold marijuana and was located in a place where one does not expect to find silverware, this was sufficient to arouse the suspicion that the silverware was stolen and authorized seizure. Whittington v. State, 165 Ga. App. 763, 302 S.E.2d 617 (1983).

Stolen items subject to seizure with execution of search warrant for documents. — Seizure of items in plain view suspected to have derived from recent area burglaries while executing a search warrant for documents proving theft of services was valid when the incriminating character of the items was immediately apparent and the officer had a lawful right to visual and physical access of the objects themselves. Nichols v. State, 210 Ga. App. 134, 435 S.E.2d 502 (1993).

Search did not exceed scope of warrant. — Trial court did not err in finding that an officer's search of the defendant's computer did not exceed the scope of the warrant seeking evidence of illegal drug transactions because the warrant permitted the search of personal computers at the subject address since electronic records of illegal drug transactions were included amongst those items to be searched; the officer searching the defendant's computer did not engage in a wholesale fishing expedition but was instead seeking files encompassed by the warrant when the officer stumbled across the images of child pornography, and the officer immediately halted the search until an additional warrant was obtained. Henson v. State, 314 Ga. App. 152, 723 S.E.2d 456 (2012), cert. denied, No. S12C1217, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 669 (Ga. 2012).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Probate judges have the authority to issue search warrants. 1983 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U83-13.

Police must show informer reliable if tip basis of warrant. — If a warrant is to be obtained on basis of an informant's tip, the officer must set forth some of the underlying circumstances indicating that the informant is reliable. 1973 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U73-14.

Search and seizure of pharmaceutical prescriptions. — Any law enforcement official who has obtained a search warrant may lawfully search and seize prescriptions retained for inspection by a pharmacy as required by law. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 70-112.

Chief drug inspector of the State Board of Pharmacy and the inspector's assistants have the authority to make arrests for violations of Georgia Code Annotated T. 79A (see O.C.G.A. Ch. 13, T. 16) and to search and seize evidence necessary for the presentation before courts or before the State Board of Pharmacy; the chief drug inspector and the inspector's assistants do not have the authority to seize prescriptions from a pharmacy without properly acquiring a valid search warrant. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 70-112.

Campus police may execute affidavits for search warrants. — Campus police and security personnel are officers of the state within the meaning of this section and are authorized to execute the affidavits necessary for the procurement of a search warrant. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 70-69.

Campus police may search if granted arrest powers. — Individuals who have been granted arrest powers on premises under the jurisdiction of the Board of Regents are authorized to conduct searches. 1969 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 69-172.

17-5-21.1. Issuance of search warrants by video conference.

(a) A judge of any court in this state authorized to issue search warrants pursuant to Code Section 17-5-21 may, as an alternative to other laws relating to the issuance of search warrants, conduct such applications for the issuance of search warrants by video conference. The issuance of a search warrant by video conference shall be valid irrespective of the physical location of the judge at the time of the video conference, provided that the judge issuing the warrant is authorized by law to issue such warrant, and, at the time such warrant is issued, he or she is physically located within this state.

(b) Search warrant applications heard by video conference shall be conducted in a manner to ensure that the judge conducting the hearing has visual and audible contact with all affiants and witnesses giving testimony.

(c) The affiant participating in a search warrant application by video conference shall sign the affidavit for a search warrant and any related documents by any reasonable means which identifies the affiant, including, but not limited to, his or her typewritten name, signature affixed by electronic stylus, or any other reasonable means which identifies the person signing the affidavit and any related documents. The judge participating in a search warrant application by video conference shall sign the affidavit for a search warrant, the search warrant, and any related documents by any reasonable means which identifies the judge, including, but not limited to, his or her typewritten name, signature affixed by electronic stylus, or any other reasonable means which identifies the judicial officer signing the affidavit and warrant and any related documents. Such applications shall be deemed to be written within the meaning of Code Section 17-5-21. Such authorization shall be deemed to comply with the issuance requirements provided for in Code Section 17-5-22.

(d) A judge hearing matters pursuant to this Code section shall administer an oath to any person testifying by means of a video conference.

(e) A video recording of the application hearing and any documents submitted in conjunction with the application shall be maintained as part of the record.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Violation of state procedural rule vs. violation of federal procedural rule. — Evidence seized from the defendant's apartment pursuant to a search warrant would not be suppressed because a violation of state procedural law did not rise to the level of a Fourth Amendment violation, and there was no Fourth Amendment violation as police were in possession of a search warrant, signed by a judge and based on probable cause, at the time police seized evidence, and an affidavit provided ample probable cause for the search; even if the defendant could show that violation of a state procedural rule was analogous to a violation of a federal procedural rule for Fourth Amendment purposes, there was no evidence that the search might not have occurred if the video recording of an application hearing were maintained as part of the record in accordance with state rule. United States v. Gordon, No. 1:14-cr-312-WSD, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162150 (N.D. Ga. Dec. 2, 2015).

17-5-22. Issuance of search warrants by judicial officers generally; maintenance of docket record of warrants issued.

All warrants shall state the time and date of issuance and are the warrants of the judicial officer issuing the same and not the warrants of the court in which he is then sitting. Such warrants need not bear the seal of the court or clerk thereof. The warrant, the complaint on which the warrant is issued, the affidavit or affidavits supporting the warrant, and the returns shall be filed with the clerk of the court of the judicial officer issuing the same, or with the court if there is no clerk, at the time the warrant has been executed or has been returned "not executed"; provided, however, that the judicial officer shall keep a docket record of all warrants issued by him, and upon issuing any warrant he shall immediately record the same, within a reasonable time, on the docket.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Authority of judicial officer to issue search warrant does not vanish within restricted area. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-22 (when considered with O.C.G.A. §§ 17-5-21 and 17-7-20) means that the authority of a judicial officer to issue a search warrant to be executed within the area of the officer's jurisdiction does not vanish when the officer physically steps into an area where the officer's authority is restricted within the county in which the officer serves. State v. Varner, 248 Ga. 347, 283 S.E.2d 268 (1981).

Strict construction of warrant issuance procedure. — Proceedings for issuance of search warrants are to be strictly construed, and every constitutional and statutory requirement must be fully met, including all formalities required by statute, before a valid search warrant may issue. Moreover, a statute prescribing the method of issuing search warrants must be read and construed in light of, and conform in all essential respects to, the provisions of the Constitution granting immunity from unreasonable searches and seizures. Pruitt v. State, 123 Ga. App. 659, 182 S.E.2d 142 (1971).

Magistrate must decide if probable cause exists before issuing search warrant. — It is incumbent upon a magistrate to make an independent determination of probable cause before the magistrate issues a search warrant. An affidavit, sufficient both as to form and content, cannot support a search warrant when the issuing magistrate has not made any decision from reading the sheriff's affidavit but signed the warrant after ascertaining that the affidavit was technically correct. Page v. State, 136 Ga. App. 807, 222 S.E.2d 661 (1975).

Warrant must clearly describe suspect and premises. — To be valid, a search warrant must contain a description of the person and premises to be searched with such particularity as to enable a prudent officer executing the warrant to locate the person and place definitely and with reasonable certainty, without depending upon the officer's discretion. Durrett v. State, 136 Ga. App. 114, 220 S.E.2d 92 (1975).

Failure to state time of issuance. — When the time of issuance is not set forth as required by this section, in certain instances this omission can be a fatal defect, e.g., when there is some reason to believe the warrant was issued after the search. Merritt v. State, 121 Ga. App. 832, 175 S.E.2d 890 (1970).

Failure to state time not fatal if evidence shows warrant issued before search. — When officers have a warrant and serve the warrant when the officers arrive to make the search, an omission on the warrant of the time of issuance is a "technical irregularity not affecting the substantial rights of the accused" which would not require suppression of the evidence seized. Merritt v. State, 121 Ga. App. 832, 175 S.E.2d 890 (1970).

When the evidence showed that the warrants were issued prior to the search and seizure, the irregularity in omitting the time of issuance would not require the suppression of the evidence seized. Houser v. State, 234 Ga. 209, 214 S.E.2d 893 (1975).

No need for seal on warrants. — There is no requirement for a seal either on a warrant or a search warrant; therefore, a charge for the seal is not valid. Gill v. Decatur County, 129 Ga. App. 697, 201 S.E.2d 21 (1973).

Failure to file affidavit or prove docket record of warrant. — Search warrant is not inadmissible because the officers failed to file the affidavit with the issuing court after the warrant was executed or because there was no evidence indicating that a docket record of the warrant was made as these are technical irregularities not affecting the substantial rights of the accused. Sampson v. State, 165 Ga. App. 833, 303 S.E.2d 77 (1983); Bolt v. State, 230 Ga. App. 760, 497 S.E.2d 406 (1998).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Standards required for description of place and suspect. — To be valid, a search warrant must contain a description of the person and premises to be searched with such particularity as would enable a prudent person executing the warrant to locate the person and premises definitely and with reasonable certainty. Anderson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 25, 270 S.E.2d 263 (1980).

Premises description is sufficient if on its face it enables a prudent officer executing the warrant to locate the person and place definitely and with reasonable certainty. State v. Sanders, 155 Ga. App. 274, 270 S.E.2d 850 (1980).

Description of premises when owner's name not given. — When the name of the owner or occupant is not given, the description of the premises must be exact. State v. Sanders, 155 Ga. App. 274, 270 S.E.2d 850 (1980).

Search area to be described. — Warrant should not leave the place to be searched to the discretion of the officer. State v. Sanders, 155 Ga. App. 274, 270 S.E.2d 850 (1980).

Evidence needed to search automobile next to house in warrant. — In order to authorize a search of a vehicle parked within the curtilage of the premises which are to be searched pursuant to a warrant, there must be some evidence to connect the vehicle with the premises. Albert v. State, 155 Ga. App. 99, 270 S.E.2d 220 (1980).

Search warrant for residence permits searching guest rooms. — Warrant authorizing the search of a residence justifies the search of rooms which are part of the residence and under control of the proprietor of the residence, and evidence discovered may be used against a temporary gratuitous guest of the residence. Jones v. State, 127 Ga. App. 137, 193 S.E.2d 38 (1972).

No retroactive validation of void warrant. — Void search warrant cannot be validated and property illegally seized introduced in evidence merely because the officers were in fact reliably informed and did in fact recover contraband, nor can a deficiency be supplied by facts discovered in making the search, for the sufficiency of the affidavit must be determined as of the time the warrant issued. Anderson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 25, 270 S.E.2d 263 (1980).

Telephone call to magistrate to correct warrant justified. — When both the affidavit and the warrant recited probable cause to believe drugs would be found on the person of the named defendant and on the premises under defendant's possession, custody, and control, namely hotel room 327, the search of room 337 of that hotel constituted a reasonable search under the warrant, without amendment, upon the discovery before the warrant's execution that the defendant was registered in room 337, and the actions of the officer in phoning the issuing magistrate and obtaining authorization to make the correction were reasonable and proper. State v. Sanders, 155 Ga. App. 274, 270 S.E.2d 850 (1980).

Using redial feature of phone during execution of warrant. — Pretermitting whether the court erred in admitting the evidence the detective garnered from the employer by hitting automatic redial on the defendant's phone and reaching the defendant's employer, who informed the detective of the defendant's location, such evidence obtained did not contribute to the verdict inasmuch as there was an eyewitness to the crimes and other evidence linking the defendant with the murder and assaults. Veasley v. State, 275 Ga. 516, 570 S.E.2d 298 (2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 1002, 123 S. Ct. 1904, 155 L. Ed. 2d 832 (2003).

"Buy money" need not be attached. — Failure to attach a photocopy of the "buy money" to the affidavit did not violate the particularity requirement describing items to be seized since the warrant specified "monies derived from the sale of controlled substances." Smith v. State, 207 Ga. App. 463, 428 S.E.2d 403 (1993).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Constitutional standards for acceptable warrant directed to all police. — Even though the execution of a warrant is directed to all peace officers, a search pursuant to the warrant meets the requirements of the United States and Georgia Constitutions if the warrant was limited in the warrant's scope to physically described persons in a specific vicinity, and the description sufficiently permitted a prudent officer with a search warrant to be able to locate the person and place definitely and with reasonable certainty. Fomby v. State, 120 Ga. App. 387, 170 S.E.2d 585 (1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 1008, 90 S. Ct. 1236, 25 L. Ed. 2d 421 (1970).

Warrant photocopy acceptable. — Photocopy is an actual photograph of the document signed by the magistrate and it is entitled to an equal status of validity, constituting the "duplicate copy" required by the statute. DeFreeze v. State, 136 Ga. App. 10, 220 S.E.2d 17 (1975).

"Reserve deputies," aiding the sheriff in a search of land for contraband, who worked under the supervision and observation of the county deputies and were instructed not to handle any contraband discovered but rather only to alert the officers when the contraband was located, were within the provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-24, which states that the search warrant "shall be directed for execution to all peace officers of this state." Bradford v. State, 184 Ga. App. 459, 361 S.E.2d 838 (1987).

Execution by dentist. — Dental impressions, x-rays, and photographs produced in a search pursuant to a warrant did not have to be suppressed because the warrant was actually executed by a dentist since it would have been unreasonable to require that the actual physical gathering of the evidence, utilizing equipment and procedures requiring expert skill and having a high potential for harm to the person being searched, be done by peace officers. Harris v. State, 260 Ga. 860, 401 S.E.2d 263 (1991).

Requirement that a copy of the warrant be presented to a resident. — Denial of defendant's motion to suppress evidence had to be reversed; when a search warrant failed to meet the particularity requirement of U.S. Const., amend. XIV on the warrant's face but instead incorporates a supporting document by reference, the failure to leave a copy of that supporting document at the searched premises invalidated the warrant; thus, in the instant case, the warrant did not describe the place or the person to be searched and the agent who executed the warrant did not leave a copy of the supporting affidavit at the searched premises as required by O.C.G.A. §§ 17-5-24 and 17-5-25, and, therefore, the warrant had to be suppressed pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(a)(2). Battle v. State, 275 Ga. App. 301, 620 S.E.2d 506 (2005).

Forensic computer analysis. — No basis existed under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-24 for suppressing the results of forensic computer analysis because the analysis required expert skill, and without such expertise, it was conceivable that evidence could have been overlooked or even destroyed; the computer examination was conducted at the direction of Georgia peace officers to enable the officers to complete the officers' own investigation. Twiggs v. State, 315 Ga. App. 191, 726 S.E.2d 680 (2012).

17-5-25. Execution of search warrant generally.

The search warrant shall be executed within ten days from the time of issuance. If the warrant is executed, the duplicate copy shall be left with any person from whom any instruments, articles, or things are seized; or, if no person is available, the copy shall be left in a conspicuous place on the premises from which the instruments, articles, or things were seized. Any search warrant not executed within ten days from the time of issuance shall be void and shall be returned to the court of the judicial officer issuing the same as "not executed."

History. — Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 6.

Reason for ten-day limitation on executing warrants. — Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 6 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-25), in limiting the time to ten days from date of issuance in which search warrants may be executed, recognizes the importance of current information. Davis v. State, 127 Ga. App. 76, 192 S.E.2d 538 (1972).

Photocopy equivalent to warrant. — Photocopy is an actual photograph of the document signed by the magistrate and the photocopy is entitled to an equal status of validity, constituting the "duplicate copy" required by the statute. DeFreeze v. State, 136 Ga. App. 10, 220 S.E.2d 17 (1975).

Requirement that a copy of the warrant be presented to a resident. — Denial of defendant's motion to suppress evidence had to be reversed; a new precedent held that if a search warrant failed to meet the particularity requirement of U.S. Const., amend. 14 on the warrant's face but instead incorporates a supporting document by reference, failure to leave a copy of that supporting document at the searched premises invalidated the warrant, and in the instant case the warrant did not describe the place or the person to be searched and the agent who executed the warrant did not leave a copy of the supporting affidavit at the searched premises as required by O.C.G.A. §§ 17-5-24 and 17-5-25, and thus the warrant had to be suppressed pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(a)(2). Battle v. State, 275 Ga. App. 301, 620 S.E.2d 506 (2005).

Delay before leaving copy of warrant on premises. — Suppression of the fruits of a search warrant was not required when a copy of the warrant was not contemporaneously left on the premises where the warrant was executed because: (1) there was only a one- or two-day delay before a copy was left at the residence; (2) no personal property was seized; and (3) no resulting harm was specified. Brundige v. State, 310 Ga. App. 900, 714 S.E.2d 681 (2011), aff'd, 291 Ga. 677, 735 S.E.2d 583 (2012).

Technical violations of duplicate warrant requirement. — Fact that the copy of the search warrant received by the defendant after the defendant provided a DNA sample was lacking the issuing judge's signature as well as the date and time of the original warrant's execution did not warrant suppression of the DNA evidence pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-31, as any violations of the failure to comply with the duplicate warrant requirement of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-25 were technical at best; further, the defendant made no showing of prejudice or that any substantial rights were affected by such omissions. State v. Stafford, 277 Ga. App. 852, 627 S.E.2d 802 (2006).

Execution of warrant timely. — With regard to a defendant's convictions for trafficking in methamphetamine and possession of marijuana with intent to distribute following a bench trial, the appellate court determined that no staleness issue existed with regard to the warrant issued to search the defendant's apartment since the warrant was executed within ten days of the warrant's issuance. Rocha v. State, 284 Ga. App. 852, 644 S.E.2d 921 (2007).

When an arrestee sued police officers for executing an allegedly expired search warrant at the arrestee's home, the officers were entitled to qualified immunity and, thus, summary judgment dismissing the claim because while O.C.G.A. § 17-5-25 required a search warrant's execution within ten days after the warrant's issuance, it was unclear, as of the warrant's execution, that O.C.G.A. § 1-3-1(d)(3), regarding time computation, did not extend that time period to make that execution timely since the tenth day after the warrant was issued fell on a Sunday, followed by a legal holiday, immediately after which the warrant was executed. Hurley v. City of St. Marys, No. 209-212, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7399 (S.D. Ga. Jan. 26, 2011).

Subsequent test or analysis of seized item. — In a sexual exploitation of children case, a defendant's computer was seized within ten days of the issuance of a warrant as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-25; there was no requirement that the analysis and examination of the computer take place within the ten-day period. Mastrogiovanni v. State, 324 Ga. App. 739, 751 S.E.2d 536 (2013).

"No-knock" provision should not have been included in the warrant, when there was no allegation of increased peril to the officers or of danger that evidence would be destroyed. Adams v. State, 201 Ga. App. 12, 410 S.E.2d 139 (1991).

Trial court's grant of the defendants' motion to suppress evidence obtained from a house was not clearly erroneous because the "no-knock" provision in the search warrant for the house was unsupported by particular facts and circumstances justifying the need for its use and that no exigent circumstances were shown; a single report of the presence of a firearm over five months before the warrant issued, uncorroborated despite continued surveillance and investigation during that time, was stale. State v. Barnett, 314 Ga. App. 17, 722 S.E.2d 865 (2012).

No knock entry taints entire case. — Officers' entry into a motel room without giving notice of authority and purpose and without knowledge that the room is unoccupied is illegal and taints all subsequent events whether viewed for the purpose of executing the search warrant or viewed as an entry to effect an arrest without a warrant. Barclay v. State, 142 Ga. App. 657, 236 S.E.2d 901 (1977).

No-knock justified if police fear danger or destruction of evidence. — Failure of the police to knock and give verbal notice of their authority and purpose in the execution of a search warrant may be excused when the police have reasonable grounds to believe that forewarning would either greatly increase their peril or lead to the immediate destruction of the evidence. Scull v. State, 122 Ga. App. 696, 178 S.E.2d 720 (1970).

Threat of violence against the police is sufficient to justify the grant of an exemption from the notice requirement, and this is especially true when coupled with the probability of loss of evidence by flushing the evidence down a toilet. Jones v. State, 127 Ga. App. 137, 193 S.E.2d 38 (1972).

When a police officer has reasonable grounds to believe that forewarning parties believed to possess marijuana would lead to immediate destruction of the evidence, the officer's failure to knock and give verbal notice of the officer's authority and purpose in the execution of a search warrant is excused. Neal v. State, 173 Ga. App. 71, 325 S.E.2d 457 (1984).

Compliance with O.C.G.A. § 17-5-27 in the execution of a search warrant is not required when the police have a reasonable, good faith belief that forewarning would increase the peril of the police or lead to the immediate destruction of evidence. Hunter v. State, 198 Ga. App. 41, 400 S.E.2d 641 (1990), cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 898, 400 S.E.2d 641 (1991).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized from the home during execution of a search warrant as a confidential informant's statement to a police investigator that the defendant had automatic weapons in the house and that defendant "would not go down without a fight" was sufficient to create a reasonable belief that officers could be harmed if the officers announced the officers' presence when executing the search warrant; accordingly, the magistrate acted properly in issuing a "no-knock warrant," pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-27, and such did not justify suppression of the seized evidence. State v. Cochran, 275 Ga. App. 185, 620 S.E.2d 444 (2005).

Substantial basis existed for the inclusion of a no-knock provision in the issuance of a warrant based on a law enforcement officer's claim that notice would greatly increase the peril to the officers because the defendant had a criminal history that included a prior arrest for the sale of drugs, that drugs were often associated with the presence of firearms, and that it was believed that there were drugs in the premises to be searched, a substantial basis existed for the inclusion of the no-knock provision in the warrant. Smithson v. State, 275 Ga. App. 591, 621 S.E.2d 783 (2005).

Denial of a defendant's suppression motion was proper as the police officers were authorized to immediately enter a residence, without announcing the officers' presence as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-27, as the occupants fled upon seeing the police, into a residence where the police had recently conducted controlled drug buys and the officers had a reasonable belief that the fleeing occupants might retrieve weapons or destroy evidence; once legally inside the residence, the police were authorized to execute a search warrant that led to the discovery of the defendant's involvement in drug sales. Moreover, suppression of evidence was not a constitutionally-required remedy for an improper entry pursuant to an otherwise valid search warrant. Jackson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 716, 634 S.E.2d 846 (2006).

Agent's request for a no-knock warrant was properly granted because the subject had been convicted of theft by receiving stolen property and possession of marijuana with intent to distribute and, further, was the subject of a pending charge for possession of a firearm by a convicted felon. Kimble v. State, 301 Ga. App. 237, 687 S.E.2d 242 (2009).

Requirement of notice waived if requirement would increase peril to officers. — Although O.C.G.A. § 17-5-27 excuses force in the execution of a search warrant only after giving verbal notice of authority and presence, this requirement for notice is waived if giving notice would increase the peril of the officers conducting the search. Anderson v. State, 249 Ga. 132, 287 S.E.2d 195 (1982).

Good-faith belief that magistrate authorized "no-knock" search. — Mere fact that the issuing magistrate did not expressly authorize a "no-knock" search is of no consequence if there is a good-faith belief on the part of the arresting officer that such authorization was intended; and the officer's failure thereby to comply with the formal requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-27 does not justify exclusion of the evidence obtained. Neal v. State, 173 Ga. App. 71, 325 S.E.2d 457 (1984); Hunter v. State, 198 Ga. App. 41, 400 S.E.2d 641 (1990), cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 898, 400 S.E.2d 641 (1991).

Erroneously included "no knock" provision in the warrant did not require granting a motion to suppress when it appeared that officers entered the premises on the good faith belief that the officers were authorized, because of the peril created by the presence of a dangerous dog, to proceed with a "no-knock" warrant issued by the magistrate. Adams v. State, 201 Ga. App. 12, 410 S.E.2d 139 (1991).

In executing a warrant without a "no-knock" provision, a five to ten second interval between the police officer's knock and the nonviolent opening of the unlocked door (after no one inside responded) was not manifestly unreasonable. Felix v. State, 241 Ga. App. 323, 526 S.E.2d 637 (1999).

Police acted reasonably in delaying entry for three to five seconds. — Police acted reasonably in executing a search warrant at a certain house to look for evidence of drug transactions since the police knocked on the door and announced the identity of the police and the purpose in being there and since the police then waited three to five seconds before entering the home by nonviolent means after no one inside the home responded. Swan v. State, 257 Ga. App. 704, 572 S.E.2d 64 (2002).

Identity of informer may be withheld if reliable and detailed information. — If reasonable grounds for belief that exigent circumstances exist relieving police officers of the officers' duty to give verbal notice of the officers' authority and purpose in the execution of a search warrant are supplied by an informer, the informer's identity need not be disclosed if the information meets the same tests as those for probable cause for the issuance of a warrant, i.e., reliability of the informer shown and the tip sufficiently detailed. Scull v. State, 122 Ga. App. 696, 178 S.E.2d 720 (1970).

Determination of exigent circumstances necessary. — Trial court's conclusion that an announcement simultaneous with entry satisfied O.C.G.A.

§ 17-5-27 was erroneous and remand was necessary to determine if the entry was not forcible and exigent circumstances were present. Hourin v. State, 301 Ga. 835, 804 S.E.2d 388 (2017).

Trial court's determination of notice accepted if sufficient evidence. — When there is sufficient evidence to authorize a finding that verbal notice was given, the trial court's fact and credibility determinations on the issue must be accepted. Strickland v. State, 153 Ga. App. 51, 264 S.E.2d 540 (1980).

No-knock entry not justified. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's suppression motion as the law enforcement officers executing a search warrant, which did not contain a no-knock provision, for defendant's apartment failed to comply with O.C.G.A. § 17-5-27; defendant's convictions of possession of cocaine and possession of marijuana with intent to distribute were reversed as exigent circumstances to justify a forced entry into the apartment without an announcement were not established merely because a person appeared at a window of the apartment and left, in the absence of any evidence that: (1) the person at the window was defendant; (2) the defendant or the person who peered through the window had a history of violence; (3) either person had threatened violence if law enforcement officers entered; or (4) the defendant had located drugs in the apartment for quick disposal. Poole v. State, 266 Ga. App. 113, 596 S.E.2d 420 (2004).

General Consideration
Types of Searches
Construction of Warrants

PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE

General Consideration

Constitutionality. — This section is not void nor in violation of U.S. Const., amend. 14 in that the statute authorizes a search of the persons of citizens of the United States and of the State of Georgia without probable cause and without particularly describing the person to be searched or the articles to be seized. Wood v. State, 224 Ga. 121, 160 S.E.2d 368 (1968).

Applicability. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28 pertains only to searches conducted pursuant to a warrant. State v. Stephens, 167 Ga. App. 707, 307 S.E.2d 518 (1983).

Section defines how generalized searches can be constitutional. — This section describes the maximum extent to which U.S. Const., amend. 4 permits the particularity of description in a search warrant to be encroached by the practical necessities of the search environment. Wallace v. State, 131 Ga. App. 204, 205 S.E.2d 523 (1974); Campbell v. State, 139 Ga. App. 389, 228 S.E.2d 309 (1976), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 429 U.S. 1083, 97 S. Ct. 1089, 51 L. Ed. 2d 529 (1977).

Warrantless search permitted when probable cause. — This section does not limit the officer's right to search persons as to whom probable cause for a warrantless search exists. Wallace v. State, 131 Ga. App. 204, 205 S.E.2d 523 (1974); Travis v. State, 192 Ga. App. 695, 385 S.E.2d 779 (1989).

O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28 indicates when officer may search occupants not in warrant. — This section by necessary implication describes the limited circumstances in which the executing officer may search persons not identified in the warrant incident to a legitimate search of premises. Wallace v. State, 131 Ga. App. 204, 205 S.E.2d 523 (1974); Bramblett v. State, 205 Ga. App. 290, 422 S.E.2d 18 (1992).

Inclusion of language in the warrant authorizing the search of "any persons present" on the premises does not broaden the powers of the searching authorities beyond the limited terms of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28. State v. Holmes, 240 Ga. App. 332, 525 S.E.2d 698 (1999).

Persons entering during search must be authorized. — Right to search those coming in while a search of the premises is going on, when such search is expressly authorized by the warrant, must be shown by the grounds of probable cause or must have been authorized under the provisions of this section. Logan v. State, 135 Ga. App. 879, 219 S.E.2d 615 (1975).

Search of a visitor was not authorized since there was nothing about the visitor's demeanor that would support a reasonable belief or suspicion that the visitor was armed and dangerous and because the visitor was not in a position to assist in the disposal or concealment of drugs sought by the warrant. State v. Holmes, 240 Ga. App. 332, 525 S.E.2d 698 (1999).

Search of non-occupant of premises searched under warrant. — Under Georgia statutory law, the state has no authority to seize or search a non-occupant of the premises to be searched under a search warrant, who is not on the premises at the time of the search, absent probable cause for a warrantless search. State v. Mallard, 246 Ga. App. 357, 541 S.E.2d 46 (2000).

Searching persons not in warrant must be to preserve items in warrant. — This section allows the search of persons not particularly described in the search warrant only when the executing officer may reasonably believe that it is necessary: (1) to protect the officer from attack; or (2) to prevent the disposal or concealment of items particularly described in the warrant. A search for these purposes is permitted as an incident of a lawful arrest without a search warrant. Wood v. State, 224 Ga. 121, 160 S.E.2d 368 (1968).

Search to protect officer. — Search under paragraph (1) of this section is permissible only when the executing officer may reasonably believe that it is necessary to protect the officer from attack. Smith v. State, 139 Ga. App. 129, 227 S.E.2d 911 (1976).

State must prove reasons if justifying search through warrant. — If a search is to be upheld on the basis of the warrant, the state must demonstrate that the officer acted under either of the two justifications provided by this section. Smith v. State, 139 Ga. App. 129, 227 S.E.2d 911 (1976); Campbell v. State, 139 Ga. App. 389, 228 S.E.2d 309 (1976), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 429 U.S. 1083, 97 S. Ct. 1089, 51 L. Ed. 2d 529 (1977).

Searches pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28 are valid only if the state can point to particular facts from which the police reasonably inferred that the individual searched was armed and dangerous or was concealing things described in the search warrant. Clark v. State, 235 Ga. App. 569, 510 S.E.2d 319 (1998).

To support a search, officer had to be able to articulate specific facts that would support a reasonable belief or suspicion that the person to be searched was armed and dangerous. It was illegal to search a person not named in the warrant but found on the premises, without independent justification for a personal search. Mercer v. State, 251 Ga. App. 465, 554 S.E.2d 732 (2001).

State must show justification for expanded search. — To uphold a search of a person or vehicle not particularly described in the warrant the state must demonstrate that the searching officer acted under one of the two subdivisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28 justifying the expanded scope of a search. Collins v. State, 187 Ga. App. 430, 370 S.E.2d 648 (1988); Benham v. State, 196 Ga. App. 241, 395 S.E.2d 658 (1990).

When the police officer had no particular reason to suspect that the defendant was armed or was concealing items described in a search warrant, the weapons pat-down search of the defendant was illegal and the marijuana found pursuant to that illegal frisk should have been suppressed. Clark v. State, 235 Ga. App. 569, 510 S.E.2d 319 (1998).

Nexus between person and articles must be shown. — To search other persons under paragraph (2) of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28, there must be a nexus between what the officers are authorized to search for, based on the criminal activity which the officers had probable cause to believe was and/or still is occurring and which prompted the warrant, the nature of the evidence sought, the environment in which the search is authorized, and the person searched. There must be a connection between that person and the activity which logically leads to a belief that the person is in possession of a targeted item. State v. Hawkins, 187 Ga. App. 826, 371 S.E.2d 668 (1988).

Nexus between person and illegal activities must be shown. — Police officer did not have probable cause to search club visitor's purse since there was no competent evidence to establish a nexus between the visitor and alleged illegal activities at the club, and thus no reasonable basis for suspecting the visitor might be concealing either liquor or marijuana, which was the contraband named in a warrant. State v. Anderson, 195 Ga. App. 793, 395 S.E.2d 50 (1990).

"General" search warrant as to particular defendant. — Search warrant is "general" as to a particular defendant when the defendant is neither listed by name specifically nor described generally, and no additional indicia of probable cause are provided at the scene of the search. State v. Cochran, 135 Ga. App. 47, 217 S.E.2d 181 (1975).

Warrants held not general. — Warrant to search designated premises will not authorize the search of every individual who happens to be on the premises, but a warrant which identifies the premises and the premises' owners or occupants is not void as a general warrant because the warrant authorizes the search of other persons found there who may reasonably be involved in the commission of the crime for which the warrant is issued. Willis v. State, 122 Ga. App. 455, 177 S.E.2d 487 (1970).

Section does not define probable cause or specificity of warrant. — This section deals with the execution of the warrant, and does not purport to deal with the necessary elements of probable cause and particularity in the description of the persons to be searched and the articles to be seized. Wood v. State, 224 Ga. 121, 160 S.E.2d 368 (1968).

Presumption that valid warrant exists. — This section implicitly presupposes that a valid warrant is in existence before authorizing a search of other persons present at the place. Patterson v. State, 126 Ga. App. 753, 191 S.E.2d 584 (1972); Brown v. State, 133 Ga. App. 500, 211 S.E.2d 438 (1974).

Control by owner of personal belongings during visit to friend. — Personal belongings brought by an owner on a visit to a friend's house retain their constitutional protection until their owner meaningfully abdicates control or responsibility. Childers v. State, 158 Ga. App. 613, 281 S.E.2d 349 (1981).

No claim for false imprisonment existed since the plaintiffs were being detained briefly pending the execution of a lawful search warrant and the securing of the premises. White v. Traino, 244 Ga. App. 208, 535 S.E.2d 275 (2000).

Types of Searches

Valid warrant permits. — Because the officers are executing a valid warrant, under this section the officers are permitted to make a very limited search of those present in the apartment at the time. Campbell v. State, 139 Ga. App. 389, 228 S.E.2d 309 (1976), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 429 U.S. 1083, 97 S. Ct. 1089, 51 L. Ed. 2d 529 (1977).

Search of persons on premises. — This section allows a very limited search of persons present on the premises at the time of the search to look only for weapons or for the items particularly described in the warrant. Campbell v. State, 139 Ga. App. 389, 228 S.E.2d 309 (1976), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 429 U.S. 1083, 97 S. Ct. 1089, 51 L. Ed. 2d 529 (1977).

Frisk of an individual who is a visitor on the premises and who is not named in the warrant must be justified by the officer's reasonable belief that the frisk is necessary. Condon v. State, 203 Ga. App. 163, 416 S.E.2d 802 (1992).

Weapons search. — This section specifically gives the officer the right to search for weapons. This right is limited to a pat down of the person's outer clothing. Campbell v. State, 139 Ga. App. 389, 228 S.E.2d 309 (1976), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 429 U.S. 1083, 97 S. Ct. 1089, 51 L. Ed. 2d 529 (1977).

When the warrant authorized a search for drugs, police officers could anticipate that those suspected of involvement in the drug trade might be armed, and when the defendant arrived on the scene in a truck, the officer was clearly authorized to direct that the defendant step from the defendant's truck and submit to a frisk for weapons. Condon v. State, 203 Ga. App. 163, 416 S.E.2d 802 (1992).

Weapons search through limited pat down of outer clothing. — Type of weapons search referred to in this section is the limited pat down search of a person's outer clothing. Smith v. State, 139 Ga. App. 129, 227 S.E.2d 911 (1976).

Steps in pat down search. — Two-step process must ordinarily be followed in a pat down search: (1) the officer must pat down first; and (2) then intrude beneath the surface only if the officer comes upon something which feels like a weapon. Wyatt v. State, 151 Ga. App. 207, 259 S.E.2d 199 (1979).

Search to prevent concealment. — Search of defendant's person conducted to prevent concealment of contraband sought pursuant to the search warrant was lawful. Scott v. State, 213 Ga. App. 84, 444 S.E.2d 96 (1994).

Frisk not used to obtain evidence. — Unlike a full search, a frisk is conducted solely for the purpose of insuring the safety of the officer and of others nearby, not to procure evidence for use at a subsequent trial. Brown v. State, 133 Ga. App. 500, 211 S.E.2d 438 (1974).

Illegal search not validated by finding evidence of crime. — If one is unlawfully searched, the fact that incriminatory matter is found on that person will not render the search legal. Willis v. State, 122 Ga. App. 455, 177 S.E.2d 487 (1970).

Pat down requires demonstrable indications of danger. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28 authorizes a defendant's detention and search of the defendant's person to protect police officers from attack after the defendant's companion is seen reaching for an exposed pistol. Rockholt v. State, 129 Ga. App. 99, 198 S.E.2d 885 (1973).

"Pat down" search authorized under this section to protect the officer from attack is permissible only when the executing officer may reasonably believe that the pat down is necessary and the officer must be able to point to particular facts from which the officer reasonably inferred that the individual was armed and dangerous. Wyatt v. State, 151 Ga. App. 207, 259 S.E.2d 199 (1979).

Pat-down search to protect from attack. — Since the testimony of a police officer clearly established that the officers conducting the search reasonably could have concluded that the defendant was armed and dangerous, a pat-down search was authorized under paragraph (1) of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28. Brown v. State, 181 Ga. App. 768, 353 S.E.2d 572 (1987).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's suppression motion as drug evidence was properly seized during a pat-down search of the defendant's person for weapons, which was justified under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28 because police were in the process of executing a search warrant to search for drugs; a deputy's removal of a package from the defendant's pants pocket was within the scope of the defendant's consent. Brint v. State, 306 Ga. App. 10, 701 S.E.2d 507 (2010).

Drugs found incidental to pat-down search. — Since the records were totally devoid of testimony or facts showing that the searching officer first conducted a tactile and visual search of defendant's shirt and, only then, finding something that felt like a weapon, extended the search into defendant's shirt pocket, where cocaine was found, the weapons search was not conducted within constitutionally permissible bounds and the seizure of the drugs could not be justified on this basis. Brown v. State, 181 Ga. App. 768, 353 S.E.2d 572 (1987).

Since the defendant refused to exit a vehicle at the officer's request and resisted the officer's efforts to place the defendant against the vehicle, the officer was authorized to conduct a pat-down to determine if the defendant was armed and, when the defendant refused to identify an object the officer felt in the defendant's pocket (subsequently identified as a packet of cocaine), the officer was justified in retrieving the object. McGugan v. State, 215 Ga. App. 535, 451 S.E.2d 460 (1994).

Search of persons suspected of selling drugs. — Although the defendant argued that the defendant was only a visitor at the house being searched, police had the authority to search the defendant when the police had information that two black Haitian males were selling cocaine in the house, and the defendant was the only black Haitian male present. Louis v. State, 188 Ga. App. 435, 373 S.E.2d 231 (1988).

Construction of Warrants

Warrant permitting search of anyone possibly involved is more intrusive than weapons search. — Warrant that permits the search of any person on the premises who might reasonably be involved in the crime of possession of illegal drugs or narcotics is more intrusive than the weapons search authorized by paragraph (2) of this section. Wallace v. State, 131 Ga. App. 204, 205 S.E.2d 523 (1974).

Words "any person present." — Even though the words "and any person present" are in a warrant, the searching authorities may not broaden the authorities' power to search persons not identified in the warrant beyond the limited terms of this section. Wallace v. State, 131 Ga. App. 204, 205 S.E.2d 523 (1974).

Unless warrant states drug users seen, and persons found in room containing concealable drugs. — Searches may be upheld under this section when a warrant states that known drug abusers have been observed by police entering and leaving the premises, and persons not specified in the warrants are found sitting in the same room with the named suspects when the contraband pills could easily be passed around and concealed; the persons named in the warrant should either be present or actually reside there, and the particular contraband described should be found. Wyatt v. State, 151 Ga. App. 207, 259 S.E.2d 199 (1979).

Warrant containing no language authorizing search of persons. — When the warrant contained no language authorizing the search of any person present on the premises, the defendant was wearing a coat and the defendant's purse was on a table beside the defendant, the police determined that the defendant lived in Cleveland, Tennessee, not in the trailer that was the subject of the search warrant, and they also learned that the trailer belonged to two men, which also indicated that the defendant was a visitor, the search of defendant's purse was illegal and it was, therefore, error to deny the defendant's motion to suppress. Hawkins v. State, 165 Ga. App. 278, 300 S.E.2d 224 (1983).

Independent justification for search of unnamed persons. — Searches of persons not named in search warrant but found on premises to be searched are illegal absent independent justification for a personal search. Childers v. State, 158 Ga. App. 613, 281 S.E.2d 349 (1981); Bundy v. State, 168 Ga. App. 90, 308 S.E.2d 213 (1983); State v. Varner, 239 Ga. App. 347, 521 S.E.2d 247 (1999).

Persons not named in warrant may be searched for weapons. — Person found on the premises, but not named in the warrant, may be searched in a pat down for weapons when the searching officers have information that there are firearms on the premises. Gumina v. State, 166 Ga. App. 592, 305 S.E.2d 37 (1983).

Warrant covering apartment building did not cover individual standing in common area. — Search warrant for an apartment in a multi-unit building was not broad enough to include the search of the individual suspect who was standing outside the premises in a common area, the parking lot which served all four apartment units in the building. Bayshore v. State, 208 Ga. App. 828, 432 S.E.2d 251 (1993).

Practice and Procedure

Two-and-a-half hour search for cocaine in an apartment was not unreasonable on its face since cocaine is a substance which is concealed easily. Riviera v. State, 190 Ga. App. 823, 380 S.E.2d 353 (1989).

If a visitor in a residence makes no threat or gesture which causes the officer to fear for the officer's safety and the officer has no prior knowledge of the visitor, the police officer has no reasonable belief that the visitor is armed or is a threat to the officer's safety, and a search of the visitor is illegal. Bundy v. State, 168 Ga. App. 90, 308 S.E.2d 213 (1983).

Whether police had notice that the police were searching personal effects of a visitor to searched premises must be determined on the facts of each case. Childers v. State, 158 Ga. App. 613, 281 S.E.2d 349 (1981).

Search of visitor at apartment was authorized since the officers knew that drug dealing there had been heavy that day and the visitor matched the description of a dealer known to supply drugs to residents of the apartment. Steward v. State, 237 Ga. App. 672, 516 S.E.2d 534 (1999); Hall v. State, 242 Ga. App. 280, 527 S.E.2d 624 (2000).

Police may assume all objects are part of premises. — Without notice of some sort of the ownership of a belonging, the police are entitled to assume that all objects within premises lawfully subject to search under a warrant are part of those premises for the purpose of executing the warrant. Childers v. State, 158 Ga. App. 613, 281 S.E.2d 349 (1981).

Flight from premises. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28 does not limit an officer's right to search persons as to whom probable cause for a warrantless search exists; defendant's flight from premises identified in a search warrant, coupled with the defendant's presence at the premises, provided probable cause to believe that the defendant possessed, or was a party to possessing, unlawful contraband, justifying an officer's stop and search of the defendant. Underwood v. State, 266 Ga. App. 119, 596 S.E.2d 425 (2004).

Search of bags being carried and in pockets. — Searches of paper bag carried under person's arm and of plastic bag in person's pocket are treated as searches of the person. Childers v. State, 158 Ga. App. 613, 281 S.E.2d 349 (1981).

Search of purse found near defendant. — Police, executing a search warrant in the home of the defendant's son, properly searched a purse found a few inches away from the defendant, when the son was absent and the purse was by its nature a holding object and one capable of concealment of such items as drugs or weapons. Bonds v. State, 188 Ga. App. 135, 372 S.E.2d 448 (1988).

Defendant's admission during detention for search. — Defendant could not raise an objection to the admission of defendant's spontaneous statement to police officers executing a search warrant that "you've got me" for the first time on appeal absent plain error; there was no plain error in admitting the statement as: (1) the defendant was being detained under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28, and was not under arrest; (2) the defendant was not being interrogated, making Miranda warnings not required; (3) defense counsel cross-examined the officers on the statement: (4) the statement was admissible as a spontaneous statement; and (5) the statement was admissible under former O.C.G.A. § 24-6-3 (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3) as a part of the res gestae. Zackery v. State, 262 Ga. App. 646, 586 S.E.2d 346 (2003).

Warrantless search not authorized. — Officers did not possess articulable facts that the home harbored any persons who could pose a danger to those on the arrest scene and therefore a protective sweep was not authorized. State v. Mixon, 251 Ga. App. 168, 554 S.E.2d 196 (2001).

Motion to suppress should have been granted. — Detention and search of the defendant's person at defendant's aunt's home where the defendant was visiting at the time police arrived to execute a search warrant was not justified under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28(2) since the officers failed to articulate facts that justified the defendant's search for safety reasons and defendant was not named in the search warrant. Norton v. State, 283 Ga. App. 790, 643 S.E.2d 278 (2007).

17-5-29. Written return of items seized; filing and signing of inventory; delivery of copies of inventory.

A written return of all instruments, articles, or things seized shall be made without unnecessary delay before the judicial officer named in the warrant or before any court of competent jurisdiction. An inventory of any instruments, articles, or things seized shall be filed with the return and signed under oath by the officer executing the warrant. The judicial officer or court shall, upon request, deliver a copy of the inventory to the persons from whom or from whose premises the instruments, articles, or things were taken and to the applicant for the warrant.

History. — Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 10.

Inventory search permitted for custodial purposes, not investigative. — To prevent escape, self-injury, or harm to others, the police have a legitimate interest in separating the accused from the property found in the accused's possession. An inventory is then necessary both to preserve the property of the accused while the accused is in jail and to forestall the possibility that the accused may later claim that some item has not been returned to the accused. However, the inventory must not be done with an investigative intent, but it should be incident to the caretaking function of the police. Gaston v. State, 155 Ga. App. 337, 270 S.E.2d 877 (1980).

Failure to give magistrate inventory copy not fatal. — When the executing officers gave the defendant an inventory of the items seized, the officers' failure to deliver a similar inventory to the magistrate issuing the warrant as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-2 and a return thereof on the warrant as required by Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 10 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-29), and a delivery to the sheriff of the items seized, and a report to the commissioner of revenue are not cause for the suppression of the evidence. Holloway v. State, 134 Ga. App. 498, 215 S.E.2d 262 (1975).

Failure to swear return before proper officer not fatal. — Absent a showing of prejudicial error to the defendant, the failure to swear to the return before an officer authorized to administer oaths is not such a fatal defect as to vitiate the search warrant. Waters v. State, 122 Ga. App. 808, 178 S.E.2d 770 (1970).

Officer's failure to sign "return of things seized" not fatal. — Defect in the search warrant procedure wherein the officer executing the warrant failed to sign the "return of things seized" is not a fatal defect because of the absence of a showing of prejudicial error to the defendant. Vaughn v. State, 126 Ga. App. 252, 190 S.E.2d 609 (1972).

Failure to make return does not invalidate warrant. — Assuming arguendo that a return was not made as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-29, the failure does not affect the validity of the search. Wallace v. State, 165 Ga. App. 804, 302 S.E.2d 718 (1983).

Untimely return not fatal when no showing of prejudice. — Trial court properly refused to suppress blood and urine test records under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-31, although a written return of the warrant was not made in a timely fashion, as provided in O.C.G.A. § 17-5-29, because a defendant received a copy of the inventory of the medical records seized, and made no showing of prejudice as a result of the delayed filing. Stubblefield v. State, 302 Ga. App. 499, 690 S.E.2d 892 (2010).

Affidavit showing nothing on informer's reliability and source. — Affidavit based on an informer's tip is fatally defective as the basis for a search warrant when the affidavit recites absolutely nothing which would show the informer's reliability nor states how the informer obtained the informer's information, and under Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 10 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) evidence obtained must be suppressed. Grebe v. State, 125 Ga. App. 873, 189 S.E.2d 698 (1972).

17-5-30. Motion to suppress evidence illegally seized generally.

(a) A defendant aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure may move the court for the return of property, the possession of which is not otherwise unlawful, and to suppress as evidence anything so obtained on the grounds that:

(1) The search and seizure without a warrant was illegal; or

(2) The search and seizure with a warrant was illegal because the warrant is insufficient on its face, there was not probable cause for the issuance of the warrant, or the warrant was illegally executed.

(b) The motion shall be in writing and state facts showing that the search and seizure were unlawful. The judge shall receive evidence out of the presence of the jury on any issue of fact necessary to determine the motion; and the burden of proving that the search and seizure were lawful shall be on the state. If the motion is granted the property shall be restored, unless otherwise subject to lawful detention, and it shall not be admissible in evidence against the movant in any trial.

(c) The motion shall be made only before a court with jurisdiction to try the offense. If a criminal accusation is filed or if an indictment or special presentment is returned by a grand jury, the motion shall be made only before the court in which the accusation, indictment, or special presentment is filed and pending.

General Consideration

Purpose of section procedural. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 authorizes a motion to suppress any evidence illegally seized and thereby forestall a full-blown trial with all a trial's ramifications when the state cannot establish that the state's incriminating evidence is admissible as evidence. Though the invasion of privacy may be the underlying right to be protected, the purpose of that section is procedural, to suppress that which is inadmissible. State v. Johnston, 160 Ga. App. 71, 286 S.E.2d 47 (1981), aff'd, 249 Ga. 413, 291 S.E.2d 543 (1982).

Purpose of motion to suppress. — Motion to suppress is used to suppress evidence (property) illegally seized. Jarrell v. State, 234 Ga. 410, 216 S.E.2d 258 (1975), cert. denied, 428 U.S. 910, 96 S. Ct. 3223, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1218 (1976).

Restraint in use of illegally obtained evidence. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 not only affords protection from constitutionally violative searches and seizures but also authorizes restraint in use of illegally obtained evidence. State v. Johnston, 160 Ga. App. 71, 286 S.E.2d 47 (1981), aff'd, 249 Ga. 413, 291 S.E.2d 543 (1982).

Broad range of unlawful search and seizures covered. — Language of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 is broad enough to encompass unlawful seizures which do not involve any question of a search in violation of U.S. Const., amend. 4. In fact, the heading of that section states as much. State v. Johnston, 160 Ga. App. 71, 286 S.E.2d 47 (1981), aff'd, 249 Ga. 413, 291 S.E.2d 543 (1982).

Section protects only against unreasonable search and seizure. — Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) furnishes a procedural device for the protection of constitutional guaranties against unreasonable search and seizure only. Hawkins v. State, 117 Ga. App. 70, 159 S.E.2d 440 (1967).

Attacking validity of indictment. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 is not a proper method of attacking the validity of an indictment. Ibietatorremendia v. State, 163 Ga. App. 399, 294 S.E.2d 646 (1982).

Motion to suppress is statutory and relates only to "evidence illegally seized." Goswick v. State, 150 Ga. App. 279, 257 S.E.2d 303 (1979).

Motion not common law. — Because a motion to suppress was not a part of the common law and prior to 1966 "was unknown in the law of this state" it has only such scope and jurisdiction as are contained within Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) and it is not error for a court to refuse to hear the motion. Goswick v. State, 150 Ga. App. 279, 257 S.E.2d 303 (1979).

Not applicable to suppression of statements. — Despite a claim that a defendant's motion to suppress inculpatory statements made during a police interview was procedurally defective under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b), the granting of such a motion could not be reversed on that basis as the statute only applied to the suppression of tangible evidence. State v. Lee, 295 Ga. App. 49, 670 S.E.2d 879 (2008).

Suppression motion properly denied. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence found during the execution of a search warrant as the appellate court found that, after reviewing all of the information in the affidavit as a whole, it provided sufficient probable cause for the magistrate to issue the search warrant and that the information provided was not stale. The warrant was executed the same day that the warrant was issued and was supported by a law enforcement affidavit reciting a stop made of the defendant's vehicle for a failure to have tags and various drugs and drug-related items found in the vehicle that served as the basis for obtaining the search warrant for the defendant's home. Cleveland v. State, 290 Ga. App. 835, 660 S.E.2d 777 (2008).

Evidence in plain view was not suppressed. — Suppression of evidence seized from a defendant's home and car was not required as deputies initially entered the defendant's home in search of an assault victim with the defendant's consent, entry into the home was also supported under the exigent circumstances exception to the warrant requirement, blood evidence that was observed in plain view could be seized, photos of evidence inside the home that were in plain view could be taken even if the exigency had expired, photos taken of blood and hair evidence that were in plain view in the defendant's car did not offend U.S. Const., amend. IV, and even if opening the door of the car to assist in taking the photos constituted a warrantless search, it was justified by the exigencies of the case. Lord v. State, 297 Ga. App. 88, 676 S.E.2d 404 (2009).

Trial court did not err in refusing to suppress statements the defendant made after an officer told the defendant that withholding information would make things worse for the defendant because the officer's statement to the defendant was, in context, an admonition not to damage the defendant's credibility but to tell the truth, and the statement did not show the physical or mental torture or the coercion by threats that constitutes the remotest fear of injury forbidden by former O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-8-824); since no promises of lighter punishment were made, such an admonition to tell the truth did not constitute hope of benefit so as to render involuntary any statement made thereafter. Madrigal v. State, 287 Ga. 121, 694 S.E.2d 652 (2010), overruled on other grounds, State v. Kelly, 290 Ga. 29, 718 S.E.2d 232 (2011).

Evidence seized from motel room not suppressed. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized in a hotel suite because under the totality of the circumstances, the magistrate was authorized to make a pragmatic, commonsense judgment that there was a fair probability that a search of the suite would produce evidence that the occupants were in possession of drugs; a detective interviewed a member of the hotel's housekeeping staff who had seen drugs in the suite, and the affidavit showed that the witness, who was identified by name in the affidavit, reported that a guest in the room requested that the suite be cleaned while the guests went to get something to eat and that immediately upon entering the suite, the housekeeper observed a large quantity of what appeared to be marijuana and other drugs lying openly on the desk and television. Glass v. State, 304 Ga. App. 414, 696 S.E.2d 140 (2010).

Suppression motion denied regarding evidence from briefcase. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence officers seized from the defendant's briefcase because the contents of the briefcase were seized pursuant to a valid search warrant based upon information wholly independent from law enforcement's illegal use of the friend to obtain the briefcase and, thus, the search met the criteria for admissibility under the independent source doctrine; although the defendant had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the defendant's locked briefcase and did not abdicate control or responsibility of the briefcase, the investigating officer became aware of the existence of the briefcase and the briefcase's contents based upon the statements of the victim and another woman and was able to obtain a search warrant for the briefcase's contents based upon that information. Wilder v. State, 304 Ga. App. 891, 698 S.E.2d 374 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress a firearm police officers seized from the defendant's person because the officers conducting the initial pat-down of the defendant acted in accordance with the Fourth Amendment, and there was no taint upon the second pat-down leading to seizure of the firearm; because the initial pat-down of the defendant was supported by particularized facts observed by the officers, and the defendant's actions were consistent with the officers' hypothesis that the defendant was contemplating a robbery of a store manager, the trial court was authorized to find that a reasonably prudent person under the circumstances would have been warranted in believing that the defendant posed a danger to his or her safety, such that the officers' act of conducting the initial pat-down search for a weapon was constitutionally permissible. Lewis v. State, 307 Ga. App. 593, 705 S.E.2d 693 (2011).

Denial of suppression motion for saliva testing in rape case. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress as there was a substantial basis for concluding that probable cause existed for the issuance of the search warrant for a saliva sample from the defendant because the officer averred in the affidavit that there was probable cause to believe that the defendant had committed the rape of the victim; and the affidavit included averments that the victim's assailant had attempted vaginal penetration repeatedly, and that a rape kit had been completed soon after the assault. Mincey v. State, 332 Ga. App. 690, 774 S.E.2d 752 (2015).

Good-faith exception inapplicable. — Good-faith exception to the exclusionary rule enunciated by the U.S. Supreme Court in United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 987 (1984) is not applicable in Georgia in light of the legislatively-mandated exclusionary rule found in O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30. Gary v. State, 262 Ga. 573, 422 S.E.2d 426 (1992).

Even though the federally permissible good-faith exception to the probable cause requirement in the execution of a search warrant has been rejected in Georgia, such rule has no bearing when the subject evidence is the fruit of a bona fide investigation of an independent crime witnessed by the arresting officer. King v. State, 211 Ga. App. 12, 438 S.E.2d 93 (1993).

There is no "good faith" exception to the statutory exclusionary rule. State v. Gallup, 236 Ga. App. 321, 512 S.E.2d 66 (1999).

In a criminal prosecution in which the search warrant was invalidated because the warrant had been executed by an assistant magistrate, the state could not claim a good faith exception as none had been provided for in O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30. Beck v. State, 283 Ga. 352, 658 S.E.2d 577 (2008).

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress because the only possible justification for the search and seizure involving the defendant was the officers' good-faith belief that the defendant was on probation and subject to a valid Fourth Amendment waiver; however, that option was foreclosed by case law as Georgia did not recognize a good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. State v. New, 331 Ga. App. 139, 770 S.E.2d 239 (2015), cert. denied, No. S15C1075, 2015 Ga. LEXIS 429 (Ga. 2015).

Exclusionary rule does not reach as far as does U.S. Const., amend. 4. State v. Young, 234 Ga. 488, 216 S.E.2d 586,

Entrapment is not a rationale for suppressing evidence, but an affirmative defense to a criminal prosecution. State v. Baker, 216 Ga. App. 66, 453 S.E.2d 115 (1995).

Grant of motion not subject to double jeopardy restrictions. — Because grant of suppression motion is a matter of law for the trial court, it is not subject to double jeopardy restrictions of evidentiary findings, which are not subject to appeal by the state. Chastain v. State, 158 Ga. App. 654, 281 S.E.2d 627 (1981).

Information from informant sufficient to establish probable cause. — Motion to suppress was properly denied because, although an officer possibly could have provided the magistrate with more detail concerning the confidential informant's past reliability, considering the information about the informant's relationship with the defendant and how the informant came to be in the defendant's apartment; that the officer knew the informant and found the information from the informant to be reliable in the past; the recent time frame for when the informant had been in the apartment and viewed suspected drugs and paraphernalia; and the confirmation that the occupants were convicted felons, the information relayed to the magistrate provided a substantial basis for the magistrate's finding of probable cause. Galloway v. State, 332 Ga. App. 389, 772 S.E.2d 832 (2015).

Persons entitled to benefit of section. — Under the express terms of this section, the only persons entitled to the statute's benefit are persons "aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure." No provision is made in this section for pretrial suppression of evidence deemed illegal for reasons other than unlawful search and seizure. Barnett v. State, 123 Ga. App. 369, 180 S.E.2d 921 (1971).

Pretrial motions to suppress are available only to persons aggrieved by unlawful searches and seizures. Foote v. State, 141 Ga. App. 18, 232 S.E.2d 366 (1977).

Standing. — After defendant was charged with an offense, the essential element of which is possession, the defendant is endowed with automatic standing to challenge the validity of the searches of which the defendant complains. Reece v. State, 152 Ga. App. 760, 264 S.E.2d 258 (1979).

Because a murder defendant presented no admissible testimony on the question whether the defendant was aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure, the defendant could not prove that the defendant had standing to raise a challenge to the legality of the search of a tote bag that had allegedly been stolen from one of the victims. Stinski v. State, 281 Ga. 783, 642 S.E.2d 1 (2007).

Because the defendant's own statements failed to show standing to contest an allegedly defective search warrant affidavit for a house the defendant claimed no connection to, trial counsel's reasonable strategic decision not to move for suppression of the evidence seized as a result was upheld. Lawton v. State, 285 Ga. App. 45, 645 S.E.2d 571 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1244, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 670 (Ga. 2007).

Because there was no evidence that the defendant was a subscriber of the phones tapped and no evidence that the defendant's voice was heard during the wiretapped conversations, the defendant lacked standing to seek suppression of the conversations from those wiretaps. Deleon-Alvarez v. State, 324 Ga. App. 694, 751 S.E.2d 497 (2013).

No standing to object to search. — Passenger in car owned by driver's father has no standing to object to the search. Autry v. State, 150 Ga. App. 584, 258 S.E.2d 268 (1979).

Lack of standing to challenge search of hotel room as not "aggrieved" party. — Order suppressing evidence seized from a hotel room was error because the defendant was a mere invitee visiting the room and, under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(a), only a person aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure was permitted to move to suppress evidence; the defendant had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the hotel room searched, and thus the defendant was not "aggrieved" by the search within the meaning of § 17-5-30(a) and the Fourth Amendment and lacked standing to contest the search. State v. Carter, 299 Ga. App. 3, 681 S.E.2d 688 (2009).

Hearsay within hearsay. — Mere existence of "hearsay upon hearsay" was not fatal to a search warrant because under the totality of the circumstances, the magistrate was informed of the underlying circumstances involving an undercover buy from the defendant, independent of the double hearsay, which did not depend upon the reliability of the hearsay declarations; further, a known informant's statements to police against penal interest elevated that statements' reliability. Cochran v. State, 281 Ga. 4, 635 S.E.2d 701 (2006).

Motion improper when motion fails to show defendant controls personalty seized or premises. — When the motion to suppress failed to state facts showing that the property was taken from any house or place owned, occupied, or used by the defendant, or that the defendant had any proprietary interest in or right to possession of the property seized, the motion fails to show that the defendant was a person "aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure" within the terms of Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13. Norrell v. State, 116 Ga. App. 479, 157 S.E.2d 784 (1967).

Trial court is the finder of fact on motions to suppress evidence, and the trial court, rather than an appellate court, must judge the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence; a trial court correctly held that an officer's warrantless entry into the defendant's bedroom without the defendant's consent was illegal, but failed to decide if the defendant's later consent to search was freely and voluntarily given, and thus, the trial court's suppression order was vacated and the case was remanded. State v. Brown, 269 Ga. App. 875, 605 S.E.2d 628 (2004).

Burden of proof. — When a defendant moves to suppress evidence based on an illegal search, the state bears the burden of proving that the search was lawful. State v. Kramer, 260 Ga. App. 546, 580 S.E.2d 314 (2003).

Failure to file motion did not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel. — Defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to move to suppress defendant's post-arrest statement was without merit as trial counsel viewed the statement as exculpatory and failed to make the motion as part of counsel's trial strategy. Ogden v. State, 266 Ga. App. 399, 597 S.E.2d 491 (2004).

Defendant could not show that trial counsel's failure to file a motion to suppress constituted deficient performance because the defendant did not establish that a motion to suppress would have been granted; although the defendant argued that an officer's encounter with the defendant was unsupported by articulable facts of criminal conduct, under the totality of circumstances, the defendant's actions supported a reasonable, particularized suspicion that the defendant was involved in criminal activity. Odom v. State, 304 Ga. App. 615, 697 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, No. S10C1801, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 927 (Ga. 2010).

Defendant's trial counsel was not deficient for failing to file a motion to suppress evidence because the defendant failed to show that police officers lied under oath during the trial; therefore, the defendant was unable to show that, if defense counsel had filed a motion to suppress on that basis, the trial court would have granted the motion. Bass v. State, 309 Ga. App. 601, 710 S.E.2d 818 (2011).

Defendant failed to establish that there was a reasonable probability that, but for the alleged deficiencies of trial counsel, the outcome of the trial would have been different because the defendant could not show prejudice due to trial counsel's failure to file a motion to suppress the approximately $1,500 discovered when the defendant was searched; even if the evidence had been excluded, the remaining evidence adduced at trial was overwhelming. Lowe v. State, 310 Ga. App. 242, 712 S.E.2d 633 (2011).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to move to suppress evidence found on the defendant's person because any motion to suppress would have been without merit; when the officers lawfully approached and questioned the defendant the smell of alcohol on the defendant's person and emanating from a cup, and the officers' earlier observations of the defendant staggering and stumbling in the middle of the roadway, gave the officers probable cause to arrest the defendant for unlawfully walking upon the roadway while under the influence of alcohol, O.C.G.A. § 40-6-95, and the cocaine and digital scales subsequently found in the defendant's pockets were discovered pursuant to a lawful search incident to an arrest. White v. State, 310 Ga. App. 386, 714 S.E.2d 31 (2011).

Trial counsel did not perform deficiently by failing to renew the motion to suppress after evidence was presented at trial because there was no evidence that a renewed motion would have been granted or that the defendant suffered prejudice as a result of counsel's performance. Gibson v. State, 290 Ga. 6, 717 S.E.2d 447 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress because probable cause to arrest the defendant and to search the defendant incident to that arrest had been shown on undisputed facts; therefore, the defendant could not make the requisite strong showing that a motion to suppress the evidence found during that search would have been meritorious. Coney v. State, 316 Ga. App. 303, 728 S.E.2d 899 (2012).

No ineffective assistance with suppression motion on wiretaps. — Motion to remand for a hearing to determine if the defendant had standing or if trial counsel was ineffective for failing to move for suppression of the wiretaps was denied because the defendant lacked standing to seek suppression of the evidence from the wiretaps. Deleon-Alvarez v. State, 324 Ga. App. 694, 751 S.E.2d 497 (2013).

Because the defendant's lawyer elicited testimony from the prosecution witnesses that the defendant was never identified as an owner or subscriber of the three targeted cell phones monitored, nor was the defendant ever identified as a participant of the intercepted conversations, the defendant did not have standing to pursue suppression of the wiretap evidence, and neither the defendant's trial counsel nor counsel on a motion for new trial performed deficiently for failing to raise the suppression issue. Deleon-Alvarez v. State, 324 Ga. App. 694, 751 S.E.2d 497 (2013).

No ineffective assistance in failing to suppress evidence from cellphones. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file motions to suppress search warrants for the two recovered cell phones and the information obtained therefrom because, although the warrants erroneously stated the date of the murder as November 6, 2014 rather than November 6, 2013, mere typographical or clerical errors did not ordinarily provide a basis to suppress the evidence; and, even if the error in the warrants was deemed not to be purely typographical or clerical, and the extracted data outside the permissible scope of the warrants, the defendant did not claim, much less show, any specific resulting prejudice. Dent v. State, 303 Ga. 110, 810 S.E.2d 527 (2018).

Use of ruse to enter. — Ruse or subterfuge may be used to enter premises under warrant. Sherrill v. State, 158 Ga. App. 564, 281 S.E.2d 313 (1981).

Applicability to searches conducted without warrants. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 governs every case in which a defendant challenges a search and seizure, regardless of the grounds upon which the challenge is based, and it covers all searches, not just those involving search warrants. Harvey v. State, 217 Ga. App. 776, 459 S.E.2d 433 (1995), aff'd, 266 Ga. 671, 469 S.E.2d 176 (1996).

Defendant lacked standing to protest search. — State's failure to introduce a search warrant and supporting affidavit at a suppression hearing was immaterial: the defendant lacked standing to challenge the warrant since the defendant had no proprietary, possessory, or privacy interest in the searched premises and the defendant's suppression motion's allegations were insufficient to put the state on notice about how the defendant intended to attack the warrant's validity. Hall v. State, 258 Ga. App. 502, 574 S.E.2d 610 (2002).

"Plain feel" doctrine. — "Plain feel" doctrine was exceeded and the contraband seized should have been suppressed after an officer patted down the defendant during a traffic stop and felt an object in the defendant's pocket that the officer could not identify, but knew was not a weapon, and then removed the object which the officer discovered was a plastic bag containing marijuana. Boatright v. State, 225 Ga. App. 181, 483 S.E.2d 659 (1997).

Because an issue of "plain feel" was not raised in the motion to suppress and the state was not properly placed on notice that this issue would be raised at the hearing on the motion, the evidentiary basis on which the trial court found the search exceeded the bounds of the "plain feel" doctrine was not fully developed, and a second evidentiary hearing was required. State v. Roddy, 231 Ga. App. 91, 497 S.E.2d 653 (1998).

Since the record was devoid of any testimony or evidence that the seizing officer articulated a suspicion that would have reasonably led the officer to believe that the object seized from a coin pocket of the defendant's jeans was contraband, never observed any portion of the plastic bag protruding from the pocket, and never testified that it was immediately apparent that the object was contraband, the "plain feel" exception did not apply and the trial court properly granted suppression of the item seized. State v. Henderson, 263 Ga. App. 880, 589 S.E.2d 647 (2003).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress evidence of the victim's blood found on the defendant's shoes because, under the "plain view" exception to the warrant requirement, the police had probable cause to believe that the blood the police observed on the defendant's shoes when the police approached the defendant was evidence of defendant's commission of the murder. State v. Tye, 276 Ga. 559, 580 S.E.2d 528 (2003).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress rings a police officer seized from the defendant's pocket during a pat-down search because the seizure was authorized under the plain feel doctrine; the officer's knowledge that a man matching the defendant's description was suspected of stealing numerous rings shortly beforehand and nearby gave the officer probable cause to believe that the items the officer felt in the defendant's pocket were the stolen rings, and had the rings been in the officer's plain view when the officer detained the defendant, the officer could have seized the rings under the plain view doctrine. State v. Cosby, 302 Ga. App. 204, 690 S.E.2d 519 (2010).

"Plain view" doctrine permits warrantless search. — Motion to suppress evidence obtained during a warrantless search of the defendant's bedroom was properly denied because the homeowner invited the police into the homeowner's house and the police never entered the defendant's room before obtaining a warrant; because the investigator saw the marijuana in "plain view" while standing in a place the investigator had a right to be, there was not an unlawful warrantless search. Phillips v. State, 269 Ga. App. 619, 604 S.E.2d 520 (2004).

Suppression motion properly denied. — Because sufficient exigent circumstances existed to authorize a sheriff's deputy to enter the defendant's backyard and seize a number of animals that the officer observed were malnourished and mistreated, and given the harsh weather conditions and impending holiday, obtaining a warrant would have been unreasonable, the defendant's motions to suppress and in limine seeking to preclude admission of the evidence seized were properly denied. Moreover, the evidence seized after the defendant's lawful arrest, and observed in plain view by the officer upon being allowed to enter the defendant's residence, was also properly admitted. Morgan v. State, 289 Ga. App. 209, 656 S.E.2d 857 (2008).

Evidence properly admitted. — Motion to exclude was properly denied as the officer's approach and initial inquiries to the defendant amounted to a first-tier encounter that did not have to be supported by reasonable suspicion of criminal wrongdoing and it was during that encounter that the defendant told the officer that the defendant had a crack pipe on the defendant's person, supplying reasonable suspicion for the ensuing detention. Chamblee v. State, 317 Ga. App. 673, 732 S.E.2d 327 (2012).

Terry pat-down search is authorized when the officer reasonably believes that a search is necessary to protect the officer from attack, including the search of passengers in vehicles omitted from the original police notifications. Dowdy v. State, 209 Ga. App. 311, 433 S.E.2d 293 (1993).

In Georgia, a Terry pat-down search is authorized when the officer reasonably believes that a pat-down search is necessary to protect the officer from attack. Williams v. State, 265 Ga. App. 489, 594 S.E.2d 704 (2004).

Pat-down search exceeded permissible scope. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized from the defendant during a Terry pat-down search for weapons as the state failed in the state's burden of proving that the search was lawful pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b); although the officer had justification to conduct the pat-down search for weapons, when there was no indication that the officer believed that the box found in the defendant's pocket contained a weapon, opening the box exceeded the permissible scope of the search. Cartwright v. State, 265 Ga. App. 520, 594 S.E.2d 723 (2004).

Because a police officer was unable to provide specific facts to justify a concern that the item in the defendant's pocket was a weapon, defendant's Fourth Amendment rights were violated when the officer reached into the defendant's pockets; consequently, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Castleberry v. State, 275 Ga. App. 37, 619 S.E.2d 747 (2005).

Because the state introduced no evidence that the defendant consented to an officer's opening of a matchbox retrieved from the defendant's pants, the officer was not concerned that a weapon was hidden in the box, and the box was not readily identifiable as contraband, the search of the defendant's person exceeded the permissible scope of a pat-down for weapons, requiring suppression of the cocaine found inside the matchbox. Mason v. State, 285 Ga. App. 596, 647 S.E.2d 308 (2007).

Officer was justified in conducting a pat-down when the officer testified that the officer observed the defendant place something in the defendant's pocket and then place the defendant's hand in the defendant's pocket; the defendant refused to remove the defendant's hand although the officer repeatedly instructed the defendant to do so; and the officer became concerned for the officer's safety because of the defendant's actions. However, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress since the officer could not identify the object the officer felt as either a weapon, or by its contour and mass, contraband and thus the intrusion into the defendant's pocket was impermissible. Sudduth v. State, 288 Ga. App. 541, 654 S.E.2d 446 (2007).

Because the defendant expressly consented only to a pat-down search for weapons, a police officer could not have lawfully intruded into the defendant's pocket to retrieve an identification card; accordingly, the trial court erred by denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Johnson v. State, 297 Ga. App. 847, 678 S.E.2d 539 (2009).

Requiring removal of shoes was excessive. — While the defendant's nervous behavior, including ignoring the officer's directions not to move the defendant's hands or reach toward the defendant's feet and moving clothing around; the defendant's actions in reaching toward the front of the car while observing the officers through the rear window; and the officer's knowledge of the defendant's prior drug history, provided a reasonable basis to support a pat-down search for weapons under the Terry standard, the search went beyond the Terry-authorized search when the officer directed the defendant to remove the defendant's shoes because the officer never testified the officer felt any object in or around the defendant's shoes to justify requiring the removal of the shoes. State v. Cleveland, 319 Ga. App. 225, 738 S.E.2d 273 (2012).

No authority to conduct pat-down so motion to suppress should be granted. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress a gun police officers found on the defendant's person because although the officers had a sufficient basis for a brief initial Terry stop since the defendant partially fit the description given by the victim of the person who attacked the victim, the officers had no authority to conduct the pat-down that discovered the weapon on the defendant's person; the fact that the officers suspected that the defendant could have been the one that assaulted the victim did not reasonably give rise to a belief that the defendant was armed and a threat to the officers, and because the record revealed no proof of other circumstances known to the officers when the officers commenced the frisk that would lead a reasonable officer to conclude that the defendant had a weapon or instrument capable of being used as a weapon on the defendant's person, the state did not carry the state's burden of proving the propriety of the search. Daniels v. State, 307 Ga. App. 216, 704 S.E.2d 466 (2010).

Search by officer, who is parent of suspect. — Trial court's order denying the defendant's motion to suppress was reversed and the case was remanded with direction that the trial court determine whether the defendant's father, an officer, had probable cause to search the defendant's vehicle. Pruitt v. State, 263 Ga. App. 814, 589 S.E.2d 591 (2003).

Search incident to lawful arrest. — Police officers had probable cause to arrest the defendant for theft by receiving stolen property, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-7, based on a determination that the defendant admitted to having received, stored, and disposed of a stolen four-wheeler, the officers' search incident to the arrest was legal and the defendant's subsequent motion to suppress, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30, was properly denied; during the search of defendant's person, the officers recovered methamphetamine and the defendant was convicted of drug-related offenses. James v. State, 265 Ga. App. 660, 595 S.E.2d 359 (2004).

Because the seizure of cash found on the defendant's person was conducted based on a lawful arrest for a domestic violence act of assault, given information by the defendant's girlfriend, the girlfriend's obvious injuries, and the defendant's attempt to flee, the trial court properly denied suppression of the evidence; however, because the defendant maintained a reasonable expectation of privacy in the curtilage surrounding the defendant's residence, absent a warrant or exigent circumstances, suppression of cocaine found in that area was erroneously denied. Rivers v. State, 287 Ga. App. 632, 653 S.E.2d 78 (2007).

Marijuana found in a search of the defendant incident to the defendant's arrest was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 because a police dispatcher's statement to an officer that there was an outstanding arrest warrant for the defendant provided the probable cause necessary to arrest the defendant and, as a consequence, the search incident to the arrest was lawful under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1. State v. Edwards, 307 Ga. App. 267, 704 S.E.2d 816 (2010).

Search of cell phone incident to lawful arrest was proper. — When evidence showed that the defendant's cell phone was an instrumentality of the crime of cocaine trafficking and that the details of the drug transaction were arranged by telephone, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the search of the cell phone because the defendant's cell phone was confiscated during a lawful search incident to the defendant's arrest and because it was an instrumentality of the crime that was probative of criminal conduct. Lopez v. State, 267 Ga. App. 532, 601 S.E.2d 116 (2004).

Officer listening did not rise to interrogation and justify suppression.

— Order denying a motion to suppress the statements the defendant made to police after invoking a right to remain silent and have counsel present was not clearly erroneous as the defendant continued to make unsolicited statements after the invocation, and the officer was not interrogating the defendant by choosing to listen. Mulvaney v. State, 281 Ga. App. 620, 636 S.E.2d 762 (2006).

Computer insurance inquiry insufficient for stop and evidence suppressed. — Because the trial court had ample evidence to support the court's conclusion that the reason police officers supplied as the basis to stop the defendant's vehicle, specifically, an alleged computer insurance inquiry, was "suspect and insufficient", the court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized from the vehicle as a result of the stop. State v. Starks, 281 Ga. App. 15, 635 S.E.2d 327 (2006).

Forensic computer analysis not suppressed. — No basis existed under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-24 for suppressing the results of forensic computer analysis because the analysis required expert skill, and without such expertise, it was conceivable that evidence could have been overlooked or even destroyed; the computer examination was conducted at the direction of Georgia peace officers to enable the officers to complete the officers' own investigation. Twiggs v. State, 315 Ga. App. 191, 726 S.E.2d 680 (2012).

Suppression of evidence in sexual abuse cases. — Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied as: (1) the search warrant affidavit outlined the information provided by a New Hampshire detective's investigation, including the fact that the defendant had electronically sent the detective sexually explicit photographs of young boys; (2) the officer's affidavit also included information regarding the detective's extensive background and vast experience in the investigation of child sexual exploitation cases; (3) the detective's investigation provided probable cause to search the defendant's residence wherever that was; (4) the warrant sought sexually explicit photographs and other sexually explicit visual depictions of children, as well as the computer hardware and software used to create, store, and distribute those depictions; and (5) the affidavit contained information based on the detective's contact and electronic correspondence with the defendant indicating the likelihood that the defendant's computer files would contain evidence of child sexual exploitation, given that the affidavit stated that those who sexually exploited children often kept sexually explicit photographs and other images in their possession and often stored those images in computer files. Walthall v. State, 281 Ga. App. 434, 636 S.E.2d 126 (2006).

Evidence of prior conduct between defendant and victim admissible. — Trial court did not err in permitting a witness to testify about the decedent victim's statement concerning the defendant's prior acts of abuse as testimony about prior difficulties between the defendant and a victim was admissible at trial to show the nature of the relationship and to demonstrate motive, intent, or bent of mind of the defendant in committing the act. Banegas v. State, 283 Ga. App. 346, 641 S.E.2d 593 (2007).

Development of film discovered in search incident to arrest. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in refusing to suppress photographs that were developed from film that was in a disposable camera found in the defendant's duffle bag at the time of defendant's arrest because: (1) the defendant lacked standing to challenge the admission of the evidence since the camera belonged to the defendant's brother, most of the photographs had been taken by the brother, and the camera had only been borrowed by the defendant; (2) the film was admissible under the same rationale as an inventory search because police had to develop the film to determine to whom the camera belonged before the police could return the camera to the owner; and (3) the film was the fruit of a search incident to the defendant's lawful arrest because it was found in the defendant's duffle bag in a search incident to the defendant's arrest. Wright v. State, 276 Ga. 454, 579 S.E.2d 214 (2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1106, 124 S. Ct. 1059, 157 L. Ed. 2d 892 (2004).

Application to circumstantial evidence. — Jury should be able to consider and weigh the evidence, even though the evidence may be circumstantial; thus, the defendant's motion to suppress a gun found alongside a highway was properly denied. Ross v. State, 281 Ga. App. 891, 637 S.E.2d 491 (2006).

Evidence seized from employment investigations suppressed. — Trial court properly suppressed the oral and written statements made by the defendant, a public employee, during an internal investigation interview conducted by the Georgia Department of Corrections, and after the defendant was forbidden to seek the advice of counsel as the defendant had an objective belief that a failure to cooperate with the investigation by taking part in the interview and signing a written document entitled "Notice of Interfering with On-Going Internal Investigation" would result in a loss of employment; thus, the defendant's right against self-incrimination was violated. State v. Aiken, 281 Ga. App. 415, 636 S.E.2d 156 (2006).

Search pursuant to arrest for assaulting officers following illegal stop. — Though evidence would not have been admissible if discovered as the result of police officers' unconstitutional roadblock and illegal Terry-stop of the defendant's car before the defendant reached the roadblock, the defendant's gratuitous shoving of police was an aggravated battery, and the discovery of drugs the defendant threw while fleeing from that battery meant the discovery of the evidence was sufficiently attenuated from the illegal stop to justify its admission into evidence and denial of a defendant's motion to suppress. Strickland v. State, 265 Ga. App. 533, 594 S.E.2d 711 (2004).

Technical irregularities in search warrants. — Raising of technical irregularities in search warrants is not favored by the law, especially if the defendant has not timely exercised the defendant's statutory right by a motion to suppress evidence allegedly illegally seized. Parker v. State, 118 Ga. App. 837, 166 S.E.2d 41 (1968).

2. Consent

Scope of consent. — Given that a police officer was granted consent to search the defendant's hotel room to search for the victim's stolen truck keys, upon the officer's receipt of an inconclusive response that a set of keys found could belong to the victim, a continued search, which yielded methamphetamine, was reasonable, and did not exceed the original scope of consent granted; thus, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the drug evidence that officers found as a result of a continued search. Shuler v. State, 282 Ga. App. 706, 639 S.E.2d 623 (2006).

Because the consent received by an officer to search the defendant's pockets for weapons did not extend to allowing the officer to remove the contents of those pockets, when the officer testified that the contents did not feel like a weapon or an object immediately identifiable as contraband, the defendant's motion to suppress should have been granted. Foster v. State, 285 Ga. App. 441, 646 S.E.2d 302 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1428, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 625 (Ga. 2007).

Defendant was not entitled to suppression of, inter alia, marijuana seized from the trunk of a car in which the defendant was a passenger because a police officer did not exceed the scope of the driver's consent to search, which allegedly was limited to looking in the car, by opening the trunk as the officer had discussed the problems with contraband being transported on the state highways prior to requesting the driver's consent; thus, the driver was on notice that the officer was looking for contraband. Davis v. State, 297 Ga. App. 319, 677 S.E.2d 372 (2009).

Consent established even though defendant handcuffed. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence police officers seized from the defendant's apartment because the state satisfied the state's burden of showing that the defendant's consent to the search was not the product of coercion, express or implied, and although the defendant was handcuffed at the time the defendant consented to the search, voluntary consent could be given while a suspect was handcuffed; the evidence supported a finding that one of the officers requested and received the defendant's consent to search under permissible circumstances, and the officer testified that the officer's gun was not drawn and that the defendant was compliant. Silverio v. State, 306 Ga. App. 438, 702 S.E.2d 717 (2010).

Consent established. — Denial of the motion to suppress was not error as there was some evidence to support the trial court's finding that consent to search was given; the trial court chose to disbelieve the defendant's witness and to believe the testimony of the police officers that the officers received consent to enter and to check the apartment. Yemane v. State, 277 Ga. App. 286, 626 S.E.2d 238 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence as the drugs located in the residence were found after the defendant voluntarily gave police consent to enter and the drugs were spotted by one officer in plain view. Saadatdar v. State, 277 Ga. App. 339, 626 S.E.2d 552 (2006).

Because the defendant waived the defendant's Miranda rights and because the defendant freely and voluntarily consented to a search of the defendant's premises, to a drug test, and to an interview, the defendant's consent was not the product of coercion; accordingly, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress. Handy v. State, 298 Ga. App. 633, 680 S.E.2d 646 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer found in the defendant's wallet during a traffic stop of the vehicle in which the defendant was a passenger because the defendant voluntarily consented to the officer's search of the wallet; although the officer did not have a proper basis to frisk the defendant after asking the defendant to exit the automobile, the contraband was not uncovered during the unlawful pat-down, and the prior unlawful pat-down did not operate to invalidate the defendant's later consent to the search of the wallet. Rogue v. State, 311 Ga. App. 421, 715 S.E.2d 814 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying a motion to suppress evidence a police officer seized in a hotel room because the trial court was authorized to find that the state satisfied the state's burden of showing that the defendant's consent to enter the hotel room was voluntary and not the product of coercion, express or implied; the officer's testimony and the defendant's statement supported a finding that the officer requested and received the defendant's consent to enter the hotel room under circumstances that did not suggest either coercion or threat, and the trial court was authorized to infer that the defendant's consent to search was freely given in the calculated hope that the officer would not find the hidden contraband. Liles v. State, 311 Ga. App. 355, 716 S.E.2d 228 (2011).

Trial court did not err in failing to grant the defendant's motion to suppress a pistol because the search of a residence was properly conducted when the police obtained the consent of the homeowner; the defendant, who was a visitor at the residence, was physically present but failed to express any refusal of consent or any objection to a police search. Rockholt v. State, 291 Ga. 85, 727 S.E.2d 492 (2012).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress with regard to the defendant's drug conviction because the case involved a first-tier encounter wherein the officer asked for consent to search, which was given by the defendant and, therefore, the search was not a seizure and did not require articulable suspicion. Carter v. State, 319 Ga. App. 624, 737 S.E.2d 724 (2013).

Consent must be uncoerced. — Consent to search must be the product of an essentially free and unrestrained choice by the maker. Williams v. State, 151 Ga. App. 833, 261 S.E.2d 720 (1979).

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress as the defendant's spouse was coerced into giving consent to a police search of the residence since the police had no search warrant or arrest warrant but only an order awarding temporary custody of the children to the state. State v. Fulghum, 261 Ga. App. 594, 583 S.E.2d 278 (2003).

Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress both the evidence seized upon being stopped and detained by the sheriff's officers and all statements made to any law enforcement officer following such detention given that: (1) law enforcement exceeded the authority to search the defendant; and (2) the evidence showed that any consent given by the defendant was coerced as the consent was obtained when one of the officers pointed a stun gun at the defendant. State v. Williams, 281 Ga. App. 187, 635 S.E.2d 807 (2006).

An officer's statement to the driver of a vehicle that it would be better for the driver if the driver cooperated because a female officer and a drug dog were on the way did not amount to improper coercion so as to render the driver's admission or voluntary relinquishment of cocaine invalid. Darden v. State, 293 Ga. App. 127, 666 S.E.2d 559 (2008).

Consented search needs no probable cause or warrant. — Probable cause and a warrant are not required for a search and seizure which is conducted pursuant to consent. Williams v. State, 151 Ga. App. 833, 261 S.E.2d 720 (1979).

Consent to search given after the defendant had a clear understanding that the defendant was free to go and was not under any compulsion to remain to obey the officer's request was voluntary and, thus, denial of the defendant's motion to suppress was upheld. Daniel v. State, 277 Ga. 840, 597 S.E.2d 116 (2004).

Limited consent established. — Given the defendant's consent to the limited search of the premises, the officers were lawfully in a position to plainly view the items associated with the manufacture of methamphetamine; as a result, the officers developed the probable cause necessary to obtain a warrant and search for additional evidence, supporting denial of defendant's motion to suppress. Wesson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 428, 631 S.E.2d 451 (2006).

Consent given by apartment lessee valid. — Police officers had reasonable suspicion to stop the defendant and question the defendant, based on the defendant's description matching that of a robbery perpetrator, and the officers then had probable cause to pursue the defendant to an apartment that the defendant retreated to; the lessee provided the officers with consent to search, whereupon the defendant's clothing that matched the robber's description and the robber's gun were found and, accordingly, the defendant's motion to suppress evidence pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 was properly denied. Anderson v. State, 265 Ga. App. 428, 594 S.E.2d 669 (2004).

Consent of housing authority director invalid. — City housing authority director's consent to the search of a housing unit was not valid; therefore, an officer's warrantless entry into the premises and seizure of marijuana therein was also invalid. The state failed to show that the terms of the housing unit lease authorized the director to enter the premises under certain circumstances. Bowden v. State, 304 Ga. App. 896, 698 S.E.2d 372 (2010).

Consent by defendant's son to search of defendant's bedroom not valid. — Trial court's grant of defendant's motion to suppress evidence, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b), was proper as the defendant's 14-year-old son lacked authority to consent to a search of the defendant's bedroom, although the son resided in the mobile home with the defendant and his girlfriend as the bedroom was not a common area and, accordingly, the second Atkins factor was not met for purposes of U.S. Const. amend. IV; further, the officer who arrived at the home had minimal interaction with the teenager, such that the officer lacked a reasonable belief that the son could validly consent to the search, and the drugs in defendant's bedroom were not available in plain view. State v. McKinney, 276 Ga. App. 69, 622 S.E.2d 429 (2005).

Separate part of parolee's home not subject to search. — Because law enforcement officers lacked any reason to search the defendant's part of a mobile home, which had been permanently divided in half, the officers could not rely on a waiver of rights executed by the defendant's brother, who was on probation at the time, to authorize a search of the defendant's separate part of that home. Further, no exigent circumstances were present to support a warrantless entry. State v. Kuhnhausen, 289 Ga. App. 489, 657 S.E.2d 592 (2008).

Illegal, warrantless entry into motel room tainted subsequent consent. — Trial court erred by denying the defendant's motion to suppress drug evidence found in a motel room that the defendant was occupying with another as the warrantless entry into the hotel room by the police violated the Fourth Amendment and the illegal entry tainted defendant's consent to search and rendered the consent invalid. The state also failed to carry the state's burden to show that a third party's subsequent consent to search the room was untainted by the illegal entry. Snider v. State, 292 Ga. App. 180, 663 S.E.2d 805 (2008).

Suppression of evidence from consensual activities. — Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied after the defendant voluntarily consented to police officers searching the bedroom and the officers found the firearm in plain view; moreover, the officers did not threaten the defendant into giving the consent merely by telling the defendant that the officers could obtain a warrant based on the officers' earlier seizure of marijuana in another part of the house. Butler v. State, 272 Ga. App. 557, 612 S.E.2d 865 (2005).

Trial court's order denying the defendant's motion to suppress was upheld on appeal as: (1) the defendant lacked standing to contest a search of a cohort's vehicle; (2) the defendant consented to a subsequent search of the defendant's own residence; and (3) the defendant failed to show harm by the introduction of evidence found in vehicles parked in the yard of the residence, which the trial court clearly found to be innocuous. Valle v. State, 282 Ga. App. 223, 638 S.E.2d 394 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0405, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 219 (Ga. 2007), 552 U.S. 849, 128 S. Ct. 108, 169 L. Ed. 2d 78 (2007).

Because the defendant's encounters with the police remained consensual and voluntary, and the defendant consented to a continued detention for further questioning, a motion to suppress the evidence seized based on an illegal detention by the police was properly denied. Smith v. State, 281 Ga. 185, 640 S.E.2d 1 (2006).

Because the defendant's consent to search was not obtained by deceit, the defendant voluntarily accompanied officers to the motel room searched, and the consent was not the product of an illegal detention, suppression of the contraband seized was unwarranted. Miller v. State, 287 Ga. App. 179, 651 S.E.2d 103 (2007).

Because a police officer was authorized to stop the defendant's vehicle based on a suspicion that the defendant had illegally dumped trash, and because the defendant consented to a search of the vehicle, the items seized from the vehicle would not have been suppressed; accordingly, the defendant's ineffective assistance claim failed, and the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's Alford plea. Bishop v. State, 299 Ga. App. 241, 682 S.E.2d 201 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized during the warrantless search of the defendant's residence because the evidence supported the trial court's finding that the defendant and the defendant's roommate freely and voluntarily consented to the search of their residence, and the officers testified that the officers did not coerce, threaten, or offer any hope of benefit to obtain the consents; the roommate gave the officers consent to search the common areas of the residence, and after the defendant arrived at the residence, the defendant likewise consented to the searches of the defendant's bedroom and of the defendant's person. Park v. State, 308 Ga. App. 648, 708 S.E.2d 614 (2011).

Consent product of illegal detention. — State failed to satisfy the state's burden under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b) to show that the son's consent to search the son's room was voluntarily given; as a result of the short period of time that passed between the unlawful detention and the grant of consent, the consent was the product of the son's illegal detention. Black v. State, 281 Ga. App. 40, 635 S.E.2d 568 (2006).

An officer, who knew the defendant, forcibly opened the defendant's vehicle door, thereby physically restraining the defendant's movement so that the defendant's subsequent consent to a search of the defendant's vehicle, after arriving at a location under surveillance for drug manufacturing, was invalid as the consent was the product of a wrongful detention; thus, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized from the vehicle. Smith v. State, 288 Ga. App. 87, 653 S.E.2d 510 (2007).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer found while conducting a search of the defendant's person because the purportedly consensual search of the defendant's person was unlawful when the consent was the product of an illegal detention; even if the defendant's consent was not the product of an illegal detention, the search exceeded the scope of the defendant's consent because the defendant's indication that the defendant did not "have a problem" with the officer searching the defendant's pockets could not be interpreted as having extended so far as to have authorized the officer to, after searching all of the defendant's pockets and finding nothing, push the defendant's abdomen, pull the defendant's waistband forward, and look down inside the defendant's pants for narcotics. Walker v. State, 299 Ga. App. 788, 683 S.E.2d 867 (2009).

Two defendants had a reasonable expectation of privacy in a motel room and the room's safe because the defendants were staying there overnight and had clothing there, although neither was a registered guest, so that the defendants both had standing under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(a) to object to a search of the room. Because the male guest was illegally detained, that guest's consent to search the room was not valid. State v. Woods, 311 Ga. App. 577, 716 S.E.2d 622 (2011).

Mere acquiescence to authority of officer did not substitute for free and voluntary consent. — Despite the fact that the trial court concluded that the second of two defendant's warrantless arrest was unauthorized under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20(a), because mere acquiescence to the authority asserted by a police lieutenant by both the defendants could not substitute for a free and voluntary consent to search, the trial court erred in finding that said acquiescence granted valid consent to the officer. Thus, the trial court's grant of the motions to suppress filed, in part, was reversed. Hollenback v. State, 289 Ga. App. 516, 657 S.E.2d 884 (2008).

Defendant never withdrew consent to search. — With regard to defendant's conviction for possession of methamphetamine, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the drugs found on the defendant's person as the police obtained the defendant's consent to search the defendant's person and the defendant's failure to produce all of the items from the defendant's pockets did not amount to a withdrawal of the consent to search. Allison v. State, 293 Ga. App. 447, 667 S.E.2d 225 (2008).

Consent of parents of adult child staying at parents' home. — With regard to defendant's convictions for armed robbery and possession of a gun during a crime, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motions to suppress the evidence found in the defendant's bedroom and in the vehicle that the defendant operated as the defendant's parents had authority to give consent to the police to search the defendant's unlocked bedroom since the defendant did not pay rent and was only home for the summer from college. As to the vehicle, the parents asked the police to locate their vehicle and the police properly seized the vehicle, impounded the vehicle, and obtained a search warrant; thus, the rifle used during the robberies that was found in the trunk of the vehicle was not the product of an illegal search. Warner v. State, 299 Ga. App. 56, 681 S.E.2d 624 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1952, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 35 (Ga. 2010).

Grandfather as head of household with power to consent. — Because the defendant's grandfather, as the head of the household, possessed authority over the entire house, including the defendant's bedroom where the defendant lived rent-free, the trial court properly found that the consent given by the grandfather was properly granted, and hence served as the proper basis to deny the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized in the bedroom; as a result, the defendant's armed robbery conviction was upheld on appeal. Rhone v. State, 283 Ga. App. 553, 642 S.E.2d 185 (2007).

3. Locations

Defendant movant aggrieved by search on defendant's premises. — For a defendant movant to be "aggrieved" by a search on the premises under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30, the alleged violation must have occurred on the movant's premises or the movant's Fourth Amendment rights must have been infringed in some other manner. Sanders v. State, 181 Ga. App. 117, 351 S.E.2d 666 (1986).

Search of home, arrest therein legal. — Sufficient probable cause for issuance of arrest and search warrants existed based upon an affidavit from an investigative detective in which the detective described the rape and the rapist, stated that the victim identified the man in discarded photographs as her attacker, and explained that a subsequent investigation revealed that the man in the photographs was the defendant. Davis v. State, 209 Ga. App. 755, 434 S.E.2d 752 (1993).

Because the police were entitled to conduct a limited sweep to ensure the safety of the police prior to obtaining consent to search and because the contraband was not discovered during the "protective sweep", the search did not violate the Fourth Amendment; consequently, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress. Nelson v. State, 271 Ga. App. 658, 610 S.E.2d 627 (2005).

There was evidence of sufficient exigent circumstances presented to law enforcement officers to justify a warrantless search of the defendant's home since if a warrant would have been obtained many of those individuals could have attempted to drive home, placing both themselves and the general public at risk; moreover, if a warrant would have been obtained, evidence of the crime of furnishing alcohol to minors could have easily been destroyed when the minors left the scene of the crime. Burk v. State, 284 Ga. App. 843, 644 S.E.2d 914 (2007).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress as there were no exigent circumstances justifying a warrantless entry into the defendant's home after drugs, drug-related items, and a weapon were found in the defendant's car during a traffic stop, even though the defendant did not end a cell phone call immediately as instructed by a police officer; the state did not show that the warrantless entry was required to prevent the destruction of contraband or that securing the home until a warrant could be obtained was not sufficient. Curry v. State, 271 Ga. App. 672, 610 S.E.2d 635 (2005).

Trial court properly granted the defendants' motions to suppress evidence of drugs and drug paraphernalia found at the residence owned by one defendant as officers had already learned that the person the officers were looking for stayed at a trailer next door, and thus officers engaged in an impermissible search of the curtilage when officers found a bag of drugs 45 feet from the defendants' house; as a result, all evidence seized in the course of subsequent searches of the property was obtained as a direct result of the impermissible intrusion into the curtilage and had to be suppressed as fruit of the poisonous tree. State v. Gravitt, 289 Ga. App. 868, 658 S.E.2d 424 (2008).

Under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b), the state bears the burden of proving the lawfulness of a search when it is an unconsented police entry into a home. Since there were no exigent circumstances justifying the entry of the police into the defendant's trailer to arrest persons for underage drinking, the trial court properly granted the defendants' motion to suppress the evidence seized from the unlawful entry. Statements made by the defendants after exiting the trailer were fruits of the poisonous tree and also had to be excluded. State v. Ealum, 283 Ga. App. 799, 643 S.E.2d 262 (2007).

Consent by roommate did not authorize search. — Defendant was entitled to suppression of a gun, money, and drugs seized from the defendant's residence because the search was unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment as the defendant was not informed when the police came to the residence and arrested the defendant on an outstanding warrant that the defendant's roommate had consented to the search of the residence; the defendant could have erroneously believed that the search was incident to the arrest on a driving violation. Preston v. State, 296 Ga. App. 655, 675 S.E.2d 553 (2009).

Improper entry into residence justified. — Denial of a defendant's suppression motion was proper as the police officers were authorized to immediately enter a residence, without announcing the officers' presence as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-27 since the occupants fled upon seeing the police into a residence where the police had recently conducted controlled drug buys and the officers had a reasonable belief that the fleeing occupants might retrieve weapons or destroy evidence; once legally inside the residence, the police were authorized to execute a search warrant that led to the discovery of the defendant's involvement in the drug sales. Further, suppression of evidence was not a constitutionally-required remedy for an improper entry pursuant to an otherwise valid search warrant. Jackson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 716, 634 S.E.2d 846 (2006).

Search of apartment where drugs were found in plain view. — Police who entered the defendant's apartment after receiving a report that the defendant was chased into the apartment by a man who had a gun lawfully entered the apartment and had probable cause to seize and test what appeared to be drugs that were in plain view, and the trial court properly admitted the drugs which police found in plain view and other items which police found after police obtained a search warrant and searched the remaining areas of the defendant's apartment. Miller v. State, 261 Ga. App. 618, 583 S.E.2d 481 (2003).

In a cocaine trafficking prosecution, though the defendant testified that an officer kicked in the door to the defendant's residence as the defendant's landlord testified that there was no damage to the front door, and the trial court was entitled to believe the officer's testimony that the door was open, the officer was entitled to seize drugs seen in plain view through the open door. Therefore, the defendant's motion to suppress the drugs was properly denied. Reid v. State, 298 Ga. App. 889, 681 S.E.2d 671 (2009).

Closed refrigerator. — Police officer opened the door of an operating, closed refrigerator in a storage unit, after having been called to investigate vandalism and possible burglary, but these circumstances did not rise to the level of emergency involving immediate threats to life or limb, and the warrantless search of the refrigerator was not justified. State v. Gallup, 236 Ga. App. 321, 512 S.E.2d 66 (1999).

Search of relative's residence. — Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress evidence recovered from the defendant's brother's townhouse, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30, since it was found that there was no probable cause for issuance of a search warrant of the townhouse merely because the defendant was staying there, as there was no evidence that the defendant had been there at or around the time of committing various crimes and, accordingly, there was no reasonable grounds to believe that evidence of the crimes would be found there. A search warrant must be supported by probable cause or reasonable grounds to believe that evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place. State v. Brantley, 264 Ga. App. 152, 589 S.E.2d 716 (2003).

Search of desk at work. — Trial court erred by failing to suppress the evidence seized by the police from the defendant's desk at work and concluding that no warrant was required for the search of the desk because the desk was unlocked and was in a workspace shared by numerous coworkers. A warrant was required for the search of the desk and, since the warrant authorizing the search was issued without a showing of probable cause based on the tip of an unidentified caller, and there was no exception to the warrant requirement shown, the fruits of the search of the desk had to be suppressed. Harper v. State, 283 Ga. 102, 657 S.E.2d 213 (2008).

Fruits of aerial search admissible. — Since the special protection accorded by U.S. Const., amend. 4 to the people in their "persons, houses, papers and effects" is not extended to open fields, evidence obtained from an aerial search of an open field is not inadmissible as the product of an illegal search. Reece v. State, 152 Ga. App. 760, 264 S.E.2d 258 (1979).

Evidence on defendant's person. — Evidence of guilt which the defendant, either directly or indirectly, was compelled to disclose by an unlawful search and seizure of the defendant's person under illegal arrest is not admissible in a criminal prosecution of the person thus illegally arrested. MacDougald v. State, 124 Ga. App. 619, 184 S.E.2d 687 (1971).

Search of defendant's purse unauthorized and evidence suppressed. — Defendant, who was not suspected of any crime at the time the defendant consented to a search of the defendant's vehicle, was merely a visitor to the house and did not tell the police officer to search for the keys to the vehicle, but only stated where the defendant thought the keys might be. Defendant never specifically consented to a search of the defendant's purse. Under these circumstances, the trial court was authorized to find that a typical reasonable person would not have understood the exchange between the defendant and the officer to grant the officer permission to search the defendant's purse; therefore, the defendant's motion to suppress narcotics found in the purse was properly granted. State v. Fulghum, 288 Ga. App. 746, 655 S.E.2d 321 (2007).

Motion proper if facts indicate defendant was legitimately on codefendant's property. — Motion by a defendant to suppress evidence because of an unlawful search and seizure sufficiently alleges that the defendant had standing to challenge the legality of the defendant's arrest, the seizure of the vehicle and the following search if the facts alleged in the motion can be fairly construed to state that the defendant was legitimately on the premises of a codefendant at the time of their arrest and seizure of the latter's property and therefore the fruits of the search and seizure were to be used against the defendant such that defendant would be aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure. Bramblett v. State, 135 Ga. App. 770, 219 S.E.2d 26 (1975).

Brass knuckles found during investigatory stop occurring in high school parking lot. — Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress brass knuckles a police officer found in the defendant's pocket during an investigatory stop in a high school parking lot because under the totality of circumstances, the brief stop was neither arbitrary or harassing but was based on a founded suspicion of criminal activity; it was reasonable for the officer to infer, based on the officer's training, experience, and common sense, that the defendant was looking to engage in criminal activity, and the officer had been hired to secure the lot and to guard against fighting. Esposito v. State, 293 Ga. App. 573, 667 S.E.2d 425 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0184, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 267 (Ga. 2009).

Consent given by outbuilding owners and property deemed abandoned. — With regard to a defendant's convictions for sexual abuse of a child, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress various items found in an outbuilding that the defendant, the victim, and the victim's parent had been living in as the owners of the outbuilding consented to the entry by the police as well as had brought certain items to the police themselves. The defendant's failure to retrieve the items for over three months, despite repeated requests on the part of the owners to get the items, as well as the defendant moving out of state sufficiently established that the defendant abandoned the property, thus, no illegal search and seizure was possible. Driggers v. State, 295 Ga. App. 711, 673 S.E.2d 95 (2009).

4. Inventory Search

Inventory search is custodial act not subject to motion. — That the making and filing of an inventory pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-2 is merely a ministerial act not affecting the substantive rights of an accused is borne out by the fact that such failure is not a ground for a motion to suppress under Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13. Williams v. State, 125 Ga. App. 170, 186 S.E.2d 756 (1971).

Searches (Cont'd)
4. Inventory Search (Cont'd)

Inventory search pursuant to standard procedure. — Because the impoundment of the vehicle the defendant had been driving was reasonable and there was evidence to support the trial court's finding that the inventory search, during which bags containing marijuana and cocaine were found, was conducted pursuant to standard police procedure, the trial court's denial of the motion to suppress was not improper. Askew v. State, 326 Ga. App. 859, 755 S.E.2d 283 (2014).

Inventory of personal items of arrestee proper. — Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied as a search of defendant's wallet was conducted during an inventory of the defendant's personal items after the defendant was arrested and was not investigatory. Morrison v. State, 272 Ga. App. 34, 611 S.E.2d 720, aff'd, 280 Ga. 222, 626 S.E.2d 500 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence officers found during the booking process at the detention center because the court's finding there was probable cause for the defendant's arrest for firing a handgun at a street light at a hotel and was not clearly erroneous when the combined facts and circumstances known to the arresting officers were sufficient to warrant a prudent person in believing that the defendant had committed the offense of discharging a firearm on the property of another without permission in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-11-104(a); the defendant matched the unique description of one of the shooters provided by the eyewitness and communicated to the responding officers, and the defendant was encountered by the officers near the scene of the shooting incident shortly after the incident occurrence. Davis v. State, 304 Ga. App. 355, 696 S.E.2d 381 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because there was evidence to support the trial court's finding that the officers' search of a zippered, red bag found during the inventory search of the defendant's motorcycle was conducted pursuant to State Patrol procedures, which required that all items of value be listed and, thus, did not exceed the permissible scope of the inventory search; there was no showing that the police, who were following standardized procedures, acted in bad faith or for the sole purpose of investigation. Grizzle v. State, 310 Ga. App. 577, 713 S.E.2d 701 (2011).

Suppression of data on electronic devices seized during arrest. — Trial court properly suppressed evidence derived from the appellees' electronic devices legally seized at the time of arrest as, relying on persuasive authority from the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, the 539 day delay between the seizure of the devices and issuance of search warrants for data contained in the devices was unreasonable and violated the appellees' rights under the Fourth Amendment and Georgia law. State v. Rosenbaum, 305 Ga. 442, 826 S.E.2d 18 (2019).

Failure to complain when no inventory made constitutes waiver. — Failure to include in the motion to suppress the police officer's failure to make an inventory of articles seized during a search under Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) is a waiver of that particular ground. Touchstone v. State, 121 Ga. App. 602, 174 S.E.2d 450 (1970).

Property clearly taken for other than protective reasons. — After a bag was placed in custody of another individual by the defendant after the defendant's involvement in a traffic accident (such individual putting the bag in the individual's apartment) and, additionally, after the defendant's boyfriend was willing and able to take custody of the bag, the state could not premise seizure of the bag on the necessity to protect the bag from being lost or stolen or to protect themselves; consequently, the police conducted a warrantless investigatory search without probable cause, under the guise of an inventory search, and the defendants' motion to suppress should have been granted. Gaston v. State, 155 Ga. App. 337, 270 S.E.2d 877 (1980).

Informants

Applicability of state law. — If the informer's privilege to remain anonymous at a probable cause hearing is a state evidentiary question, the court must look to Georgia law. Keith v. State, 238 Ga. 157, 231 S.E.2d 727 (1977).

Information must meet probable cause test. — Sole question is whether the information to support the warrant meets the test for probable cause; there is no need to reveal the informer's identity. Keith v. State, 238 Ga. 157, 231 S.E.2d 727 (1977).

Tip provided by paid confidential informant and then transferred to the officer through the channels of police communication had more indicia of reliability than an anonymous tip and justified the officer's stop of the defendant's vehicle. Beck v. State, 216 Ga. App. 532, 455 S.E.2d 110 (1995).

Informer's anonymity for probable cause purpose is evidentiary. — When the state relied on information supplied by an informer to establish probable cause for a warrant, the informer's privilege to remain anonymous presents a question of evidentiary rather than constitutional magnitude at a motion to suppress, when the issue is the preliminary one of probable cause, and guilt or innocence is not at stake. Keith v. State, 238 Ga. 157, 231 S.E.2d 727 (1977).

Anonymous tip lacked detail. — Defendant's motion to suppress suspected cocaine was properly granted as: (1) police officers lacked probable cause to arrest the defendant for obstruction of justice upon the defendant's flight; (2) an initial uncoercive encounter with the police did not constitute a seizure, and the defendant was free to leave at any time; and (3) the record was devoid of any evidence about the details of an anonymous tip that the defendant was seen selling drugs in the area of the encounter; moreover, given the tip's lack of detail and failure to predict future behavior, observation of the defendant's conduct might have warranted further investigation, but it did not rise to the level of reasonable suspicion needed to briefly detain or even arrest. State v. Dukes, 279 Ga. App. 247, 630 S.E.2d 847 (2006).

9-1-1 call from unidentified informant. — A 9-1-1 call from an unidentified informant did not provide the police with reasonable suspicion to stop the defendant's vehicle, and the stop unreasonably intruded upon defendant's Fourth Amendment rights; as a result, the trial court erred by denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Slocum v. State, 267 Ga. App. 337, 599 S.E.2d 299 (2004).

Direct involvement of confidential informant. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress methamphetamine seized in plain view by officers who were given information by a confidential informant, despite the fact that the informant had never provided this type of information to police before as: (1) that information was sufficiently reliable to give law enforcement a reasonable suspicion to detain the defendant and investigate the informant's report that the defendant would be delivering methamphetamine to a specific location at a certain time; (2) the information contained facts unknown to the general public; and (3) the informant personally provided the information to officers and accompanied the officers to the suspected location of the delivery; moreover, because the defendant did not dispute that the methamphetamine was found, and did not claim that the confidential informant could aid in a defense, the trial court did not err by denying disclosure of the confidential informant's identity. Cole v. State, 282 Ga. App. 211, 638 S.E.2d 363 (2006).

No error occurred in the denial of a defendant's motion to suppress evidence based on a claim that the police lacked probable cause to arrest the defendant; information provided by an informant was reliable and established probable cause because the informant used the defendant as a supplier, the informant set up a buy from the defendant under police supervision, the informant described in accurate detail the vehicle the defendant would be driving and where and when the sale would occur, and in telling the police that the informant could lead the police to the defendant, the informant made an inculpatory statement related to the defendant's own drug trafficking charge. v. State, 292 Ga. App. 518, 664 S.E.2d 866 (2008).

Anonymous tip sufficient. — Because the trial court found that officers acting on an anonymous tip that marijuana was being grown at the defendant's residence were within the officers' rights when the officers saw marijuana from the adjoining property, when the officers smelled marijuana from the driveway, and when the officers went to both the front and the back doors of the house in an attempt to make contact with someone, and the grounds given in the affidavit supporting a search warrant application were wholly unconnected with the defendant's arrest and the two protective sweeps, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Padgett v. State, 287 Ga. App. 789, 653 S.E.2d 102 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0415, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 209 (Ga. 2008).

Tip provided by unknown informant sufficient when corroborated. — Denial of motion to suppress was upheld when, contrary to defendant's argument, the affidavit in support of the search warrant provided sufficient probable cause for issuing the warrant; the information provided by the allegedly unreliable, unknown informant was corroborated by the victim's description and an officer's observations of the defendant following the crime. In addition, the affidavit was not insufficient because the affidavit was based on double hearsay provided by the informant to one officer, who then relayed the information to the officer who presented the affidavit. Johnson v. State, 265 Ga. App. 777, 595 S.E.2d 625 (2004).

Tipster's reliability unknown. — Trial court erred in failing to suppress evidence seized in the wake of an invalid stop of defendant's vehicle because the stop of the vehicle was based on a tip; although the officer was able to corroborate the description of the vehicle, the vehicle's location, and the fact that there was a black male driver and female passenger, the tip did not provide any information concerning the defendant's future behavior and related to easily obtained facts; the tipster did not fit the definition of a concerned citizen and was more akin to a known informant of unknown reliability. Rucker v. State, 276 Ga. App. 683, 624 S.E.2d 259 (2005).

Use of "unknown" informant did not justify suppression. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress, despite a claim that an informant used to apprehend the defendant was not previously known to police and had never provided any information until helping in the prosecution of the defendant, because the informant's tip predicted some aspects of the defendant's future behavior and contained information not available to the general public that was corroborated by the observations of officers; moreover, the defendant's reckless driving and flight from a congested parking lot, which caused a short high-speed chase to ensue, and the fact that the police learned that the defendant often carried a gun, provided the officers with an additional basis to stop the defendant and make an arrest. Patton v. State, 287 Ga. App. 18, 650 S.E.2d 733 (2007).

Reliable and anonymous tip with sufficient detail. — Defendant was not entitled to suppression of the evidence seized by a police officer making an investigatory stop as the information provided to the officer by a reliable and anonymous tip contained explicit details of the defendant's travel itinerary, which were not known by the general public. Daniels v. State, 278 Ga. App. 263, 628 S.E.2d 684 (2006).

Information provided by confidential informant was reliable. — Denial of the defendant's motion to suppress was upheld when the personal observations of the affiant officer established the reliability of the confidential informant; among other things, the officer ensured that the informant had no illegal drugs when the informant entered the residence and confirmed that the informant possessed crack cocaine when the informant came out. Browner v. State, 265 Ga. App. 788, 595 S.E.2d 610 (2004).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress on the ground that a confidential informant was not reliable because the basis for the in-formant's knowledge was that the informant overheard one of the codefendants discuss that there was going to be methamphetamine at the address to be searched, and evidence of the informant's reliability included that the informant had been known to the deputy and that the informant had previously provided information to narcotics agents leading to the seizure of methamphetamine and marijuana and to several drug-related arrests. Hawkins v. State, 303 Ga. App. 618, 694 S.E.2d 132 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress drug evidence because the basis of an informant's knowledge was the informant's personal observation of marijuana at the defendant's residence, and the informant's reliability was sufficiently established by evidence that the informant had been known by the investigating officer for 11 or 12 years and had been instrumental in obtaining arrests and convictions in numerous prior cases; while the better practice would have been for the officer to include all information relating to the informant's reliability, the informant's failure to provide the informant's prior criminal history and payment history did not invalidate the warrant in light of the other indicia of the informant's reliability. Williams v. State, 303 Ga. App. 222, 692 S.E.2d 820 (2010).

Because the information provided by a confidential informant was reliable and substantially corroborated by the police officers, probable cause to search the defendant existed; accordingly, because the warrantless search was authorized with or without the defendant's consent, there was no basis to suppress the drug evidence found on the defendant's person. Hall v. State, 310 Ga. App. 397, 714 S.E.2d 7 (2011).

Even if trial counsel was deficient for failing to timely file a motion to suppress, the defendant failed to establish that the defendant was prejudiced by such failure given that a confidential informant's tip was sufficient to establish probable cause without the need for independent corroboration. Williams v. State, 316 Ga. App. 383, 729 S.E.2d 517 (2012).

Previously used informant reliable. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized from the defendant's apartment upon execution of a search warrant. The affidavit of a deputy in support of the warrant was based on an informant's tip that established probable cause as the informant had been in the defendant's apartment and had personally viewed the drugs. Further, the deputy had known the informant for at least six months and the informant had been helpful in five other cases, and therefore no independent corroboration of the informant's tip was necessary. Rocha v. State, 284 Ga. App. 852, 644 S.E.2d 921 (2007).

Tip from known reliable informant. — Police had a reasonable, articulable suspicion that justified stopping the defendant's truck based on a tip from a known, reliable informant and there was no requirement to provide a basis for predicting specific future behavior of the suspect. Steed v. State, 273 Ga. App. 845, 616 S.E.2d 185 (2005).

In considering the "veracity" of the persons supplying information, the court should not lose sight of the fact that, whether an individual supplying information of a possible crime is a "concerned citizen" to whom a presumption of credibility is accorded or an "anonymous informant," the information provided by either may support the issuance of a warrant when that information is corroborated by further investigation by officers. State v. Towe, 246 Ga. App. 808, 541 S.E.2d 423 (2000).

Decision on informer's existence by trial judge after questioning police. — Whether or not an informer really exists is a question of evidence to be decided by the trial court after the officers have been thoroughly questioned and cross-examined. Keith v. State, 238 Ga. 157, 231 S.E.2d 727 (1977).

Informant's information not stale. — Search warrant that a police officer executed was valid because the officer's affidavit in support of the warrant contained sufficient, reliable information that was not stale regarding the officer's reliance on a confidential informant. Rogers v. State, 274 Ga. App. 546, 618 S.E.2d 166 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the information a confidential informant provided a narcotics agent was not stale, and in reviewing the totality of the circumstances, the magistrate was authorized to conclude that on a certain date, based on a conversation the informant overheard, methamphetamine was going to be manufactured at the defendant's house; regardless of whether the informant actually heard the information on the date in question, the information provided a substantial basis for believing that when the magistrate issued the warrant methamphetamine was being manufactured at the defendant's residence. Hawkins v. State, 303 Ga. App. 618, 694 S.E.2d 132 (2010).

State need not give informers' names. — When the state relied on information supplied by an informer to establish probable cause for a search warrant, the state need not reveal the names of the state's informers at a motion to suppress. Keith v. State, 238 Ga. 157, 231 S.E.2d 727 (1977).

Warrant must give circumstances indicating credibility if informant unidentified. — When a search warrant issues on the basis of information furnished by an unidentified informant the warrant must include underlying circumstances from which the agent concluded that the informant was credible or the informant's information reliable. State v. Mabrey, 140 Ga. App. 577, 231 S.E.2d 461 (1976).

Informant without established reliability. — Informant without an established past reliability may be used to furnish information leading to the issuance of a valid search warrant if the officer making the affidavit satisfies the requirements of supplying to the magistrate the underlying circumstances from which the credibility of the information was determined. State v. Mabrey, 140 Ga. App. 577, 231 S.E.2d 461 (1976).

Present reliability counts more than past. — Past reliability of an informant is important in evaluating present credibility, though it is always present reliability which is at issue when a search warrant is being sought. State v. Mabrey, 140 Ga. App. 577, 231 S.E.2d 461 (1976).

Informant who appears honest with no criminal record. — It is not error to overrule a motion to suppress evidence found as a result of a search after the affiant prosecutor formed the prosecutor's opinion from the demeanor and reputation of and intrinsic corroborative detail furnished by the informer, who was a person with no known criminal record, a mature person, regularly employed, a college student in good standing who demonstrated truthful demeanor, and the detail stated indicated personal knowledge. Davis v. State, 129 Ga. App. 158, 198 S.E.2d 913 (1973).

Because law enforcement had the authority to conduct a warrantless search of the defendant's automobile based upon information supplied to law enforcement from a reliable, honest, and law-abiding informant, which was independently confirmed by officers investigating the tip, the trial court did not err when the court denied a motion to suppress the evidence seized in the defendant's car. Fleming v. State, 281 Ga. App. 207, 635 S.E.2d 823 (2006).

Showing officer's basis for probable cause. — When affidavits fail (1) to give reasons for an informant's reliability; and (2) to either state how the informer obtained the information or that the tip described the criminal activity in such detail that the magistrate may know it is more than a casual rumor circulating in the underworld, or an accusation based merely on an individual's general reputation, a trial judge errs in overruling a motion to suppress. Moreland v. State, 132 Ga. App. 420, 208 S.E.2d 193 (1974).

For court to sustain a police officer's determination of probable cause on the basis of information provided by an informant, the state, at the hearing on the motion to suppress, is required to produce evidence showing that the police officer knew how the informant received the information or else had such detailed information that the officer knew the information to be more than mere rumor or suspicion. State v. Wells, 153 Ga. App. 308, 265 S.E.2d 111 (1980).

Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied as a search warrant was based on probable cause because Clayton County investigators purchased an illegal video poker machine from a subject in Clayton County, who said the machine was obtained from a particular address in DeKalb County, and both DeKalb and Clayton investigators observed "several other illegal video poker machines" at that address; while the investigators could not tell from looking at the machines whether the machines were legal or not, the test was only whether the evidence established a fair probability that contraband would be found. Jones v. State, 276 Ga. App. 810, 625 S.E.2d 4 (2005).

Because: (1) the state conceded that the state's informant was not reliable as the informant never previously provided information to the state's investigator; and (2) the police failed to independently investigate and corroborate the information provided to the police by that informant in support of a search warrant affidavit, the magistrate lacked a substantial basis for determining that probable cause existed to search the defendant's home; thus, the evidence seized as a result should have been suppressed. St. Fleur v. State, 286 Ga. App. 564, 649 S.E.2d 817 (2007).

Suppression required if informant unreliable. — Court erred in refusing to suppress evidence seized due to a search warrant based on an informant when neither the informant nor the informant's information were shown to be reliable; the convictions at issue were unsupported without the tainted evidence and reversal was required. Land v. State, 259 Ga. App. 860, 578 S.E.2d 551 (2003).

Denial of the defendant's suppression motion was error as a search warrant was based upon the statements of a confidential informant (CI) whose reliability, credibility, and source of information were unknown, law enforcement officers had failed to corroborate the CI's claim that the defendant was selling drugs from the residence, and the officers did not observe the CI's conduct before or after the controlled buy. Chatham v. State, 323 Ga. App. 51, 746 S.E.2d 605 (2013).

Identification Procedures

Photographic identification. — Trial court erred in granting a defendant's motion to suppress a photographic identification as the two steps of the test for determining whether a photographic identification was admissible were erroneously conflated since, without ruling on whether the lineup procedure was impermissibly suggestive, the trial court applied the totality of the circumstances factors and ruled that the victim's identification was without any substantial factual basis; thereafter, the trial court again applied the totality of the circumstances factors and found that there was a substantial likelihood of misidentification of the defendant as the intruder. State v. Norton, 280 Ga. App. 657, 634 S.E.2d 810 (2006).

Trial court did not err in admitting a photograph of the victim with the victim's spouse because the jury observed the victim's spouse when the spouse testified and identified the photograph, and the trial court determined that the admission of the photograph would not give rise to a strong emotion. Haynes v. State, 287 Ga. 202, 695 S.E.2d 219 (2010).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the victim's identification of the defendant in a pretrial photo array because the array was not impermissibly suggestive; the six men depicted were of the same race or ethnicity, the same general age group, and had similar hairstyles and facial hair. Delgiudice v. State, 308 Ga. App. 397, 707 S.E.2d 603 (2011).

Independent source for identification. — Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress an identification based on a hearsay recounting that something along the lines of an improper show-up occurred; further, there was an independent source for the identification as the victim knew the defendant and the other suspect and identified the defendant in a photographic array. State v. Byrd, 266 Ga. App. 121, 596 S.E.2d 426 (2004).

Identification evidence not suppressed. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of the identification during a one-on-one show-up, based on the totality of the circumstances as the victim got a good look at the defendant from about three feet away, immediately was able to give a description to police, only a short time passed between the robbery and the identification, and the victim had a clear opportunity to see the robber up close during the middle of the day. Fitzgerald v. State, 279 Ga. App. 67, 630 S.E.2d 598 (2006).

Because there was no likelihood of irreparable misidentification, especially since a witness stated that the witness's identification of the defendant was based upon seeing the defendant at the scene of the crime, and because the victim and witness both identified the defendant as the shooter at trial, any error in the admission of the show-up identification was harmless; therefore, the defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied. Lee v. State, 298 Ga. App. 630, 680 S.E.2d 643 (2009).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress identification evidence because the trial court was authorized to find that no substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification existed; the victim identified the defendant within thirty minutes of the offense, and the victim stated that the victim got a good look at all of the assailants and was one hundred percent sure and knew for a fact that the defendant was the person who demanded money and punched the victim in the face, noting that "it was fresh in his head." Law v. State, 308 Ga. App. 76, 706 S.E.2d 604 (2011).

Trial court did not clearly err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the victim's pre-trial identification of the defendant as the perpetrator because the trial court's ruling was supported by evidence that the victim: (1) knew the defendant from the neighborhood; (2) described the defendant to an officer on the scene; (3) spent 30 minutes or more with the defendant in an apartment talking with the defendant then defending against the attack; (4) quickly and confidently identified the defendant as the victim's assailant upon seeing the defendant's picture; and (5) identified the defendant at the hearing on the motion to suppress and at trial. Leeks v. State, 309 Ga. App. 724, 710 S.E.2d 908 (2011).

Identification evidence was not subject to suppression on the basis that the lineup procedure was impermissibly suggestive as, even assuming that the officer indicated to the witness that the lineup contained a photograph of the second suspect, there was nothing about the identification procedure that would have inevitably led the witness to identify the defendant as the gunman. The lineup consisted of photographs of six males, all of whom were the same race, appeared to be approximately the same age, and had similar hairstyles, facial hair, and facial features; thus, no one photograph stood out from the others. Williams v. State, 316 Ga. App. 821, 730 S.E.2d 541 (2012).

One-on-one identification evidence admissible. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the victim's pre-trial identification of the defendant during a one-on-one show-up at the police station because the victim had the opportunity to view the attacker's face and focused attention thereon, and the victim's description of the attacker was fairly accurate; the existence of some inconsistencies did not render the victim's testimony inadmissible, but rather was a matter for the jury. Butler v. State, 290 Ga. 412, 721 S.E.2d 876 (2012).

Denial upheld when admission of pre-trial identification was not erroneous. — Denial of the defendant's motion to suppress based on an alleged error in the admission of a pre-trial identification was upheld as there was no indication that the photographic line-up was impermissibly suggestive or that the identification was not based solely upon the recognition of the defendant by the victim during the actual robbery. Pinson v. State, 266 Ga. App. 254, 596 S.E.2d 734 (2004).

Applicability

1. In General

Applicability to all motions to suppress. — So as not to create two procedures, one statutory and the other nonstatutory, all motions to suppress should be governed by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 to the extent possible. State v. Slaughter, 252 Ga. 435, 315 S.E.2d 865 (1984).

Applicable only to criminal defendants. — Since the companies were not criminal defendants, the company's appeal of the trial court's denial of a motion to suppress was inappropriate as O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 did not apply; thus, the insurance commissioner did not have to prove the commissioner's authority to conduct an investigation and, since the law was clear on the appealed issues, the commissioner was entitled to a frivolous appeal penalty. Nat'l Viatical, Inc. v. State, 258 Ga. App. 408, 574 S.E.2d 337 (2002).

Applicable only to searches and seizures made by peace officers. — See State v. Young, 234 Ga. 488, 216 S.E.2d 586, cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1039, 96 S. Ct. 576, 46 L. Ed. 2d 413 (1975).

O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 does not apply necessarily to searches by state officials. — Mere fact that action is taken by state officials is not adequate to invoke the exclusionary rule even if that section violates U.S. Const., amend. 4. State v. Young, 234 Ga. 488, 216 S.E.2d 586, cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1039, 96 S. Ct. 576, 46 L. Ed. 2d 413 (1975).

Applicable to tangible evidence only. — Motion to suppress is to be aimed at tangible evidence only, not to confessions or identification testimony, such that the trial court did not err in failing to grant a motion to suppress the defendant's statements or the victim's identification testimony. Robinson v. State, 208 Ga. App. 528, 430 S.E.2d 830 (1993).

Defendant's purported confused mental state is not an acceptable legal reason for suppression of evidence seized following the defendant's arrest. Rauschenberg v. State, 161 Ga. App. 331, 291 S.E.2d 58 (1982).

No pretrial suppression of unlawful evidence legally seized. — Only persons entitled to the benefit of Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) are persons aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure. No provision is made in that section for pretrial suppression of evidence deemed illegal for reasons other than unlawful search and seizure. Norrell v. State, 116 Ga. App. 479, 157 S.E.2d 784 (1967); Pass v. State, 227 Ga. 730, 182 S.E.2d 779 (1971); Reynolds v. State, 147 Ga. App. 488, 249 S.E.2d 305 (1978).

Motion to suppress evidence illegally seized must be based on evidence obtained as a result of an unlawful search and seizure. Davis v. State, 155 Ga. App. 511, 271 S.E.2d 648 (1980).

Waiver as part of drug court contract upheld. — Under the terms of a drug court contract, the defendant waived any right to suppress evidence seized as a result of a warrantless search, and absent evidence to the contrary and bad faith on the part of law enforcement, the waiver remained enforceable. Wilkinson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 213, 641 S.E.2d 189 (2006).

Customer not "aggrieved" by telephone company bill's seizure. — Defendants lacked standing under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 since the defendants were not "aggrieved" by the seizure of telephone toll records because the records belonged to the phone company. Van Nice v. State, 180 Ga. App. 112, 348 S.E.2d 515 (1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 931, 107 S. Ct. 1568, 94 L. Ed. 2d 760 (1987).

Lack of objective and particularized basis led to suppression. — Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized by law enforcement which showed that the first officer on the scene lacked a particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was involved in criminal activity, and after a back-up officer arrived, neither officer was placed in fear of the officer's safety by the defendant's actions; thus, the first officer's acts of detaining the defendant and asking for consent to search were unlawful. State v. Lanes, 287 Ga. App. 311, 651 S.E.2d 456 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0051, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 85 (Ga. 2008).

Because the evidence sufficiently showed that the defendant's mental condition was clearly vulnerable, and that the defendant: (1) could not read; (2) had to be forcibly restrained while the consent form was initially being read; (3) was weeping while the remainder of the form was read; and (4) never actually signed the consent form, the trial court properly found that any consent to submit to blood and urine tests was not freely and voluntarily given. Moreover, the proper standard of review on appeal, based on the fact that credibility was an issue, was not a de novo standard, but a clearly erroneous standard. State v. Stephens, 289 Ga. App. 167, 657 S.E.2d 18 (2008).

Not error to deny motion if property not used against defendant. — It is harmless error to deny a motion to suppress if property seized under an illegal search warrant and which appellant sought to have returned to appellant by a motion to suppress is never tendered in evidence. Reid v. State, 129 Ga. App. 660, 200 S.E.2d 456 (1973).

Since no evidence gathered in the search of the defendant's computer or the defendant's jail cell was tendered and admitted against the defendant, even if the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress with regard to those two search warrants, the error was harmless. Glenn v. State, 288 Ga. 462, 704 S.E.2d 794 (2010).

Evidence arising from first level police-citizen encounter. — Trial court erroneously granted a motion to suppress concluding that: (1) police had no particularized objective basis for seizing the men, including the defendant; (2) the officer had no reason to pat down the first man and did so as a pretext to search for drugs; and (3) the defendant did not voluntarily consent to the search; the defendant lacked standing to object to the search, the defendant had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the bag which contained the contraband, and the stop, which led to the seizure, as a first tier encounter, was reasonable. State v. Robinson, 278 Ga. App. 511, 629 S.E.2d 509 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress as a stop by a police officer qualified as a first level police-citizen encounter, and upon learning of an outstanding warrant for the defendant, the officer had probable cause to make an arrest and conduct a search incident thereto; further, the state was not required to introduce the warrant into evidence in order to establish the warrant's validity. Lucas v. State, 284 Ga. App. 450, 644 S.E.2d 302 (2007).

Trial court correctly denied the defendant's motion to suppress on the ground that a police officer lacked reasonable suspicion to stop and detain the defendant because there was testimony indicating that the police encounter with the defendant up to the point of the defendant's arrest was consensual and involved no coercion or detention; therefore, the trial court was authorized to find that the encounter was of the first tier, a communication between the police and a citizen involving no coercion or detention, and did not require a showing that the officer acted with reasonable suspicion of criminal activity, and once the officer learned that the defendant had been driving with a suspended license, the officer had probable cause to arrest the defendant. Grimes v. State, 303 Ga. App. 808, 695 S.E.2d 294 (2010).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the officer lacked reasonable suspicion of criminal activity for an investigatory stop, the defendant's exercise of the right to avoid a first-tier encounter was not relevant to whether the officer had reasonable suspicion of criminal activity, and items the defendant discarded during flight were related to the illegal detention and inadmissible. Walker v. State, 323 Ga. App. 558, 747 S.E.2d 51 (2013).

Probable cause for arrest. — In a case when the defendants were convicted of trafficking in cocaine, the trial court did not err in finding that there was probable cause to arrest the two defendants because after the codefendant met the two defendants in a nearby apartment complex, the defendant returned with the package of cocaine to sell to the undercover agent, and the second defendant parked that defendant's truck facing the area of the anticipated exchange, apparently so that the second defendant and the first defendant could watch the drug deal; therefore, the trial court did not err by denying the first defendant's motion to suppress. Lopez v. State, 267 Ga. App. 532, 601 S.E.2d 116 (2004).

Trial court did not err in denying a motion to suppress as the defendant's presence at the scene of an ongoing robbery, coupled with the defendant's flight from police, supplied sufficient probable cause justifying an arrest, and police thereafter conducted a lawful Terry pat-down. Vega v. State, 285 Ga. App. 405, 646 S.E.2d 501 (2007).

Trial court did not err in failing to suppress all the evidence discovered as a result of the defendant's arrest because the arresting officer had probable cause to make an arrest for DUI. Caraway v. State, 286 Ga. App. 592, 649 S.E.2d 758 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1736, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 686 (Ga. 2007).

Probable cause to support arrest meant no suppression of evidence. — Appeals court rejected the defendant's contention that a written statement should have been suppressed because the statement was obtained after the defendant was arrested without probable cause and improperly detained as the evidence sufficiently showed that the defendant's presence at the scene of an alleged robbery, coupled with the defendant's flight from police, justified the arrest made, therefore supplying the requisite degree of probable cause to support the arrest. McCoy v. State, 285 Ga. App. 246, 645 S.E.2d 728 (2007).

State court lacked jurisdiction over money seized by local authorities, then delivered to federal authorities for a federal forfeiture proceeding pursuant to 21 U.S.C. § 881, the forfeiture section of the Controlled Substances Act. King v. State, 264 Ga. 282, 443 S.E.2d 844 (1994).

Defendants not prejudiced if fruits of search ruled admissible. — If the evidence authorized the trial judge in ruling that the warrantless search was legal in that the search was based on probable cause and exigent circumstances precluded the police officer from obtaining a warrant, the defendants could not argue that the defendants were prejudiced because presentation to the jury of the fruits of the search was improper. State v. Peabody, 247 Ga. 580, 277 S.E.2d 668 (1981).

Motion to suppress not deemed motion in limine to exclude testimony. — Trial court correctly ruled that a motion to suppress was moot because no tangible physical evidence was admitted at trial, and even if the trial court granted the motion to suppress, the ruling did not constitute a ruling that all testimony related to the seized vehicle was inadmissible as the defendant's failure to object to the evidence at the time of introduction at trial was a waiver of any illegal search and seizure; thus, the defendant's motion to suppress could not be deemed a motion in limine to exclude testimony regarding the events that occurred after the initial stop. Maxwell v. State, 285 Ga. App. 685, 647 S.E.2d 374 (2007).

Suppression motion improperly granted. — Because a police officer possessed sufficient information regarding both the defendants via a police dispatcher, who was relaying information from a 9-1-1 caller, and after signaling for the defendants to pull the vehicle over, the officer observed both the defendants switch places, the officer observed sufficient and particular facts to investigate both men for driving under the influence; hence, the trial court erroneously ordered suppression of the evidence obtained from the resulting traffic stop. State v. Bingham, 283 Ga. App. 468, 641 S.E.2d 663 (2007).

Because the defendant's apparent violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-16(a) gave the investigating officer a reasonable and articulable suspicion to stop the defendant and inquire further, the trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress a refusal to take a breath test in connection with DUI charges; moreover, the trial court erroneously concluded that the defendant could have had an innocent explanation for a last-minute swerve to avoid hitting the officer's patrol car as the issue went to the question of guilt or innocence and was not the dispositive question on a motion to suppress. State v. Rheinlander, 286 Ga. App. 625, 649 S.E.2d 828 (2007).

Because the evidence gathered while the defendant's residence was under surveillance, including the contents of the defendant's garbage as well as an officer's specific testimony regarding marijuana residue found on a piece of plastic wrap, supported a finding of probable cause necessary to justify the issuance of a search warrant for the defendant's residence, suppression of the evidence seized as a result of the execution of the search warrant was improper. State v. Davis, 288 Ga. App. 164, 653 S.E.2d 311 (2007).

1. In General (Cont'd)

Trial court erroneously granted suppression of the evidence seized in a traffic stop involving two defendants in which an officer, after arresting the first defendant for obstruction, searched the car and found a substance which a field test showed to be cocaine as the stopping officer was authorized to make the stop based on a violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-202 and because the officer could search the passenger compartment of the car incident to the arrest of the first defendant. State v. Stafford, 288 Ga. App. 309, 653 S.E.2d 750 (2007), aff'd, 284 Ga. 773, 671 S.E.2d 484 (2008).

Trial court erred in finding that a no-knock warrant lacked probable cause and in granting suppression of the evidence seized pursuant to the warrant because both the warrant's affiant and a credible informant provided sufficient information that drugs were being sold at the location; moreover, a violation of the knock and announce rule did not require suppression of the evidence found in an otherwise valid search. State v. Ballew, 290 Ga. App. 751, 660 S.E.2d 732 (2008).

Suppression motion properly granted. — Police officer unreasonably invaded the defendants' privacy by looking through the defendants' window before knocking on the defendants' door when executing an arrest warrant for a third party when: (1) there was insufficient evidence that the third party lived with the defendants; (2) even if the police were authorized to enter the defendants' home, looking through the window was unreasonable as the officer did not reach the window by traveling the route any visitor would travel to reach the front door; and (3) the officer did not have articulable facts which would warrant a reasonably prudent officer to believe that the third party was a danger. State v. Schwartz, 261 Ga. App. 742, 583 S.E.2d 573 (2003).

Because it was objectively reasonable for the defendant, a deputy sheriff, to have had a subjective belief that a termination from employment in that capacity would result by not cooperating with a GBI agent in an interrogation, the statements the defendant made as a result of the interrogation were properly suppressed as involuntarily made. State v. Stanfield, 290 Ga. App. 62, 658 S.E.2d 837 (2008).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress as the officer was authorized to initiate the traffic stop after observing the defendant's seat belt violation and was thereafter authorized to make a reasonable inquiry and investigation. After learning that the defendant did not have a valid driver's license, the officer had probable cause to arrest the defendant and after observing the defendant reach into a pocket, retrieve a plastic bag, and attempt to conceal the bag, the officer had probable cause to search the vehicle for contraband. Horne v. State, 318 Ga. App. 484, 733 S.E.2d 487 (2012).

Probable cause supported an officer's search of defendant's person based on: (1) an officers' initial detection of the odor of marijuana in a house; (2) the primary resident's lie concerning other people being present in the house; (3) defendant's extreme nervousness in front of officers; (4) the discovery of drug paraphernalia after the primary resident consented twice to a search of the home; and (5) the fact that a crack pipe was found under the cushion on which the defendant was seated. Denial of a motion to suppress evidence found on the defendant after a search of the defendant's person, given those circumstances, was proper. Williams v. State, 265 Ga. App. 489, 594 S.E.2d 704 (2004).

Motion to suppress properly denied. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's suppression motion as the affidavit provided probable cause for the issuance of a search warrant under the totality of the circumstances test when: (1) a controlled buy from the defendant was described; (2) the defendant's willingness to turn over the cocaine at the defendant's residence was set forth; and (3) a statement from the person who was with the defendant at the time of the defendant's arrest that defendant had taken the person to the residence to pick up cocaine was set forth. Johnson v. State, 267 Ga. App. 549, 600 S.E.2d 667 (2004).

Trial court properly denied the defendants' motion to suppress the evidence seized from the defendants' home pursuant to a warrant as law enforcement officers were authorized to enter the home based on information the officers received from a 911 call in order to protect the property, investigate whether a burglary had occurred therein, or to learn whether someone inside had been injured. Moreover, despite the fact that evidence was seen in plain view during the short protective sweep, the officers nevertheless erred on the side of the Fourth Amendment, and obtained a search warrant before seizing those items. Love v. State, 290 Ga. App. 486, 659 S.E.2d 835 (2008).

Motion to suppress was properly denied as the trial court did not err in concluding that the officer had reasonable suspicion that the driver was, or was about to be, engaged in criminal activity because the burglary to which the officer responded appeared to be in progress given that someone apparently intended to come back for the air-conditioning units stacked by the open door into the premises; the hour was late, the businesses were closed, and there was no reason for anyone to be driving to the businesses or to the empty properties; the driver was in a pick-up truck capable of transporting several air-conditioning units; and the driver quickly retreated when the driver saw the police car. The above factors were sufficient to give the officer a particularized and objective basis for a reasonable suspicion to stop the vehicle and to investigate. Waldron v. State, 321 Ga. App. 246, 741 S.E.2d 301 (2013).

Second investigatory stop justified search. — Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied, even though an officer lacked a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity to support a first investigatory stop, as the defendant's flight after the officer's general questions, the defendant's suspicious claim that the defendant was biking home from a job ten miles away, and the defendant's proximity to a car with flashing lights consistent with a triggered car alarm, supported a second investigatory stop; the evidence the defendant sought to suppress was obtained after the second investigatory stop. Crowley v. State, 267 Ga. App. 718, 601 S.E.2d 154 (2004).

Identification. — Victim's out-of-court identification of the defendant as the person who robbed the victim was admissible because the victim, a cab driver, had ample time and lighting in which to observe the defendant and identified the defendant shortly after the crime occurred. Hollie v. State, 277 Ga. App. 103, 625 S.E.2d 507 (2005).

Probable cause lacking. — Because the circumstances of the defendant's low-speed flight from an uniformed detective, who was driving an unmarked vehicle, were insufficient to present law enforcement with evidence of a particular crime, the defendant could not be charged with the crime of attempting to elude an officer, and police lacked the probable cause sufficient to warrant an arrest for the offense; thus, the search incident to the arrest was invalid, warranting suppression of the evidence seized. Stephens v. State, 278 Ga. App. 694, 629 S.E.2d 565 (2006).

Suppression motion improperly denied. — In a prosecution for driving under the influence, the trial court erroneously denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized as a result of a traffic stop made by an officer armed with only a "be on the lookout" warning as the officer lacked a particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was involved in any criminal activity, but admitted to possessing only scant information about the driver, the year and make of the vehicle being driven, and the vehicle's direction of travel; moreover, the mere fact that the defendant's gold Ford truck was located in the vicinity of the alleged crime did not necessarily give rise to articulable suspicion. Murray v. State, 282 Ga. App. 741, 639 S.E.2d 631 (2006).

Because no exigency existed to justify a search after the defendant was handcuffed and placed under the watchful eye of a police officer, and even assuming that the defendant was under arrest while being detained in the kitchen, a search of the defendant's bedroom which yielded a shotgun found under the bed in the bedroom, a box of unspent shotgun shells, and some loose unspent shotgun shells, was not one incident to arrest; thus, the defendant's possession of a firearm while a convicted felon conviction was reversed, and the case was remanded for a new trial in which the illegally-obtained evidence could not be introduced. Hicks v. State, 287 Ga. App. 105, 650 S.E.2d 767 (2007).

Suppression motion properly denied. — Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied as a magistrate's issuance of a search warrant for defendant's home was supported by probable cause for purposes of the Fourth Amendment, Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, and O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 since: (1) witnesses reported seeing the defendant at the victim's home near the time that the victim disappeared; (2) the farm manager who located the victim's body told police that the defendant commonly used the farm for hunting; (3) the defendant had a tumultuous relationship with the victim; and (4) the defendant's mailbox was painted in a similar camouflage as the cattle trough in which the victim was found; as the warrant for the house was proper, the warrant for the defendant's truck was not fruit of the poisonous tree. Fortson v. State, 277 Ga. 164, 587 S.E.2d 39 (2003), overruled on other grounds by Willis v. State, 2018 Ga. LEXIS 685 (Ga. 2018).

Appellate court's finding that O.C.G.A. § 40-8-73.1 was unconstitutional as no rational connection existed between the residence of the driver of a vehicle and the goal of improving law enforcement officer safety during traffic stops, did not warrant suppression of evidence seized during a traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle because the investigating officer had reason to believe that the vehicle's windows were tinted darker than that permitted by the statute. Ciak v. State, 278 Ga. 27, 597 S.E.2d 392 (2004).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized pursuant to a warrant in a prosecution filed against the defendant for various sex crimes, when despite alleging specific ages, given the totality of the circumstances, the affidavit sought information of sexual activity involving minor children and was predicated on information provided by a parent involving sexual activity between the defendant and the victim, who was the parent's daughter. Phillips v. State, 283 Ga. App. 319, 641 S.E.2d 294 (2007).

Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied as: (1) an investigating officer had a reasonable articulable suspicion to stop the defendant's vehicle, based on a violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-40 for driving on the wrong side of the road; and (2) a 25-minute delay in reading the implied consent warning was not unreasonable under the circumstances presented. Dunbar v. State, 283 Ga. App. 872, 643 S.E.2d 292 (2007).

Because: (1) evidence seized from the defendant's residence as a result of an interrogation was sufficiently attenuated from any illegality to be admissible; (2) the duration of the search had no bearing on the subsequent consent given by the defendant's roommate; (3) the consent was not a product of any illegal conduct; and (4) there was no evidence of any flagrant misconduct and coercion on the part of the investigating law enforcement officers involved, the evidence was properly admitted. Spence v. State, 281 Ga. 697, 642 S.E.2d 856 (2007).

Because: (1) it was reasonable for the arresting officers to act upon an investigating deputy's observations; (2) law enforcement had reasonably trustworthy information to warrant law enforcement's belief that the defendant had committed or had participated in committing a burglary; and (3) a determination of probable cause to arrest the defendant could rest on the collective knowledge of the police, given the communication between them, probable cause supported the defendant's warrantless arrest and supported the admission of the seized evidence. Murphy v. State, 286 Ga. App. 447, 649 S.E.2d 565 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized by law enforcement given the totality of the circumstances presented including: (1) an anonymous tip; (2) the two responding officers' personal observations of the defendant's actions at the scene; and (3) the officers' brief investigative detention of the defendant; thus, a pat-down of the defendant's outer clothing was reasonable. Carter v. State, 287 Ga. App. 597, 651 S.E.2d 759 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0246, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 172 (Ga. 2008).

Because a detective's suspicions were raised by the defendant's odd behavior and the detective thought that something might be hidden in the defendant's shoes, the detective was permitted to detain the defendant in order to maintain the status quo while obtaining more information concerning that suspicion; thus, when combined with the defendant's valid consent, suppression of the evidence seized was unwarranted. Lane v. State, 287 Ga. App. 503, 651 S.E.2d 798 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0187, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 185 (Ga. 2008).

Because two police officers were validly and lawfully at the back steps leading to the back door of the defendant's residence investigating a possible burglary at the time it became obvious the officers needed to talk to the occupants of the residence to determine the occupants' knowledge of the burglary suspect, and the officers were not required to go the the front door of the residence in order to initiate the inquiry, when the officers saw the defendant in plain view packaging 35 grams of cocaine and 94 grams of marijuana into smaller packages, the trial court did not err in denying suppression of that evidence. King v. State, 289 Ga. App. 461, 657 S.E.2d 570 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying motions to suppress filed by the two defendants because: the officer (1) had a reasonable and sufficient basis for initiating a traffic stop of the car the defendants were traveling in based on a belief that the license plate on the subject vehicle might have belonged on another car, and hence, was illegally transferred; and (2) did not improperly prolong the stop once the defendants told conflicting stories of their travels and one declined to grant the officer consent to search. Andrews v. State, 289 Ga. App. 679, 658 S.E.2d 126 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C0963, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 507 (Ga. 2008).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress certain DNA evidence linking the defendant to the crimes charged because the record showed that, when asking for the issuance of a warrant authorizing the state to take the defendant's blood sample, police informed the magistrate about the salient facts known to the police at the time including: (1) the pizza order that lured the victim to an apartment belonging to the defendant's friend; (2) the fact that the defendant used the friend's phone on the night in question; and (3) the defendant confessed to being involved in the crimes. Moreover, when these facts were included with the others considered by the magistrate, probable cause to issue the warrant continued to exist. Carter v. State, 283 Ga. 76, 656 S.E.2d 524 (2008).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress drug evidence because the stop of the defendant's vehicle was justified based on the police having observed the defendant at a residence under surveillance for suspected drug activity: (1) the defendant went in and out of the residence under surveillance in under five minutes; (2) the defendant had a drug seller as a passenger in the defendant's vehicle; and (3) the defendant drove to the passenger's residence. The stop was a second-tier encounter that required reasonable suspicion, and the collective knowledge of the officers involved, based on the officers' observations, justified the defendant's stop. Satterfield v. State, 289 Ga. App. 886, 658 S.E.2d 379 (2008).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of a pat-down search because the defendant consented to the search and, under the plain-feel doctrine, the officer conducting the search was authorized to retrieve a plastic bag suspected to be illegal contraband from the defendant's watch pocket. Dunn v. State, 289 Ga. App. 585, 657 S.E.2d 649 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1021, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 496 (Ga. 2008).

Given that an officer, responding to a disturbance call in a remote location of the precinct involving the defendant, had a reasonable safety concern, and because the call described the defendant as loud, belligerent, and possibly intoxicated, the officer had a sufficient basis to conduct a pat-down search of the defendant; hence, the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of a concealed weapon and drugs found following a search was properly denied. Walker v. State, 289 Ga. App. 657, 658 S.E.2d 207 (2008).

Because the defendant committed a traffic violation by crossing a solid yellow line in the roadway, and was not legitimately faced with an obstruction, despite claiming that it was undoubtedly convenient to pass the slow moving van driving ahead, a police officer had a reasonable and articulable suspicion to initiate a traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle; thus, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of that stop. Przyjemski v. State, 290 Ga. App. 22, 658 S.E.2d 807 (2008).

Because the affidavit accompanying a search warrant contained sufficient probable cause and the resulting search was not rendered illegal merely because the date on the warrant post-dated the search by one day, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized pursuant to the warrant. Jones v. State, 289 Ga. App. 767, 658 S.E.2d 386 (2008).

Because law enforcement officers were given permission to enter a landowner's land in order to investigate the presence of possible trespassers for engaging in other illegal activity on the property, and found the defendant and a cohort, the officers gained a reasonable and articulable suspicion that the two individuals were involved in some form of criminal activity, the very least of which was criminal trespass, and therefore had the authority to detain the individuals in a brief investigative stop; thus, suppression of the evidence seized as a result of the encounter was properly denied, after the cohort ran, and the defendant failed to comply with the officers' orders, given that those actions amounted to probable cause to support a warrantless arrest and a search thereafter. Burgess v. State, 290 Ga. App. 24, 658 S.E.2d 809 (2008).

Given that the defendant was unable to offer a credible explanation for being on the grounds of a housing project, and failed to provide a law enforcement officer with a clear answer when asked about the ownership of a car the defendant had been leaning on, the officer had probable cause to make a warrantless arrest of the defendant for loitering; thus, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of that arrest. Boyd v. State, 290 Ga. App. 34, 658 S.E.2d 782 (2008).

Because: (1) the victim's identification of the defendant was based upon independent memory which the victim fairly accurately recalled in developing the composite sketch; (2) there was an independent basis for the victim's identifications; and (3) there was no substantial likelihood of misidentification under these circumstances, the trial court did not err in admitting the identification evidence and the trial court's finding that there was no likelihood of misidentification was supported by the record. Price v. State, 289 Ga. App. 763, 658 S.E.2d 382 (2008).

Given that an officer, responding to a disturbance call in a remote location of the precinct involving the defendant, had a reasonable safety concern, and because the call described the defendant as loud, belligerent, and possibly intoxicated, the officer had a sufficient basis to conduct a pat-down search of the defendant; hence, the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of a concealed weapon and drugs found following a search was properly denied. Walker v. State, 289 Ga. App. 657, 658 S.E.2d 207 (2008).

Evidence, including the odor of alcohol emanating from the defendant's person, the defendant's slurred speech, and the defendant's bloodshot and watery eyes, was more than sufficient to support the trial court's determination that the defendant's conduct and demeanor resulted from intoxication, supporting probable cause for arrest, and the results of a blood test did not require suppression. Schlanger v. State, 290 Ga. App. 407, 659 S.E.2d 823 (2008).

Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied as there was sufficient evidence for the trial court to conclude that an officer's initial contact with the defendant was a valid second-tier encounter since the officer already knew that the defendant's vehicle had an incorrect tag; as part of a valid second-tier encounter, the officer was authorized to conduct a pat-down search for weapons. As the defendant clearly had a large object in the defendant's pocket, and the trial court had the opportunity to observe the actual size and contours of the object, the officer's suspicion that the pocket contained a weapon was reasonable. Shoemaker v. State, 292 Ga. App. 97, 663 S.E.2d 423 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the search of the defendant's pockets was valid; the officers had a particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was involved in criminal activity, and because the pat-down was brief, yielded no evidence, and was not a basis for the further investigative detention, it did not taint the defendant's subsequent consent to the search of the pockets. Mwangi v. State, 316 Ga. App. 52, 728 S.E.2d 729 (2012).

Search and seizure not valid when defendant no longer on probation. — Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress because, given that the defendant was no longer a probationer and had not waived the defendant's Fourth Amendment rights, the warrantless searches and seizures were not valid. State v. New, 331 Ga. App. 139, 770 S.E.2d 239 (2015), cert. denied, No. S15C1075, 2015 Ga. LEXIS 429 (Ga. 2015).

2. Drug Evidence

Sufficient separation between legal and illegal activities by officer. — Although a police officer's initial entry into the defendant's residence was illegal since the officer entered after a guest opened the door and the guest was not authorized to allow the officer to enter, the defendant's Fourth Amendment rights were not violated and the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress as the officer left the residence upon finding the defendant was in the bathroom and did not return until the defendant requested that the officer reenter, at which time the defendant voluntarily consented to the search that later revealed the drugs on the defendant's property; the subsequent search was sufficiently attenuated from the initial illegal search that the trial court properly denied the motion to suppress. Brown v. State, 261 Ga. App. 351, 582 S.E.2d 516 (2003).

Free air search leading to drugs. — Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied as a "free air search" by a drug sniffing dog around the exterior of a vehicle stopped during a purportedly valid traffic stop in which the police did not have an articulable, reasonable suspicion of any illegal drug activity was valid under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII. Bowens v. State, 276 Ga. App. 520, 623 S.E.2d 677 (2005).

Valid first-tier encounter. — Denial of the defendant's motion to suppress was proper; a deputy's initial contact with the defendant was a first-tier encounter, requiring neither reasonable suspicion nor invoking Fourth Amendment protection and, as the defendant admitted that the defendant smoked marijuana upon being asked to explain its odor on defendant's person, the defendant was lawfully arrested and searched. Harding v. State, 283 Ga. App. 287, 641 S.E.2d 285 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the initial encounter was a first-tier encounter requiring no suspicion since the defendant was already stopped and the officer did not block the defendant's vehicle, activate the blue lights, or otherwise indicate that the defendant was unable to leave; the subsequent pat-down was proper because the pat-down was performed pursuant to the defendant's consent, which the defendant freely gave when requested by the officer. Kirkland v. State, 316 Ga. App. 310, 728 S.E.2d 907 (2012).

Valid second-tier encounter uncovers narcotics. — Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied because the methadone found in a lockbox was discovered during a valid second-tier encounter for a possible driving under the influence (DUI) violation after: (1) officers found the defendant asleep and unable to be roused at the wheel of a vehicle still in drive in the roadway, with an empty beer can next to the defendant; (2) an officer had not concluded the DUI stop when the officer asked the defendant about the lockbox; (3) the officer was free to ask the defendant additional questions to gather evidence of possible intoxication; and (4) the officer's question was related to the investigation of a possible DUI. Hendrix v. State, 273 Ga. App. 792, 616 S.E.2d 127 (2005).

Independent basis for arrest. — Denial of a defendant's motion to suppress was affirmed as the defendant's flight from an improper Terry stop gave the police officers an independent basis to arrest the defendant; thus, the methamphetamine found in close proximity was admissible. Reynolds v. State, 280 Ga. App. 712, 634 S.E.2d 842 (2006).

Drugs in plain view. — Defendant's motion to suppress methamphetamine was properly denied because exigent circumstances justified an officer in retrieving the defendant's weapon from the vehicle after the defendant admitted that the weapon was concealed and that the defendant did not have a permit for the weapon, and had twice started toward the vehicle to get the weapon personally, and the methamphetamine was in plain view in the bag that contained the weapon. Wright v. State, 272 Ga. App. 423, 612 S.E.2d 576 (2005).

Because the police were authorized to seize marijuana found in plain view, seen through the window of an apartment where the police were executing an arrest warrant on another individual, once the defendant answered a knock on the apartment door, police also had the right to search incident to the defendant's arrest for possession of marijuana and based on the exigency of the circumstances; hence, the trial court erred in granting a motion to suppress the marijuana without explaining the court's interpretation of the evidence or ruling on the credibility of the witnesses. State v. Venzen, 286 Ga. App. 597, 649 S.E.2d 851 (2007).

Trial court did not err by limiting the admissibility of items in a defendant's felony murder trial to those items seized incident to the defendant's arrest in the early morning hours and in plain view during the processing of the crime scene as an approximately 15-minute video recording of the premises, which was viewed by the trial court, supported the officers' testimony that guns, shell casings, significant amounts of cash, and items appearing to be crack cocaine were all in plain view and, under the circumstances, presented probable cause as being contraband or evidence of the crime of the felony murder of an officer. Fair v. State, 284 Ga. 165, 664 S.E.2d 227 (2008).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress the drug evidence found in the defendant's apartment as the evidence authorized the warrantless entry into the apartment based on the officers observing a marijuana cigarette lying next to the door and immediately smelling the strong odor of burnt marijuana when the door was opened. Lawrence v. State, 298 Ga. App. 94, 679 S.E.2d 94 (2009).

Officer's knowledge of defendant's prior drug conviction. — Because officers had probable cause to arrest the defendant, based on the officers' awareness of the defendant's prior arrest following an explosion at a methamphetamine lab and that the defendant was subject to bond requirements related to such arrest, and, at the time of the search, the defendant was in the company of an individual who was driving on a suspended license and carrying methamphetamine, which was in violation of the defendant's bond conditions, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized pursuant to the search incident to a valid arrest. Collins v. State, 281 Ga. App. 240, 636 S.E.2d 32 (2006).

Observations of officers justified. — Evidence in the record supported the denial of a motion to suppress as officers testified regarding their observations, surveillance techniques, experience with drug sales, and the general modes of operation of persons involved in drug sales, the officers were authorized to stop the defendant's vehicle as one involved in a drug sale, acting in concert with another vehicle as counter-surveillance and showing an obvious interest in the endeavor; further, because the detention lasted at most, 15 minutes, such was not unreasonable and did not amount to an impermissible seizure. Hickman v. State, 279 Ga. App. 558, 631 S.E.2d 778 (2006).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress the drug contraband found under the passenger seat of the vehicle in which the defendant was sitting as the vehicle had sped passed a residence wherein police officers were awaiting the return of an arrestee. The driver's actions in passing the residence warranted an investigative stop based on the belief that the arrestee was in the car and the traffic stop was authorized based on the officers observing the vehicle speeding, thus, the stop of the vehicle was not illegal. McBee v. State, 296 Ga. App. 42, 673 S.E.2d 569 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the evidence provided sufficient reasonable articulable suspicion to support a brief detention of the defendant; an officer had a particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was involved in criminal activity when the officer told the defendant to leave a residence because the officer was aware that the owner of the residence was known for dealing narcotics from a number of prior cases the officer had personally worked on, and the officer believed that the defendant was at the residence to buy marijuana. Hilbun v. State, 313 Ga. App. 457, 721 S.E.2d 656 (2011).

Sale of drugs in officer's presence. — Warrantless arrest of the defendant was authorized on the ground that a sale of cocaine was committed in the officers' presence, and after the defendant retreated into a motel room, the exigencies of the situation demanded an immediate entry into the room for the officer to arrest the defendant without a warrant; hence, there was no basis for suppression of the evidence seized thereafter. Fortson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 120, 640 S.E.2d 693 (2006).

Controlled buy observed by officer. — Controlled buy conducted under the observation of the officer alone was sufficient to establish probable cause, and there was no evidence that the officer knew, or should have known, that more than one person resided at the residence. Ibekilo v. State, 277 Ga. App. 384, 626 S.E.2d 592 (2006).

Undercover drug activities by law enforcement. — Because the totality of the circumstances known to the law enforcement officers participating in the drug investigation and the undercover purchase of narcotics supplied sufficient probable cause that contraband would be found inside the vehicle the defendant was driving, suppression of the drug evidence seized during the search of this vehicle was properly denied. Stroud v. State, 286 Ga. App. 124, 648 S.E.2d 476 (2007).

Use of informant in narcotics cases. — Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied as: (1) the police personally heard an individual say to the informant on the telephone that the individual had a kilogram of cocaine in the individual's hotel room that the individual intended to sell to the informant if the informant would come to that certain hotel at a certain time, where that individual would be waiting on the third-floor balcony to throw the informant a key; (2) when the informant arrived at the designated hotel at the designated time, the police observed the defendant standing on the third-floor balcony and further observed the defendant respond favorably to the informant's request not to throw down the key and instead to come to the back door to let the informant in; (3) the police did not arrest the defendant until the defendant appeared at that back door; and (4) the information received from an untested informant might have been helpful and corroborating, but the personal observations and perceptions of the police alone more than sufficed to supply the probable cause needed for a warrantless arrest. Fleming v. State, 282 Ga. App. 373, 638 S.E.2d 769 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress drug evidence because the evidence established the existence of probable cause for the issuance of the search warrant for the defendant's residence; at the suppression hearing, the investigating officer testified as to the same information provided in the affidavit and that the officer had known the informant for 11 or 12 years, the officer had used the informant in at least 20 to 30 prior investigations, and the officer had provided the magistrate with information about the informant's prior work with other officers beyond what was set forth in the affidavit. Williams v. State, 303 Ga. App. 222, 692 S.E.2d 820 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence police officers found at a residence because under the totality of the circumstances, the magistrate had a substantial basis for concluding that there was a fair probability contraband would be found at the residence; the affidavit for the search warrant revealed that an informant participated in a drug buy using law enforcement funds, and an officer transported the informant to the premises, where the informant made the purchase, and the informant provided the purchased contraband to the officer. Pass v. State, 309 Ga. App. 440, 710 S.E.2d 641 (2011).

Drugs found during pat-down search. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the cocaine found by an officer after a precautionary pat-down as the officer's actions in responding to a suspicious-person complaint and immediately encountering the defendant were reasonable and neither arbitrary nor harassing; hence, the seizure was authorized as incident to a lawful arrest. Simmons v. State, 281 Ga. App. 654, 637 S.E.2d 70 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0216, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 77 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress marijuana seized as a result of a pat-down search conducted by an investigating officer as: (1) the officer observed sufficient, articulable facts to believe that an aggravated assault suspect might be leaving town; and (2) upon smelling burnt marijuana, and the possibility that weapons might be present, a pat-down of those individuals present, including the defendant, was supported by the totality of the circumstances known to the officer at the time. Brown v. State, 283 Ga. App. 250, 641 S.E.2d 551 (2006).

Because an officer was authorized to: (1) detain the defendant for investigatory purposes based on a 9-1-1 call reporting a domestic disturbance; (2) pat the defendant down for weapons; (3) seize the cocaine from the defendant's pocket under the plain feel doctrine; (4) search the defendant's vehicle; and (5) seize the contraband found during that search, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress. Lester v. State, 287 Ga. App. 363, 651 S.E.2d 766 (2007).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of marijuana found on the defendant's person following a traffic stop based on the person's vehicle having a window tint violation as the arrest was lawful based on the officer having probable cause to place the defendant under arrest and subsequently search the defendant's person due to the defendant's admission to having smoked marijuana recently; the smell of marijuana coming from the defendant's person; the bulge in the defendant's pants; the defendant's nervous demeanor; and the defendant's attempt to prevent a lawful pat-down of the defendant's person in the area of the suspicious bulge. Williams v. State, 293 Ga. App. 842, 668 S.E.2d 825 (2008).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer found while conducting a search of the defendant's person because the seizure of the drugs was not lawful when the detention of the defendant was unreasonable; the officer articulated no particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was or was about to be involved in criminal activity, and the officer's stated reasons for detaining the defendant did not constitute an objective basis for suspecting the defendant of involvement in drug activity and justify an investigatory detention when there were no complaints that day of drug activity or of the defendant's involvement in such activity. Walker v. State, 299 Ga. App. 788, 683 S.E.2d 867 (2009).

Trial court erred in granting a defendant's motion to suppress crack cocaine police officers found in the defendant's pants' pocket during a pat-down search because the officers made a valid Terry stop, and the defendant was not free to leave; the undisputed testimony from the officers was that based on the officers' experience, outside window tinting was often performed on stolen cars, the defendant and the other men were working on a car in a vacant lot, the car had no tag, and the men were gathered around the car in a way that could be construed as trying to conceal a stolen automobile. State v. Miller, 300 Ga. App. 55, 684 S.E.2d 80 (2009).

Trial court did not err when the court denied the defendant's motion to suppress because the contact between the defendant and an officer was a first-tier consensual encounter, and the officer was authorized to seize marijuana from the defendant's pocket since the officer asked for consent to search the pocket, and the defendant gave consent; there was no evidence that the encounter involved coercion or detention, and upon feeling a soft, spongy item in the defendant's pocket, the officer was not automatically authorized to search the pocket, but the officer testified that the officer asked for consent to search the pocket and that the defendant gave the defendant's consent. Ware v. State, 309 Ga. App. 426, 710 S.E.2d 627 (2011).

Traffic stop leading to narcotics. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the methamphetamine seized as a result of a traffic stop of the vehicle the defendant was a passenger in as sufficient evidence supported the trial court's finding that an officer's stop of the vehicle was justified by the officer's reasonable articulable suspicion of a crime, specifically, a violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-8-20. Richardson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 89, 640 S.E.2d 676 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress cocaine seized after a valid traffic stop had essentially concluded as a state trooper's objective observations, when combined with the extensive experience the trooper possessed in drug interdiction and knowledge of drug smuggling patterns, supplied sufficient facts to conclude that the defendant might have been engaged in criminal activity. Giles v. State, 284 Ga. App. 1, 642 S.E.2d 921 (2007).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the marijuana seized as the search of the defendant's truck was conducted after a valid traffic stop after the defendant gave the officer consent to conduct the search, and nothing supported the defendant's claim that this consent was coerced because the consent was obtained during a custodial interrogation and without the benefit of Miranda warnings as the officer's questioning did not unduly prolong the traffic stop and did not result in an unauthorized seizure or an equivalent custodial detention for which Miranda warnings were required. Trujillo v. State, 286 Ga. App. 438, 649 S.E.2d 573 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendants' motions to suppress drug evidence because the defendants failed to establish that the actions of the arresting officer unreasonably expanded the scope or duration of the traffic stop; because the officer's suspicions were piqued by observations of a truck's condition, the strong scent of perfume emanating from the cab, the demeanor of one of the defendants, and the other defendant's responses to the officer's brief questioning, the officer was then prompted and authorized to request a K-9 unit and to run criminal histories on both defendants, and there was no evidence to suggest that the officer delayed in making either query. Young v. State, 310 Ga. App. 270, 712 S.E.2d 652 (2011).

State failed to meet the state's burden, under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b), of proving that the search of the defendant's vehicle, following a stop for a traffic violation, and the seizure of the marijuana that was found in the vehicle was lawful because there was no evidence that the investigative detention of the defendant lasted no longer than was necessary to effectuate the purpose of the traffic stop and there was no evidence that the scope of the defendant's detention was carefully tailored to its underlying justification. Moreover, no evidence was adduced that the prolonged detention was justified by a reasonable, articulable suspicion of other criminal activity. Nunnally v. State, 310 Ga. App. 183, 713 S.E.2d 408 (2011).

2. Drug Evidence (Cont'd)

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress evidence resulting from a police officer's search and seizure because, although the defendant was subjected to a tier-two Terry-type investigative detention, the defendant was not in custody, and the defendant was detained for a reasonable time to investigate in conjunction with the valid stop, and the officer's question regarding whether the defendant was in possession of contraband occurred within a few seconds of the stop, such that no reasonable person could believe that they were under arrest and that they were not free to leave after the officer had been afforded a reasonable time to finish conducting a traffic investigation. State v. Hammond, 313 Ga. App. 882, 723 S.E.2d 89 (2012).

Probable cause to suspect drug possession. — Upon a de novo review, the appeals court found that because law enforcement had probable cause to suspect that the defendant possessed cocaine, a warrantless arrest of the defendant was lawful; thus, an order granting suppression was reversed. State v. Bryant, 284 Ga. App. 867, 644 S.E.2d 871 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1242, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 540 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress cocaine a detective found in the defendant's pocket because the defendant's presence on the premises being searched and the defendant's apparent attempt to flee from the premises provided probable cause for the detective to believe that the defendant possessed or was, at least, a party to the crime of possessing, the unlawful contraband specified in the warrant, which authorized the detective to detain the defendant and to conduct a warrantless search of the defendant's person. Sheats v. State, 305 Ga. App. 475, 699 S.E.2d 798 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress drugs seized from the defendant's person because a narcotics investigator had probable cause to restrain the defendant and order the defendant to spit out the baggy; the investigator observed the defendant make a series of furtive attempts at concealing the clear plastic baggy, which the investigator believed, based on experience, contained drug contraband. Lewis v. State, 317 Ga. App. 391, 730 S.E.2d 757 (2012).

Police gained entry without authorization and drugs not admitted. — Prosecution failed to prove that a search and seizure of drug evidence was lawful as the police went to the defendant's home with the specific intention of obtaining consent to search, the police went at night, in force, and entered the home when the defendant was not there, the police gained entry without proper authorization, and unlawfully detained and handcuffed the people inside the home; consequently, the defendant's subsequent consent upon returning home was not purged of the taint of the illegal entry into the home and the illegal seizure of the defendant's person. Pledger v. State, 257 Ga. App. 794, 572 S.E.2d 348 (2002).

Search of hotel room. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized in a hotel suite because the affidavit supporting the search warrant for a hotel suite recited probable cause to believe that drugs would be found on the premises under the defendant's possession, custody, and control, namely the two-room suite that the hotel designated and rented to the defendant. Glass v. State, 304 Ga. App. 414, 696 S.E.2d 140 (2010).

Actions of defendant's attorney. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendants' motion to suppress evidence as the record showed that the defendants' attorneys stated that there was no objection to admission of the cocaine that was seized from the defendants following a stop of the defendants' vehicle; affirmatively stating that there was no objection in effect concedes the point that the motion to suppress evidence was properly denied. Fernandez v. State, 275 Ga. App. 151, 619 S.E.2d 821 (2005).

Suppression motion properly denied following search of vehicle and compartments pursuant to arrest and impoundment. — Trial court did not err in denying a motion to suppress evidence because the defendant lacked standing to challenge the legality of the search of a bag belonging to a passenger in the defendant's care and, in any event, after the defendant and the passenger were arrested, the police were authorized to search the interior of the car, including closed containers inside the passenger compartment, both as a search incident to the arrests and pursuant to impounding the uninsured car. Driscoll v. State, 295 Ga. App. 5, 670 S.E.2d 824 (2008).

Suppression motion denied to trucker after drug dog alerted. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress because the investigating officer had reasonable articulable suspicion of other illegal activity based upon the drivers' suspicious behavior related to the curtain on the sleeping compartment, the co-driver's criminal drug history, the inconsistency in the logbooks as compared to what the officer would normally expect to see, the lack of a seal on the load, and the alert obtained by the drug dog detection canine. Sherod v. State, 334 Ga. App. 314, 779 S.E.2d 94 (2015), cert. denied, No. S16C0368, 2016 Ga. LEXIS 118 (Ga. 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 51, 196 L. Ed. 2d 55 (U.S. 2016).

Inventory search as part of impoundment proper. — Pretermitting whether the search was an appropriate search incident to arrest, the court upheld the propriety of inventory searches subject to a reasonable impoundment in order to protect an owner's property and to protect officers from claims over lost or stolen property. Accordingly, the inventory search was proper. Dover v. State, 307 Ga. App. 126, 704 S.E.2d 235 (2010).

Suppression motion properly granted. — Trial court properly granted a defendant's motion to suppress drug evidence seized from the defendant's apartment as the court found that the defendant nor the defendant's friend had consented to the search and exigent circumstances did not exist since the police had confirmed that the defendant was not one of the robbers the police were pursuing and no sound or movement was coming from within the apartment to have given the police a reasonable basis to search the apartment. State v. Culpepper, 295 Ga. App. 525, 672 S.E.2d 494 (2009).

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress the contents of a bag a police officer seized because search of the bag was not justified since police officers' initial approach to a vehicle and questioning of the defendant fell within the realm of a first-tier encounter, requiring no reasonable suspicion of criminal activity, and during that encounter, the defendant was free to refuse to answer or ignore the officers' requests and go on the defendant's way; once one of the officers prevented the defendant from exercising that right, the encounter escalated to a second-tier encounter, but the defendant had done nothing to give rise to a particularized and objective basis for suspecting the defendant was involved in criminal activity, and the defendant's subsequent refusal to answer the officer's questions as to what was in the bag, and the defendant's placing the bag back in the cupholder, also gave the officer no basis for an investigatory detention. State v. Jones, 303 Ga. App. 337, 693 S.E.2d 583 (2010).

Suppression motion granted after backpack search. — After the hospital security officers allegedly noticed an odor of marijuana emanating from the defendant's backpack, confiscated the backpack, searched the backpack, found marijuana in the backpack, and called the police, and the responding officer searched the bag without obtaining a warrant, the defendant's motion to suppress was properly granted because the officer did not testify that the officer personally smelled marijuana; the state did not present any testimony from the hospital security officers who allegedly smelled the marijuana, confiscated the bag, searched the bag, and found marijuana in the bag; and the state did not argue that the defendant consented or that there were exigent circumstances justifying a warrantless search. State v. Cook, 337 Ga. App. 205, 786 S.E.2d 876 (2016).

3. Probationers

Search upon execution of probation arrest warrant. — Contraband seized in a search of the defendant's home upon execution of a probation arrest warrant should have been suppressed because the warrant was invalid, having been issued on the basis of an earlier illegal search of the defendant. Boatright v. State, 225 Ga. App. 181, 483 S.E.2d 659 (1997).

Warrantless search of parolee. — Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized after an automobile search given that law enforcement had reliable information that the defendant was transporting drugs as: (1) the defendant was on parole, and that as a condition thereof, had specifically consented to a warrantless search; (2) the information received from an informant about the defendant's actions was reliable; and (3) no evidence was presented that the officers acted in bad faith or to harass the defendant. State v. Cauley, 282 Ga. App. 191, 638 S.E.2d 351 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0420, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 148 (Ga. 2007).

Evidence from probationer's apartment. — Trial court erred in denying a probationer's motion to suppress the evidence seized from the probationer's apartment as, even though the entry into the apartment for the purpose of effecting an arrest of the probationer was permissible, most of the evidence was seized without a warrant after the probationer was not found in the apartment and had to be excluded under the Fourth Amendment as the search conducted was only permissible insofar as the search involved the observation of items of obvious evidentiary value in plain view during the time and activities required to attempt the probationer's arrest. The probationer was never placed on notice that the probationer was going to be subjected to warrantless searches, and the state failed to demonstrate any exigent circumstances justifying the warrantless search. Jones v. State, 282 Ga. 784, 653 S.E.2d 456 (2007).

Consent arising from probationary status. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress as a consent to search was properly imposed as a condition of the defendant's probation and did not amount to a waiver of rights; thus, the defendant's tacit acceptance of this special condition provided the police with the authority to search. Peardon v. State, 287 Ga. App. 158, 651 S.E.2d 121 (2007).

Waiver of rights as special condition of probation. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the results of a search of the defendant's person and home because the defendant validly waived the defendant's Fourth Amendment rights under the United States Constitution and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII when the defendant entered into a negotiated guilty plea to possession of a firearm and possession of marijuana; the transcripts of the defendant's guilty plea revealed that the defendant was informed by the assistant district attorney that a Fourth Amendment waiver was part of the negotiation, neither the defendant nor the attorney objected to the Fourth Amendment waiver during the plea, the trial court explained the Fourth Amendment waiver to the defendant on the record, and the defendant signed a waiver as a special condition of probation. Morrow v. State, 311 Ga. App. 323, 715 S.E.2d 744 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C1872, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 993 (Ga. 2011).

No hearing required as to suppression motion at probation revocation hearing. — Separate hearing on a defendant's motion to suppress in a nonjury probation revocation hearing is not necessary. Davenport v. State, 172 Ga. App. 606, 324 S.E.2d 201 (1984).

4. Statements and Testimony

Motion not applicable to anticipated testimony. — Testimony is not within the scope of the motion to suppress as authorized by Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13. Reid v. State, 129 Ga. App. 660, 200 S.E.2d 456 (1973), criticized, Childers v. State, 130 Ga. App. 555, 203 S.E.2d 874 (1974).

Motion to suppress directed at anticipated testimony rather than "property" does not lie. Cauley v. State, 130 Ga. App. 278, 203 S.E.2d 239 (1973), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 877, 95 S. Ct. 140, 42 L. Ed. 2d 117 (1974).

Witness and victim testimony not subject to motion. — Testimony of eyewitnesses and victims of alleged crimes is outside the scope of a motion to suppress as contemplated under Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13. Baker v. State, 230 Ga. 741, 199 S.E.2d 252 (1973).

Sheriff's testimony not subject to motion. — Testimony of a sheriff concerning the property seized in an illegal search could be objected to at trial but could not be made the object of a motion to suppress. Jarrell v. State, 234 Ga. 410, 216 S.E.2d 258 (1975), cert. denied, 428 U.S. 910, 96 S. Ct. 3223, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1218 (1976).

Defendant initiated discussions not suppressed. — Defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea based on the defendant's claim that defense counsel failed to appeal the denial of a suppression motion was properly rejected because it was not ineffective assistance to fail to make a meritless appeal and the motion to suppress was properly denied because the defendant voluntarily reinitiated discussions with law enforcement officers after the interview was terminated due to the defendant's request for counsel. Rios v. State, 281 Ga. 181, 637 S.E.2d 20 (2006).

Hospitalization and pain did not render statement involuntary. — Trial court did not err in admitting the defendant's second statement to police made during a hospitalization and while the defendant was taking pain medication as neither circumstance rendered the statement involuntary. Sanders v. State, 281 Ga. 36, 635 S.E.2d 772 (2006).

Motion denied if statements to police were voluntarily made. — Defendant testified that the defendant changed out of wet clothes after arriving at the police station, was not threatened, was advised of the defendant's rights, and was not intoxicated, and the interviewing officer testified that the defendant did not appear to be intoxicated, understood the questions asked, appeared clearheaded, and waived the defendant's rights, thus, the trial court's finding that the defendant freely and voluntarily made statements after waiving defendant's rights, and that the statements were made free of threats or other improper conduct on the part of law enforcement officers, was amply supported by evidence and was not clearly erroneous. Moody v. State, 277 Ga. 676, 594 S.E.2d 350 (2004).

Police officer's testimony believed. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress as the trial court was authorized to believe the police officer's testimony that the officer was qualified to detect the odor of unburned marijuana based on the officer's training and experience and, thus, that the officer recognized the smell of the ten pounds of unburned marijuana the defendant had in the trunk of the defendant's car despite defense counsel's attempt to impeach the officer with the officer's testimony from a prior case that there was no difference between the smell of burnt and unburned marijuana; accordingly, the motion to suppress was properly denied and the defendant's conviction for a violation of the Georgia Controlled Substances Act, O.C.G.A. § 16-13-20 et seq., was affirmed. King v. State, 267 Ga. App. 546, 600 S.E.2d 647 (2004).

Statements made by possibly intoxicated defendant. — Despite the defendant's possible intoxication, a statement given to police was knowingly and voluntarily made, and a waiver of the rights accorded under Miranda was intelligent; thus, the trial court did not err in admitting the defendant's videotaped custodial statements into evidence. Bryant v. State, 286 Ga. App. 493, 649 S.E.2d 597 (2007).

Suppression of data on electronic devices seized during arrest. — Georgia Supreme Court held that the state may appeal a grant of the defendant's motion to suppress data on electronic devices properly seized during an arrest under O.C.G.A. § 5-7-1(a)(4) because even under a strict construction of § 5-7-1(a)(4), the state has a direct right of appeal when the trial court grants a pre-trial motion to exclude evidence on the ground that the evidence was obtained illegally. State v. Rosenbaum, 305 Ga. 442, 826 S.E.2d 18 (2019).

Voluntary confession held admissible. — Based on the totality of the circumstances and the undisputed evidence, because the defendant's confession to a police detective was voluntary and admissible under former O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-8-824), not coerced or received as a result of promises made, and not subject to exclusion due to improper methods used by the police, the trial court did not err in admitting the confession; further, exclusion of the confession was not required based on a violation of the defendant's right to counsel. Swain v. State, 285 Ga. App. 550, 647 S.E.2d 88 (2007).

Trial court did not err in allowing the defendant's statements to the police into evidence because the evidence supported the findings that the statements were freely and voluntarily made, under noncustodial circumstances; a detective testified that the defendant voluntarily came to the police station for an interview, that the defendant was not in custody during the interview and was free to leave at any time, that the defendant was not threatened or promised anything, and that the defendant was allowed to leave the station after the interview. Beaudoin v. State, 311 Ga. App. 91, 714 S.E.2d 624 (2011).

Defendant did not demonstrate any harm as a result of the trial court's denial of the motion to suppress statements the defendant made to the police at a hospital because the defendant's on-the-scene confessions, as well as remarks the defendant made to a police officer en route to the hospital, were spontaneous and unsolicited statements not made in response to any form of custodial interrogation; therefore, the confessions were not subject to the strictures of Miranda and were admissible without the warnings having been given. Dailey v. State, 313 Ga. App. 809, 723 S.E.2d 43 (2012), cert. denied, No. S12C0969, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 551 (Ga. 2012).

Custodial statement of Spanish speaking defendant freely and voluntarily made. — Because a taped recording of the defendant's custodial statement showed that the defendant was fully informed of the defendant's rights in both English and Spanish, the defendant understood those rights, and neither threats nor promises were made in exchange for the custodial statement, the trial court did not err in finding that the statement was admissible as freely and voluntarily given. Pineda v. State, 287 Ga. App. 200, 651 S.E.2d 148 (2007).

Statements made by defendant to polygraph examiner properly admitted. — With regard to a defendant's conviction on three counts of cruelty to children in the first degree based on injuries to the child of defendant's romantic friend, the trial court did not err by admitting the incriminating statements that the defendant used too much force in putting the child into a swing, which the defendant made to the polygraph examiner during the pre-polygraph examination interview as, the examiner and the investigator testified that, prior to making any statements, the defendant was read the defendant's Miranda warnings, had voluntarily signed a waiver of rights form, and had voluntarily signed a form stipulating that the results of the polygraph examination would be admissible evidence and both the waiver of rights form and the stipulation were produced for the trial court's review during a suppression hearing and were introduced into evidence at trial after the defendant's motion to suppress was denied. Legan v. State, 289 Ga. App. 244, 656 S.E.2d 879 (2008).

Effect of fact that evidence taken from non-English speaker. — Trial court is authorized to suppress evidence taken from a non-English speaker when there is conflicting evidence relating to the non-English speaker's consent. State v. Izquierdo, 160 Ga. App. 33, 285 S.E.2d 769 (1981).

Inculpatory statements by illiterate defendant. — Despite an illiterate defendant's claim that the trial court erred by admitting inculpatory statements to investigators, the defendant's statements were properly admitted as the defendant: (1) had no difficulty communicating with investigators; (2) never indicated any confusion or misunderstanding; (3) never invoked a right to remain silent; and (4) was not coerced into talking with investigators. Furthermore, the defendant's illiteracy in and of itself did not demand a finding of a less-than-knowledgeable waiver in the face of evidence to the contrary. White v.

Seizure of written confession. — Written confession of the defendant is not property illegally seized, and thus is not subject to a motion to suppress. Reid v. State, 129 Ga. App. 660, 200 S.E.2d 456 (1973), criticized, Childers v. State, 130 Ga. App. 555, 203 S.E.2d 874 (1974).

Confession was not made in confidence to chaplain only. — Trial court did not err when the court denied defendant's motion to suppress the confession defendant made to the police chaplain because the trial court obviously believed the chaplain's adamant denial that the chaplain had repeated defendant's confession to the police. The testimony revealed that defendant confessed to the police officer in the chaplain's presence. Blocker v. State, 265 Ga. App. 846, 595 S.E.2d 654 (2004).

Statements made while blood sample taken. — Fact that a defendant was also subject to a search warrant seeking samples of blood and hair did not amount to an unusual susceptibility to a particular form of persuasion and did not mean the defendant was in custody. Keith v. State, 279 Ga. App. 819, 632 S.E.2d 669 (2006).

Statement induced by written promise not to press additional charges held involuntary. — Defendant was granted a new trial for convictions for felony murder and other crimes after it was determined that the defendant's statement to the detectives as to the location of the gun used in the murder and the defendant's provision of the gun to two coindictees was involuntary and inadmissible under former O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-8-824) as the statement was induced by a written promise not to press any additional weapons charges against the defendant. Foster v. State, 283 Ga. 484, 660 S.E.2d 521 (2008).

Defendant's statement not suppressed. — Defendant was not in custody when incriminatory statements were made to police. An officer found the defendant in an apartment and merely sought to ascertain whether the defendant or any of the apartment's occupants knew about the charged incident, and testimony indicated that neither the defendant nor the occupants were handcuffed or otherwise restrained; thus, the defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied. Navarro v. State, 279 Ga. App. 311, 630 S.E.2d 893 (2006).

Because the record failed to contain any indication that the defendant: (1) informed the officers to end an interview; (2) wished to speak with counsel; or (3) wished to leave the station, and after the statements were made the defendant was driven home by an officer, the appeals court affirmed the trial court's finding that the defendant was not in custody for purposes of Miranda; therefore, admission of these non-custodial statements was proper. Vaughn v. State, 282 Ga. 99, 646 S.E.2d 212 (2007).

Spontaneous outburst admissible. — Because the defendant's spontaneous outburst was voluntarily made and not the product of police interrogation, the evidence was not subject to a hearsay exception, Miranda warnings were not required, and the statement was admissible. Tennyson v. State, 282 Ga. 92, 646 S.E.2d 219 (2007).

Given the totality of the circumstances, and the defendant's age, education, and knowledge of both the substance of the charge and nature of the rights to an attorney and the right to remain silent because the defendant voluntarily gave a statement to a police detective about an uncharged armed robbery, absent any threats, coercion, or promises in exchange for doing so, the statement was admissible. Swain v. State, 285 Ga. App. 550, 647 S.E.2d 88 (2007).

Because a police officer who heard the defendant's statement that the defendant shot someone because the person took some marijuana from the defendant testified that the defendant uttered the statement spontaneously, and the police officer did not question or threaten the defendant, nor did anything to coerce the defendant to make the statement, the trial court's ruling that the defendant made the statement freely and voluntarily was not clearly erroneous. Johnson v. State, 287 Ga. App. 352, 651 S.E.2d 450 (2007).

Suppression not required when defendant not under arrest. — Based on an officer's unequivocal testimony that the defendant was not under arrest when a challenged statement was made, but the officer was merely investigating the victim's stolen vehicle claim, and hence Miranda warnings were not required, suppression of the statement was not required. Marshall v. State, 286 Ga. App. 86, 648 S.E.2d 674 (2007).

Because testimony from the interrogating officer, and the forms by which the defendant waived Miranda and the right to be represented during questioning by an attorney, supported the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion to suppress, the appeals court found no error in the trial court's decision. Roberts v. State, 282 Ga. 548, 651 S.E.2d 689 (2007).

Because the evidence sufficiently showed that the defendant made a rational and intelligent choice to waive the rights outlined under Miranda and speak with police detectives on two separate and distinct occasions, the trial court did not err in denying a motion to suppress those statements. Starks v. State, 283 Ga. 164, 656 S.E.2d 518 (2008).

With regard to a defendant's convictions for aggravated sexual assault and child molestation, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the custodial statement made because the defendant was not in custody when the defendant agreed to speak to the detectives in the defendant's office when the defendant admitted to touching the victim and that the statement was subsequently repeated at the station after the defendant was read the defendant's Miranda rights. The statement was made voluntarily and was not the sort of in-custody interrogation forbidden by Miranda. Ellison v. State, 296 Ga. App. 752, 675 S.E.2d 613 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress statements the defendant made during an on-scene police investigation because Miranda warnings were unnecessary when the defendant's initial statements on-the-scene were voluntarily made under noncustodial circumstances; the defendant voluntarily admitted to stabbing the victim in the defendant's apartment after an officer advised the defendant that the officer was investigating a report of a possible dead body, and even if the defendant was a suspect while in the presence of police, there was no evidence that the defendant was under any form of restraint or that the defendant had been placed under arrest. Additionally, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's additional motion to suppress the defendant's post-Miranda written statement to a detective as not knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently made because upon being advised that a dead body had been recovered at the defendant's apartment, the detective advised the defendant of the defendant's Miranda rights, and the defendant then waived and gave the defendant's written confession immediately thereafter; nothing of record supported the defendant's claim that the defendant was subjected to an interview lasting "three to four hours," and the defendant did not otherwise contend that the defendant's confession was coerced or induced upon hope of benefit. Rowe v. State, 302 Ga. App. 239, 690 S.E.2d 884 (2010).

Trial court did not err in failing to suppress a statement the defendant made to the police because the statement was made during the course of a subsequent interview that the defendant initiated and was admissible; the defendant contacted the case detective and requested a meeting, the detective met with the defendant and again advised the defendant of the defendant's right to counsel, and the defendant waived the defendant's right to counsel and made an incriminating statement. Haynes v. State, 287 Ga. 202, 695 S.E.2d 219 (2010).

Trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion to suppress an in-custody statement the defendant made after waiving the defendant's rights under Miranda because the preponderance of the evidence supported the trial court's findings that the officers read the defendant the defendant's rights in the defendant's home in the presence of the defendant's parents and explained the rights to the defendant and that the defendant voluntarily agreed to talk to the officers, and the fact that the defendant was initially found incompetent to stand trial did not demand the conclusion that the defendant lacked the mental capacity to knowingly and voluntarily waive the defendant's rights; the true analysis is whether the totality of the circumstances show that the statement was free and voluntary. Fife v. State, 306 Ga. App. 425, 702 S.E.2d 454 (2010).

Officer's inquiry on address not suppressed. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress statements the defendant made in response to questioning at the time of the defendant's arrest regarding whether the defendant lived at an apartment and where the defendant's bedroom was located therein because a police officer testified at the suppression hearing that the officer asked the defendant where the defendant lived in order to determine whether the defendant could give consent to search; inquiring as to a suspect's address is a question commonly associated with arrest and custody and provides no basis for suppression of the response. Silverio v. State, 306 Ga. App. 438, 702 S.E.2d 717 (2010).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress statements the defendant made to police officers because the trial court did not err when the court determined, under the objective circumstances attending the police officers' interrogation of the defendant, that a reasonable person in the defendant's position would not have understood that the defendant was in custody at the time the defendant gave the defendant's statements to the officers. Crawford v. State, 288 Ga. 425, 704 S.E.2d 772 (2011).

Because the defendant failed to compile a record that demonstrated all that transpired in the trial court with regard to the defendant's motion to suppress statements the defendant made to police officers, the supreme court presumed that the evidence before the trial court supported the court's decision to deny the motion; the appellate record contained no transcription of the defendant's interview as recorded on DVDs, and the defendant failed to make application for the transmission of the DVDs to the supreme court pursuant to Ga. Sup. Ct. R. 71(1). Crawford v. State, 288 Ga. 425, 704 S.E.2d 772 (2011).

Trial court did not err in refusing to suppress the defendant's custodial statement because the two officers who interviewed the defendant testified that the defendant was read, and that the defendant understood the defendant's Miranda rights, that the defendant agreed to talk with the police, that the defendant was not coerced or threatened in any way, that the defendant was not offered any hope of benefit in order to convince the defendant to talk to the police, and that the questioning of the defendant ceased as soon as the defendant asked for a lawyer. Carter v. State, 289 Ga. 51, 709 S.E.2d 223 (2011).

Right to remain silent equivocal thus no suppression. — Trial court did not err in finding the defendant's statements to a police officer admissible because the defendant's invocation of the defendant's right to remain silent, if any, was equivocal since that statement conflicted with the defendant's immediately preceding verbal indication that the defendant was willing to speak with the detective; thus, the officer had no obligation to stop questioning the defendant, and the officer's attempt to clarify whether the defendant wished to speak with the officer was not improper. Law v. State, 308 Ga. App. 76, 706 S.E.2d 604 (2011).

Superior court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress statements the defendant made to law enforcement officers because the defendant's initial statement to a detective was non-custodial, unsolicited and was supported by the record and, therefore, the defendant's capacity to understand the substance of the defendant's rights under Miranda in regard to the first statement was irrelevant; the defendant's initial patrol car statement that the victim's death was an accident was made while the defendant was not in custody, and the defendant's statement was not given in response to any questioning by the detective. Barrett v. State, 289 Ga. 197, 709 S.E.2d 816 (2011).

Conversation voluntarily started with officer thus no suppression. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress a statement the defendant made in response to an officer's interrogation regarding the ownership of a vehicle because the trial court's determination that the defendant's statements were not solicited and, therefore, were not protected under Miranda were not clearly erroneous since the trial court's findings of fact were supported by the testimony of the officer; the defendant voluntarily started a conversation with the officer by admitting that the defendant was not who the defendant previously stated the defendant was, and the defendant stated that the defendant did not know whose vehicle it was but that the defendant gave somebody drugs so that the defendant could use the car. Bone v. State, 311 Ga. App. 390, 715 S.E.2d 789 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to exclude the defendant's out-of-court statement to a detective because the record supported the ruling that the detective reasonably suspected that the defendant was or had been engaged in criminal activity, and the defendant was not under arrest; the detective not only witnessed the defendant engage in a drug transaction, but on the morning of the stop, the defendant obtained a written statement from another party to the transaction confirming the defendant's involvement. The detective also recognized the defendant and the defendant's vehicle from the scene. Arnett v. State, 311 Ga. App. 811, 717 S.E.2d 312 (2011).

Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence statements the defendant made in an interview with a television correspondent because the defendant was not in custody for Miranda purposes when the statements were made; the correspondent was not an agent of the state, and a reasonable person in the defendant's position would have believed that he or she was free to terminate the interview and leave. Anguiano v. State, 313 Ga. App. 449, 721 S.E.2d 652 (2011).

Immigrant's statement not suppressed. — Trial court did not err in refusing to suppress the in-custody statements the defendant, who was a Lithuanian immigrant, made to the police because during the interrogation, officers answered the defendant's questions, and the defendant told the officers that the defendant understood what was being said; at no time did the defendant invoke the right to silence or right to counsel. Milinavicius v. State, 290 Ga. 374, 721 S.E.2d 843 (2012).

Even assuming that the trial court erred by admitting the statements the defendant made to the police at a hospital as not tainted by a Miranda violation, the error was harmless in light of the fact that the police statements were cumulative of other unchallenged confessions by the defendant; the defendant repeatedly identified oneself at the scene as the sole perpetrator. Dailey v. State, 313 Ga. App. 809, 723 S.E.2d 43 (2012), cert. denied, No. S12C0969, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 551 (Ga. 2012).

Court of appeals did not err in reversing an order granting the defendant's motion to suppress the defendant's confession under former O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-8-824) because police officers did not induce the defendant's confession with a "hope of benefit" within the meaning of former § 24-3-50; the defendant could not have reasonably understood the officers' statements to mean that the defendant would never be charged or arrested for the defendant's crimes, and even if the defendant's confession was induced by the defendant's hope that the officers would, as promised, let the defendant go home after the interview, it was not per se inadmissible under former § 24-3-50. Brown v. State, 290 Ga. 865, 725 S.E.2d 320 (2012).

Trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion to suppress the defendant's statement because the information the codefendant provided to the police was corroborated by the facts and circumstances that police officers had independently gathered from the scene of the victim's shooting; as the result of the codefendant's confession, the officers had reasonably trustworthy information to conclude that the defendant was involved in the victim's murder. Alatise v. State, 291 Ga. 428, 728 S.E.2d 592 (2012).

Defendant's statement should not have been suppressed. — Trial court erroneously suppressed the statements given by the defendant to law enforcement because given the totality of the circumstances apparent from the record, the defendant voluntarily waived the defendant's Miranda rights. The defendant: (1) spoke clearly; (2) did not appear to be under the influence of alcohol or drugs; (3) appeared to understand what was read; (4) was not threatened or coerced in any way; (5) appeared very calm; (6) was not promised anything by police in exchange for the defendant's cooperation; (7) did not appear to have any mental issues; (8) had only been detained for approximately 20 minutes before the defendant was Mirandized; and (9) asked the investigator to come back to speak with the defendant after a brief interruption in the interview. The mere fact that there was no written Miranda waiver or electronic recording of the interview did not render the waiver involuntary. State v. Hardy, 281 Ga. App. 365, 636 S.E.2d 36 (2006).

Trial court properly suppressed those statements made by the defendant in violation of Miranda, and after the defendant invoked the right to counsel, as mere act of allowing the defendant to meet with an attorney did not permit law enforcement to re-initiate any conversation with the defendant at a later time without defense counsel present. State v. Sammons, 283 Ga. 364, 659 S.E.2d 598 (2008).

Trial court erred in suppressing statements the defendant made during an interview with detectives after the defendant invoked the defendant's right to counsel because the defendant's admissions were not elicited by interrogation, much less coerced, and were admissible at trial since the defendant repeatedly initiated conversation and interrupted the detectives to discuss various topics, including the defendant's concern for the victim and the defendant's account of what had happened at the crime scene, and at no point in the interview did the detectives expressly question the defendant about the crimes, even after the defendant invited such discussion by beginning to talk about the crimes; although the detectives remained in the room with the defendant for a few minutes after the defendant invoked the defendant's right to counsel, the record of the interview unequivocally showed that the detectives did not engage in any coercive conduct by doing so, and once the detectives took the defendant into custody, the detectives were not obliged to stop listening to what the defendant chose to say or to immediately leave the room so that the detectives could not hear the defendant. State v. Brown, 287 Ga. 473, 697 S.E.2d 192 (2010).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress a confession because the investigators' statements that the defendant would go home after the interview did not offer the defendant a "hope of benefit" that would otherwise render the defendant's confession inadmissible, and even if the complained-of statements did constitute an improper "hope of benefit," the investigators did not actually induce the defendant's confession; the investigators' statement that the defendant would not be arrested on the spot was collateral and not the type of "hope of benefit" contemplated by former O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-8-824). State v. Brown, 308 Ga. App. 480, 708 S.E.2d 63 (2011), aff'd, 290 Ga. 865, 725 S.E.2d 320 (2012).

Defendant's statement should have been suppressed. — Trial court erred by denying the defendant's motion to suppress the defendant's statement to police that the defendant was in the victim's subdivision on the night of the murder because the defendant unambiguously requested the presence of the defendant's lawyer, and any questioning should have stopped immediately; any ambiguity was created solely by the investigator's subsequent questioning. Manley v. State, 287 Ga. 338, 698 S.E.2d 301 (2010).

Defendant's admission that the defendant sold vacuum cleaners that had been stolen from a daycare center should have been suppressed because after producing drug paraphernalia, admitting to owning the paraphernalia, and admitting to recently buying and using drugs, a reasonable person would certainly perceive himself or herself to be in police custody, and the officer's questioning was clearly aimed at establishing the defendant's guilt; there was a reasonable possibility that the improperly admitted evidence contributed to the jury's verdict because there was testimony that the daycare center was located in a neighborhood subject to high crime and drug activity, and the witnesses gave inconsistent descriptions about the color of the vacuum cleaners and the suspect's clothing. Thompson v. State, 313 Ga. App. 844, 723 S.E.2d 85 (2012).

Defendant's statement suppressed when defendant did not understand rights. — Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress a statement the defendant gave to the police following the defendant's arrest because the trial court could have accepted the defendant's testimony from the hearing on the motion to suppress that the defendant did not understand the defendant's rights or any waiver of those rights when at least some evidence existed to support the finding that the defendant's signature on a waiver of rights form did not indicate that the defendant understood the defendant's rights and wished to waive those rights; the trial court could have concluded that the defendant signed the form at a detective's direction because the detective made no effort to ascertain whether the defendant understood the defendant's rights and did not testify that the detective believed the defendant understood the rights, when the defendant asked whether the form represented the charges against the defendant the detective responded that the document merely stated that the defendant was a suspect and that the defendant needed to sign the document so the defendant could clear things up, and at no time did the conversation cease, allowing the defendant a clear opportunity to read the form. State v. Floyd, 306 Ga. App. 402, 702 S.E.2d 467 (2010).

Uncontradicted witness statement can still be rejected. — Trial court's order granting the defendant's motion to suppress was affirmed as the trial court did not believe the uncontradicted testimony that an officer had a good faith, reasonable, articulable suspicion that the defendant had made an illegal U-turn; the trial court was not required to believe a witness, even if the testimony was uncontradicted, and could accept or reject any portion of the testimony. State v. Hester, 268 Ga. App. 501, 602 S.E.2d 271 (2004).

Objection that statements stem from illegal arrest must come during trial. — When a motion to suppress avers that the statements were secured by police officers as a result of an illegal arrest and detention, not as a result of an unlawful search and seizure, such statements should have been made the basis of objections at the trial and not the basis of a pretrial motion to suppress under Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13. Pass v. State, 227 Ga. 730, 182 S.E.2d 779 (1971).

Illegally seized property and testimony tested by different procedures. — Admissibility of property seized in an unlawful search and the admissibility of testimony are tested by different rules and procedures. Reid v. State, 129 Ga. App. 660, 200 S.E.2d 456 (1973), criticized, Childers v. State, 130 Ga. App. 555, 203 S.E.2d 874 (1974).

Non-custodial spontaneous statement held admissible. — Trial court did not err in admitting a spontaneous remark the defendant made to a police officer in serving an arrest warrant for the crime charged as the remark was admissible as a non-custodial statement which was not obtained as the result of police interrogation. Bettis v. State, 285 Ga. App. 643, 647 S.E.2d 340 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1535, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 862 (Ga. 2007).

Testimony challenged at trial. — When testimony is tendered relative to the property seized, the testimony's admissibility is not tested by a motion under Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30), but by a proper objection made when the evidence is tendered at the trial. Reid v. State, 129 Ga. App. 660, 200 S.E.2d 456 (1973), criticized, Childers v. State, 130 Ga. App. 555, 203 S.E.2d 874 (1974).

When testimony is tendered relative to the property seized, the testimony's admissibility is not tested by a motion under Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30), but by a proper objection made when the testimony is tendered at the trial. If an order has been granted, the order affords a basis or ground for making the objection to the testimony. If the motion was denied, an objection may nevertheless be lodged on the ground that the testimony relates to property which was illegally seized during an unlawful search, and if the objection is overruled, the ruling may become a proper subject of an enumeration of error on appeal. Childers v. State, 130 Ga. App. 555, 203 S.E.2d 874 (1974).

Conflicts in testimony. — Trial judge, as the finder of fact on the motion to suppress, is authorized to resolve conflicts in testimony. Brooks v. State, 129 Ga. App. 393, 199 S.E.2d 578 (1973).

Suppression of statements impacted by timing of Miranda warnings. — Defendants' motions to suppress were granted and denied in part as it was error to exclude a statement the defendant made while not in custody; however, delayed Miranda warnings cannot be considered to be effective under Missouri v. Seibert, 542 U.S. 600 (2004), and the trial court did not err in suppressing the defendants' oral and written statements made after the detectives administered Miranda warnings. State v. Pye, 282 Ga. 796, 653 S.E.2d 450 (2007), overruled on other grounds by State v. Abbott, 303 Ga. 297, 812 S.E.2d 255 (2018).

Because a defendant's motion to suppress specifically requested the suppression of all statements made by the defendant's codefendants as products of defendant's illegally-obtained confession, the state could not now complain that the state did not receive reasonable notice that the defendant intended to seek suppression of their live testimony at trial. Stidham v. State, 299 Ga. App. 858, 683 S.E.2d 906 (2009).

5. Vehicles

A. In General

Radar speed detection devices. — Admissibility of evidence gained by use of radar speed detection device properly may be raised by a motion in limine although the motion may be styled as, or in the form of, a motion to suppress, and the trial court has discretion to hear the motion pretrial or to reserve the ruling on the admissibility of such evidence until it is offered as evidence during trial. Wiggins v. State, 249 Ga. 302, 290 S.E.2d 427 (1982). See also Carver v. State, 199 Ga. App. 842, 406 S.E.2d 236 (1991) (holding that the fifth element for admissibility stated in Wiggins no longer applies to state enforcement officers).

Roadblocks. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress in a case in which the defendant was subsequently convicted of three offenses based on evidence that was obtained at a roadblock that a police officer working in the field authorized; the trial court should have granted the motion because supervisory personnel, and not an officer in the field, were required to approve roadblocks given the fact that a roadblock involved a warrantless stop of a vehicle. Thomas v. State, 277 Ga. App. 88, 625 S.E.2d 455 (2005).

Trial court properly denied a motion to suppress evidence seized from a roadblock as the roadblock's primary purpose was to check for drivers' licenses, seat belts, and vehicle registrations, and not general law enforcement. Cater v. State, 280 Ga. App. 891, 635 S.E.2d 246 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's suppression motion as the arresting officer was authorized to conclude that in turning off a roadway to evade a roadblock, the defendant committed a possibly illegal backing maneuver, upon which the officer was permitted to investigate; moreover, the officer's honest belief that a traffic violation was committed, even if ultimately proven incorrect, could nevertheless demonstrate the existence of at least an articulable suspicion and reasonable grounds for a traffic stop. Terry v. State, 283 Ga. App. 158, 640 S.E.2d 724 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress on grounds that a roadblock was unlawful as the state presented sufficient evidence that the checkpoint was set up for a legitimate purpose and the decision to implement the roadblock was made by law enforcement supervisory personnel. Wright v. State, 283 Ga. App. 393, 641 S.E.2d 605 (2007).

A. In General (Cont'd)

Because a form document, entitled the "Henry County Police Department Roadblock & Safety Checkpoint Record," introduced at a motion to suppress hearing by the state was properly admitted as a business record under former O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-8-803), and the testimonial evidence regarding the primary purpose of the roadblock passed constitutional muster in that the roadblock was legitimately conducted as part of a statewide "zero tolerance" campaign, the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result was properly denied. Yingst v. State, 287 Ga. App. 43, 650 S.E.2d 746 (2007).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress the evidence obtained from a police roadblock with regard to the defendant's conviction for driving under the influence as the trial court properly determined that the roadblock was conducted for a legitimate primary purpose, namely to check for valid licenses, insurance, impaired drivers, and safety concerns, which were consistent with the purposes set forth in the initiation form. Further, a variance in the location of the roadblock to an intersection of a street instead of on the actual street was insignificant and did not invalidate the roadblock. Coursey v. State, 295 Ga. App. 476, 672 S.E.2d 456 (2009).

Denial of the defendant's motion to suppress was supported by the evidence as a roadblock was proper. All vehicles were stopped at the roadblock and were delayed only one to two minutes unless a violation was noted. The evidence was sufficient to show that the defendant was stopped 17 minutes after the roadblock began. McGlon v. State, 296 Ga. App. 77, 673 S.E.2d 513 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0996, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 359 (Ga. 2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained during a roadblock because the evidence was sufficient to show that the decision to implement the roadblock was made by a supervisory officer, which prevented the field officers from exercising unfettered discretion in stopping the drivers since the lieutenant and corporal who implemented the roadblock testified that they were supervisors in the traffic unit of the county sheriff's office; the trial court was authorized to find that the purposes of the roadblock, which were to serve as a traffic safety checkpoint and to check driver's licenses and to identify drivers driving under the influence, were as stated by the lieutenant and corporal, and each of the identified purposes set forth in the order for the roadblock was a legitimate primary purpose. Rappley v. State, 306 Ga. App. 531, 702 S.E.2d 763 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained at a roadblock because given the evidence presented, the trial court was authorized to conclude that the sergeant issued the order for the roadblock properly and initiated, authorized, and supervised the roadblock and that the sergeant's decision to implement the roadblock was made at the programmatic level for a legitimate primary purpose; the evidence supported the trial court's findings of fact that the information on the roadblock approval form, which stated the reasons for the roadblock, did not conflict with any evidence presented as to when the roadblock was to be conducted or by whom the roadblock was authorized. Owens v. State, 308 Ga. App. 374, 707 S.E.2d 584 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C1036, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 498 (Ga. 2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized at a roadblock because the state met the state's burden of establishing the legitimate purpose of the roadblock by introducing a certified copy of a department of public safety roadblock approval form; the programmatic purposes set out in the roadblock form were supported by the other evidence at the suppression hearing, and the police officers' actions at the scene were in line with those purposes. Hite v. State, 315 Ga. App. 221, 726 S.E.2d 704 (2012), cert. denied, No. S12C1286, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 1020 (Ga. 2012).

Police checkpoint for traffic. — While the defendant claimed the trial court should have granted the defendant's motion to suppress evidence on the ground that a police checkpoint was established for the illegal purpose of looking for evidence of burglaries or thefts, the unrefuted evidence established that the officers were authorized to stop the defendant when the officers witnessed the defendant commit traffic offenses by driving in the wrong lane at an excessive rate of speed; the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Yarbrough v. State, 264 Ga. App. 848, 592 S.E.2d 681 (2003).

Search incident to arrest. — Search of a vehicle was authorized as a search incident to a lawful arrest as the officers reasonably believed that the vehicle possibly contained evidence of the crime under investigation, in that the officers saw the defendant and another individual, for whom the officers had an arrest warrant, driving in a vehicle similar to one seen leaving a crime scene, and the officers saw clothing on the backseat matching the description of the clothing worn by the two gunmen at the time of the crime. Williams v. State, 316 Ga. App. 821, 730 S.E.2d 541 (2012).

Improper expansion of scope of traffic investigation justified suppression. — Police officers impermissibly expanded the traffic stop without reasonable, articulable suspicion, resulting in an illegal detention of both the driver of the vehicle and the passenger and the defendant's consent to search the vehicle was the product of this illegal detention; thus, the evidence obtained as a result of the illegal search was rightfully suppressed. Specifically, the police officer requested permission to search the car "before you guys take off" after returning the defendant's license and giving a warning, but while continuing to detain and question the defendants; thus, it was doubtful that any reasonable person in these circumstances would have felt free to disregard the police officer and go. State v. Conner, 288 Ga. App. 517, 654 S.E.2d 461 (2007).

Suppression of evidence after violation of § 40-5-33. — Violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-5-33 did not justify the defendant's continued detention by the police and the officer's decision to detain the defendant while the officer waited for another officer to bring a written warning book was unreasonable; thus, under the totality of the circumstances, the officer did not have specific, articulable facts that could constitute a particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was involved in any criminal activity thereby making the search unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment and requiring suppression of the evidence seized from the vehicle. Bennett v. State, 285 Ga. App. 796, 648 S.E.2d 126 (2007).

B. Driving Under the Influence

Consent to test. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the results of a state-administered breath test given after the defendant initially refused to take such a test as there was no evidence that the defendant was asked a second time whether the defendant would consent to the test or that the defendant rescinded the defendant's refusal and thereafter consented. Howell v. State, 266 Ga. App. 480, 597 S.E.2d 546 (2004).

Trial court was not required to suppress evidence of the defendant's breath test results, although the defendant refused to take a breath test when asked at the scene, the defendant rescinded that refusal by agreeing to take the test at the police station. Stapleton v. State, 279 Ga. App. 296, 630 S.E.2d 769 (2006).

Trial court erred in suppressing the defendant's refusal to submit to a state-administered chemical breath test as the implied consent notice given by a sheriff's deputy was substantially accurate and timely given, and irrespective of whether the refusal resulted from the defendant's confusion, it nevertheless remained a refusal. State v. Brookbank, 283 Ga. App. 814, 642 S.E.2d 885 (2007).

Because the defendant: (1) was not in custody for the purposes of Miranda when asked to perform field sobriety tests; (2) did not make any statement or take any overt act which would have caused a reasonable person to believe that the encounter was anything more than a temporary detention; and (3) voluntarily submitted to field sobriety tests, suppression of the results of the tests was properly denied.

McDevitt v. State, 286 Ga. App. 120, 648 S.E.2d 481 (2007), overruled on other grounds by State v. Turnquest, 305 Ga. 758, 827 S.E.2d 865 (2019).

Admission of drunkenness. — Despite the defendant's claim that an officer's detention was illegal and that any statement uttered while detained should have been suppressed, suppression of the statement was properly denied given that: (1) the officer encountered the defendant after responding to a 9-1-1 call reporting a crime at a specific location; and (2) the officer's personal observations, when coupled with the defendant's admission as to being drunk and driving a car onto the curb, as the 9-1-1 dispatcher stated, supplied the officer with probable cause to arrest the defendant. Moore v. State, 281 Ga. App. 141, 635 S.E.2d 408 (2006).

Implied consent warning. — Trial court did not have to find that the officer read the implied consent warning before arresting the defendant in order to grant the motion to suppress as the court's grant of the motion was adequately supported by the state's failure to meet the state's burden of proving that the implied consent warning was read after the arrest. The state failed to meet the burden because the trial court found the officer's testimony lacked credibility and there was no other evidence showing that the warning was given after the defendant's arrest. State v. Stelzenmuller, 285 Ga. App. 348, 646 S.E.2d 316 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the results of a blood test as the notice given to the defendant by a state trooper under the implied consent law, O.C.G.A. § 40-5-67.1(a), was sufficiently accurate to permit the defendant to make an informed decision about whether to consent to testing, and the evidence failed to show that the defendant requested an independent test. Collins v. State, 290 Ga. App. 418, 659 S.E.2d 818 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress and motion in limine to exclude the defendant's field sobriety test results because the implied consent warning was timely given; a HEAT Unit officer gave the defendant the warning immediately after the defendant's arrest. Waters v. State, 306 Ga. App. 114, 701 S.E.2d 550 (2010).

Probable cause to believe defendant less safe driver. — Denial of the defendant's motion to suppress was not error because the police officer who pulled the defendant over had probable cause to believe that the defendant was a less safe driver because defendant was all over the road, smelled of alcohol, and threw up all over and the officer could have arrested the defendant under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391, rather than wait for a DUI officer. Abrahamson v. State, 276 Ga. App. 584, 623 S.E.2d 764 (2005).

Sufficient evidence existed for the arresting officer to believe that the defendant was under the influence of alcohol, specifically: the defendant's erratic driving; detecting the odor of alcohol on the defendant's breath; observing that the defendant was very emotional, had been crying, and had a flushed face and watery eyes; and that the defendant admitted to consuming alcohol. The trial court properly denied suppression of the evidence. Slayton v. State, 281 Ga. App. 650, 637 S.E.2d 67 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized by a state trooper who was lawfully investigating a serious injury accident the defendant was involved in as evidence the trooper found, including some steel wool and prescription drugs, when coupled with other information the trooper possessed concerning the nature and cause of the crash, provided sufficient probable cause for the trooper to believe that the defendant was driving under the influence; further, the appeals court agreed that the evidence would have been inevitably discovered. Cunningham v. State, 284 Ga. App. 739, 644 S.E.2d 878 (2007).

Because a sheriff's deputy lawfully stopped the defendant for twice crossing the center line in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-48(1) and given: (1) the deputy sheriff's specialized DUI training; and (2) the defendant's admission of ingesting alcohol, failure to maintain lane, bloodshot eyes, performances on several field sobriety tests, and strong odor of alcohol, the evidence seized in connection with the stop was admissible; moreover, the defendant's claim that the state failed to establish a violation of § 40-6-48(1) and the defendant's eventual acquittal of failure to maintain a lane were not determinative of whether the traffic stop was lawful. Steinberg v. State, 286 Ga. App. 417, 650 S.E.2d 268 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1725, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 113 (Ga. 2008).

Defendant's claim that the trial court erred in denying a motion to suppress because an officer lacked probable cause to arrest the defendant failed. Given the defendant's conduct while driving, coupled with the defendant's physical condition at the scene, including stumbling, slurred speech, confusion, and difficulty balancing, the officer had probable cause to arrest the defendant for driving under the influence. Castaneda v. State, 292 Ga. App. 390, 664 S.E.2d 803 (2008).

No probable cause for DUI arrest. — Although the defendant had glassy and watery eyes, smelled of alcohol, and admitted to drinking a glass of wine, other testimony supported an inference that the defendant was not an impaired driver; accordingly, the defendant's motion to suppress was properly granted based on a finding that there was no probable cause to arrest the defendant for violating O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391(a)(1). State v. Goode, 298 Ga. App. 749, 681 S.E.2d 199 (2009), disapproved, Hughes v. State, 296 Ga. 744, 770 S.E.2d 636 (2015).

Officer's observation of defendant's intoxicated state. — Trial court properly refused to suppress evidence based on the defendant's initial encounter as a deputy initiated a first-level police-citizen encounter, not a seizure, when the deputy approached the defendant's stopped car and asked the defendant to get out; it was only after the deputy smelled alcohol on the defendant and noticed the defendant's bloodshot eyes that the officer acted upon a reasonable suspicion that the defendant might be intoxicated. Johnson v. State, 268 Ga. App. 426, 602 S.E.2d 177 (2004).

Statements made by defendant during initial encounter. — Because a reasonable person in the defendant's position would not have believed any freedom of action had been more than temporarily curtailed by an officer's investigation for a possible DUI, and the defendant was not in custody or arrested until after the field sobriety tests were performed, at which point the officer had probable cause for the arrest and read the implied consent rights, the trial court did not err in denying suppression of the defendant's statement made to the officer or the field sobriety evaluations. Amin v. State, 283 Ga. App. 830, 643 S.E.2d 4 (2007).

Test of defendant's choice. — Denial of the defendant's motion to suppress for failure to give the defendant a reasonable opportunity to have an additional breath test performed by a person of the defendant's own choosing pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392(a)(3) was not error; complying with the defendant's request would have taken a trooper away from an accident with injuries that required the trooper's presence, the location requested by the defendant was over 40 miles away and outside the trooper's territory, and there was no evidence that defendant had made arrangements for a test by defendant's personal physician. Smith v. State, 277 Ga. App. 81, 625 S.E.2d 497 (2005).

Because the trial court found that the arresting officer made a reasonable effort to accommodate the defendant's request for an independent blood test pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392(a)(3), the court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the test. Whittle v. State, 282 Ga. App. 64, 637 S.E.2d 800 (2006).

Because the arresting officer failed to make a reasonable effort to accommodate the defendant's request to obtain an independent blood test in accordance with O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392(a)(3), but instead rebuffed every suggestion the defendant made in order to secure the independent test, and, despite security risks, accommodations could have been made, the trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion in limine to suppress the results of the state-administered breath test. State v. Howard, 283 Ga. App. 234, 641 S.E.2d 225 (2007).

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress evidence of a state-administered breath test because the state failed to reasonably accommodate the defendant's request for an independent blood test; when an officer learned that the defendant did not have sufficient cash for a blood test at one of the recommended hospitals the defendant should have been offered the opportunity to use a telephone to make other arrangements, and the officer's unilateral determination that the defendant would be unable to pay for the blood test, without confirming the hospitals' policies regarding payment and without offering to accommodate the defendant in obtaining a method of payment, was insufficient. State v. Davis, 309 Ga. App. 558, 711 S.E.2d 76 (2011).

Breath test results properly admitted. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion in limine to suppress the results of a state-administered breath test as an officer's implied consent warning was substantively accurate so as to allow the defendant to make an informed decision about whether to consent to the test, and solely referred to the defendant's privilege to drive within the State of Georgia with a Georgia driver's license, and not the defendant's Pennsylvania license; further, the officer's initial statement was nothing more than an attention-grabbing preface, and as such did not constitute a substantive change that altered the meaning of the implied consent notice thereafter recited to the defendant. McHugh v. State, 285 Ga. App. 131, 645 S.E.2d 619 (2007).

Because the evidence sufficiently showed that the defendant asked for a blood test in response to the officer's request to submit to the state-administered breath test, clearly attempting to designate the state-administered test, not request an independent test, and the defendant understood that the type of test that would be done was solely of the state's choosing, the trial court properly denied a motion to suppress the breath test results obtained. Brooks v. State, 285 Ga. App. 624, 647 S.E.2d 328 (2007).

Defendant's motion in limine claiming that an intoxilyzer's seizure of the defendant's breath samples was unlawful because the intoxilyzer's electronic components and operating parts were not properly attached and in good working order as required by O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392 was subject to the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30, relating to motions to suppress. State v. Carter, 292 Ga. App. 322, 665 S.E.2d 14 (2008).

Fact that a defendant did not have sufficient breath to complete the second of two breath tests did not require suppression of the first test, which indicated a blood alcohol level of .146. Thrasher v. State, 292 Ga. App. 566, 666 S.E.2d 28 (2008).

Trial court did not err in admitting the results of the defendant's portable alco-sensor test because even though the defendant was in custody for purposes of Miranda, the portable test was administered in response to a demand from the defendant, not the officer; thus, the situation was more akin to a spontaneous outburst from an unwarned suspect or a test conducted pursuant to the Georgia Implied Consent Statute, O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392. Hale v. State, 310 Ga. App. 363, 714 S.E.2d 19 (2011), overruled on other grounds by State v. Turnquest, 305 Ga. 758, 827 S.E.2d 865 (2019).

Defendant's speeding, bloodshot eyes, and the odor of alcohol coming from the car gave the officer reasonable and articulable suspicion to detain the defendant for the purpose of administering the horizontal gaze nystagmus test, which the defendant failed, giving the officer probable cause to arrest the defendant and supporting the denial of the defendant's motion to suppress. Harkleroad v. State, 317 Ga. App. 509, 732 S.E.2d 278 (2012).

Court erred in suppressing results of state-administered breath tests. — Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motions in limine to suppress the results of the state's breath tests as the police officer who arrested defendant properly read to defendant the implied consent rights; the trial court erred because the court found that the defendant was not read those rights at the scene of the arrest, but the defendant was arrested in a local park for criminal trespass, not DUI, and the defendant was read the implied consent rights after the defendant was taken to a detention center and arrested there for DUI. State v. Jones, 261 Ga. App. 357, 583 S.E.2d 139 (2003).

Because the defendant was informed of the Miranda rights in a timely manner and the procedure employed to gain the defendant's consent was fair and reasonable, the trial court erred in suppressing the results of the state-administered breath test. State v. Allen, 272 Ga. App. 169, 612 S.E.2d 11 (2005).

Intoxilyzer results improperly excluded when inspection certificate available. — Intoxilyzer test results were improperly excluded under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392 since the state produced a properly prepared and executed certificate of inspection certifying that the electronic components and operating parts of the device were properly attached and in good working order. Any failure of the device to have pass an operational requirement by registering a 0.074 reading in the device's analysis of the control solution during the difference check went to the weight, not the admissibility, of the test results. State v. Carter, 292 Ga. App. 322, 665 S.E.2d 14 (2008).

Court should have excluded breath test. — Trial court erred in not suppressing the results of the state-administered breath test that the defendant gave after the defendant was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol; the defendant exercised the defendant's right to also request that an additional test be performed by asking that the defendant be given an independent urine test, and since that right was not honored, the state-administered breath test was not admissible to support the defendant's conviction. Johnson v. State, 261 Ga. App. 633, 583 S.E.2d 489 (2003).

Sequential breath tests admissible despite intervening failed test. — Because an intervening failed breath test, due to the defendant's inability to provide an adequate sample, did not render otherwise valid breath alcohol test results inadmissible, and given that the fact of an intervening failed breath test went to the weight, not the admissibility, of the test results, suppression of the results was properly denied; moreover, the appeals court declined to hold that the word "sequential" also meant without any gaps in the procedure due to the test taker's inability to give an adequate breath sample. Davis v. State, 286 Ga. App. 443, 649 S.E.2d 568 (2007).

Printout of sequential breath tests. — Trial court erred, in effect, granting part of the defendant's motion to suppress by ruling that a printout related to the defendant's sequential breath tests had to be redacted to reflect the results of the first, lower test only, as O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392(a)(1)(B) contemplated the admission of both sequential tests results even though the lower of the two results was determinative for certain purposes. State v. Kruzel, 261 Ga. App. 90, 581 S.E.2d 711 (2003).

Blood test results improperly admitted. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the results of a blood test as the defendant was erroneously advised by a police officer that the implied consent statute was applicable due to the seriousness of the injuries sustained in the accident; although the officer's statement was correct at the time of the accident, the Georgia Supreme Court has since then ruled that O.C.G.A. § 40-5-55(a) was unconstitutional, and since the defendant had not been arrested for a violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391 at the time the consent to the blood test was given. Buchanan v. State, 264 Ga. App. 148, 589 S.E.2d 876 (2003).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress results from a blood test performed prior to any arrest as: (1) the evidence showed that the defendant was involved in a car wreck resulting in serious injury before blood was drawn; and (2) a sheriff's deputy had probable cause to suspect that the defendant had been driving under the influence of alcohol; moreover, contrary to the defendant's assertion, the fact that a loss of consciousness was temporary did not cause the blood test to fall outside the ambit of O.C.G.A. § 40-5-55(c). State v. Umbach, 284 Ga. App. 240, 643 S.E.2d 758 (2007).

Suppression of blood test not required. — In a prosecution for DUI, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the blood test evidence as the trial court properly allowed the discovery of notes, memoranda, graphs, or computer printouts pertaining to the blood sample taken, as well as all chain of custody documentation, because such items were the only items deemed relevant to the prosecution; suppression of the blood test results was not required as the defendant waived error on appeal as to the absence of one of the two lab testers. Cottrell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 89, 651 S.E.2d 444 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1894, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 816 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the results of a blood-alcohol-content test that was obtained via the seizure of the defendant's blood samples and pursuant to a search warrant because the warrant was narrowly drafted to seek only the blood samples and medical records from the hospital where the defendant was treated on the night of the accident; even if the warrant could be construed as authorizing a broader seizure of all of the defendant's medical records instead of only those relevant to the defendant's treatment related to the accident, the defendant failed to show that any such broader seizure occurred and, thus, failed to show any harm. Jones v. State, 313 Ga. App. 590, 722 S.E.2d 202 (2012).

Chemical test results. — Order denying suppression of chemical test results admitted against a defendant was proper under the implied consent statute, O.C.G.A. § 40-5-55. The test was requested based on sufficient probable cause and valid consent was given. A formal arrest of the defendant prior to reading the implied consent rights was not required. Hannah v. State, 280 Ga. App. 230, 633 S.E.2d 800 (2006).

Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress the results of a chemical test of blood based on the undue delay between the arrest, after a traffic stop, and the reading of the implied consent warnings as: (1) the state trooper was presented with numerous opportunities to issue the warnings to the defendant, but did not; and (2) the trial court rejected the trooper's rationale for not reading the defendant the implied consent warnings at any other earlier opportunity, implicitly determining that the trooper's testimony was not credible. State v. Austell, 285 Ga. App. 18, 645 S.E.2d 550 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress and motion in limine to exclude the defendant's field sobriety test results because the officers who stopped the defendant's vehicle were not required to advise the defendant of the defendant's Miranda rights prior to the field sobriety testing since although the defendant was not free to leave, the defendant was not handcuffed or placed in the patrol car during the investigation, and in addition to informing the defendant of the reason for the stop, the officers told the defendant that the officers had to wait for a HEAT Unit officer to determine whether the defendant was too impaired to safely operate the defendant's vehicle; based upon the circumstances, the trial court was authorized to find that a reasonable person would believe that the defendant's freedom of action was only temporarily curtailed pending further investigation during the traffic stop, and the delay of approximately twenty-five minutes between the initial stop and the HEAT Unit officer's arrival at the scene did not automatically convert the investigation into a custodial situation. Waters v. State, 306 Ga. App. 114, 701 S.E.2d 550 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence of the results of field sobriety tests on the ground that the tests were administered without the defendant having the benefit of a Miranda warning because the defendant was not in custody until after the field sobriety tests were complete; the defendant was allowed to walk around and was not put into handcuffs or a patrol car while the defendant and the first officer awaited the arrival of the second officer, and a reasonable person in the defendant's position could conclude that the person's freedom of action was only temporarily curtailed and that a final determination of the person's status was simply delayed. DiMauro v. State, 310 Ga. App. 526, 714 S.E.2d 105 (2011).

Chemical test results inadmissible. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the defendant's chemical test results that were obtained under the implied consent statute, O.C.G.A. § 40-5-55(a), as the defendant was not arrested after a fatal crash for any offense in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391 nor was there probable cause to arrest the defendant for any such violation. Costley v. State, 271 Ga. App. 692, 610 S.E.2d 647 (2005).

Error in admitting chemical test results harmless in light of other evidence. — While the appeals court agreed that the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the results of the chemical test of the defendant's blood, the error was harmless as other evidence presented by the state, specifically the defendant's admission to being intoxicated and the testimony of other witnesses describing the witnesses' observations, proved the defendant's intoxication. Harrelson v. State, 287 Ga. App. 664, 653 S.E.2d 98 (2007).

Intoxilyzer 5000 test results. — Trial court did not err in denying suppression of the results of the defendant's Intoxilyzer 5000 and other field sobriety tests administered upon a defendant's arrest for driving under the influence of alcohol in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391 as: (1) the arguments concerning the officer's ability to manipulate the Intoxilyzer 5000 test went to the weight, and not admissibility of the evidence; (2) the officer was sufficiently trained to administer the tests; (3) the state showed substantial compliance with the required procedures; and (4) no due process violation resulted from the evidence being admitted. Stewart v. State, 280 Ga. App. 366, 634 S.E.2d 141 (2006).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress a breath test slip from an intoxilyzer and all testimony about the intoxilyzer because no surprise occurred when the defendant's attorney had already been shown the breath test slip and cross-examined a police officer about the slip at the motion hearing, and the state agreed to provide the defendant a copy; although the better practice would have been to provide the defendant a copy of the slip before the trial date, the record demonstrated that the state provided a copy at the hearing on the pretrial motion. State v. Tan, 305 Ga. App. 55, 699 S.E.2d 74 (2010).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress a breath test slip from an intoxilyzer and all testimony about the intoxilyzer because the state was not required to produce the breath test slip to the defendant ten days before trial as a part of discovery since the breath test slip did not constitute a written scientific report within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 17-16-23; no test or analysis was performed because the sample was insufficient, and the breath test slip did not show any test results but reflected only a measurement of breath volume. State v. Tan, 305 Ga. App. 55, 699 S.E.2d 74 (2010).

Results of improperly obtained intoximeter test. — Results of improperly obtained intoximeter test are subject to motion to suppress or, alternatively, subject to objection at time evidence is offered as this is consistent with the mandate of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392 that the use of such tests in criminal trials shall be subject to the strictest protections, and is also within the parameters of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30. State v. Johnston, 160 Ga. App. 71, 286 S.E.2d 47 (1981), aff'd, 249 Ga. 413, 291 S.E.2d 543 (1982).

Burden of proof concerning intoximeter test's legality. — State has burden of proving that seizure of appellee's breath resulting in the intoximeter results is in accordance with mandated procedures. State v. Johnston, 160 Ga. App. 71, 286 S.E.2d 47 (1981), aff'd, 249 Ga. 413, 291 S.E.2d 543 (1982).

Although a breath machine was taken out of service after the defendant's test, the state submitted circumstantial evidence in accordance with O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392(f) that the machine was in good working order during the test; therefore, the trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress. State v. Rackoff, 264 Ga. App. 506, 591 S.E.2d 379 (2003).

5. Vehicles (Cont'd)
B. Driving Under the Influence (Cont'd)

Inappropriate ground for suppressing intoxilyzer results. — In a prosecution for driving under the influence of alcohol, the defendant's motion to suppress intoxilyzer results premised solely on the contention that the defendant was not guilty of the offense of striking a fixed object, which the officer was initially investigating, was not an appropriate ground for the motion. Goddard v. State, 244 Ga. App. 730, 536 S.E.2d 160 (2000).

Failure to raise constitutional issue as to intoximeter results. — Defendant was not entitled to a pretrial hearing pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 since the defendant's motion to suppress intoximeter results did not raise any grounds involving constitutional guarantees against unreasonable search and seizure. Stanley v. State, 195 Ga. App. 706, 394 S.E.2d 785 (1990).

Properly conducted tests admissible. — Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motion to suppress the results of the defendant's horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) field sobriety test and of the Intoxilyzer 5000 breath test as the administrating officer testified to the officer's experience and training as well as the testing and scoring method used regarding the HGN test, and the defendant's constitutional challenges to the admissibility of the Intoxilyzer 5000 breath test results had already been decided in prior case law precedent adversely to the defendant. Laseter v. State, 294 Ga. App. 12, 668 S.E.2d 495 (2008).

Use of HGN test results. — Trial court erred in suppressing the results of the defendant's breathalyzer test because the court failed to consider the horizontal gaze nystagmus test results when deciding whether the officer had probable cause to arrest the defendant. State v. Tousley, 271 Ga. App. 874, 611 S.E.2d 139 (2005).

HGN test results admissible. — Trial court erred in excluding the defendant's horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test results because there was error only with two of six clues and a score of four out of six constituted evidence of impairment, and the state laid a proper foundation by showing that the officer was sufficiently experienced in administering the test and that the officer properly administered and interpreted the test with regard to four of the clues found. State v. Tousley, 271 Ga. App. 874, 611 S.E.2d 139 (2005).

Suppression motion properly denied. — Trial court properly admitted an Intoxilyzer 5000's certificate of inspection as non-testimonial as well as the defendant's breath test results; even if error was presented, it was harmless since the defendant was acquitted of driving under the influence with an unlawful blood alcohol concentration. Moreover, the incident report was properly admitted under the rule of completeness as the trial court was authorized to find that it was necessary for the state to admit all relevant parts of the incident report in evidence to show that the omissions noted by the defendant were not so material as to have effected the accuracy of the report. Phillips v. State, 289 Ga. App. 281, 656 S.E.2d 905 (2008).

C. Searches

Automobile exception to warrant requirement. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress items that were found in the trunk of the defendant's car after the defendant was apprehended on suspicion of shoplifting despite the defendant's claim that the defendant did not consent to the search of the car as the trial court weighed the credibility of the testimony and the record supported the trial court's finding that the defendant freely and voluntarily consented to the search; moreover, even if the defendant did not consent to the search, the search was valid under the automobile exception to the warrant requirement, which allows a warrantless search of a vehicle when there is probable cause, because the police had probable cause to search the vehicle in light of information from a store manager who saw the defendant place store items in the defendant's trunk without paying for the items and in light of the defendant's subsequent conduct of shoplifting at another store down the road within 30 minutes of the original incident. Horne v. State, 260 Ga. App. 640, 580 S.E.2d 644 (2003).

Trial court committed no error in denying the defendant's motion to suppress physical evidence officers seized from a pickup truck because the search was authorized under the automobile exception to the warrant requirement when under the totality of the circumstances, the officers had probable cause to believe that the truck contained the illegal crystal methamphetamine that was to form the basis of the drug deal; a narcotics investigator's conversations and interactions with the defendant, combined with the observations of the undercover agents who maintained continuous surveillance of the pickup truck and the movements of the defendant and a codefendant, would have led a reasonable person to believe that the drug contraband was in the truck. Martinez v. State, 303 Ga. App. 166, 692 S.E.2d 766 (2010).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress cocaine an officer found in the defendant's car because the defendant's consent, a search warrant, or exigent circumstances were not required in order to render the search constitutional since the search of the car was authorized under the automobile exception, which applied even if the car was not stopped along a highway but was stationary in a place not regularly used for residential purposes; the officer had probable cause to believe that the car contained crack cocaine, and the officer's observation of what the officer suspected, based upon the officer's law enforcement experience, to be crack cocaine would have led a reasonably discrete and prudent person to believe that drug contraband was in the car. State v. Sarden, 305 Ga. App. 587, 699 S.E.2d 880 (2010).

Intensive search of cars. — After a valid stop for following too closely, the deputies' actions throughout the detention were reasonable and motivated by a genuine concern for the protection of others on the interstate that arose from the totality of the rapidly escalating situation confronting the deputies. Montoya v. State, 232 Ga. App. 24, 499 S.E.2d 699 (1998).

Open car door provided plain view. — Because the defendant was already stopped at the side of a road and a police chief, lawfully wanting to question the defendant about the incorrect vehicle tag number that the defendant had given earlier, walked passed an open car door and saw a gun in plain sight, there was no stop and the chief had a right to retrieve the gun; consequently, the trial court did not err by refusing to suppress the evidence of the gun. Eldridge v. State, 270 Ga. App. 84, 606 S.E.2d 95 (2004).

Investigatory stop. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress as the police officer had a sufficient, articulable suspicion necessary to make an investigatory stop of the defendant's vehicle since the police observed during a surveillance that the occupants of the car, including the defendant, were engaged in a number of hand-to-hand transactions in an area known as an open-air drug market. Kates v. State, 271 Ga. App. 326, 609 S.E.2d 710 (2005).

Trial court erred by granting the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of a DUI violation obtained during the traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle by committing clear error in finding that the officer lacked a reasonable, articulable suspicion to stop the defendant's car as the officer had received a radio dispatch and had obtained information from a fast-food restaurant employee that suspicious persons in a vehicle were banging on the windows and cursing at the fast-food restaurant. Such actions involved engaging in disorderly conduct, which was an allegation of a crime that gave the officer grounds for conducting a brief traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle for investigatory purposes. State v. Melanson, 291 Ga. App. 853, 663 S.E.2d 280 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress due to alleged illegal traffic stops as even though police officers did not actually see a drug transaction involving the defendant, the circumstances justified an investigative stop of another vehicle driven by individuals observed in an exchange with the defendant in a parking lot. The officers were acting on information that tied a vehicle of the same make and model of the defendant's vehicle to illegal drug activity. Darden v. State, 293 Ga. App. 127, 666 S.E.2d 559 (2008).

C. Searches (Cont'd)

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress all evidence seized after the vehicle the defendant was driving was stopped because the defendant did not abandon the car or lose any reasonable expectation of privacy with regard to the car; when the defendant ran away after the traffic stop, the police officer had just observed the defendant park the car within a parking space of an apartment complex, where the person to whom the car's registered owner had entrusted the vehicle, and because the evidence from which the officer ascertained the defendant's identify derived from documents found during the unlawful search of the car, the trial court did not err in rejecting the state's argument that the items retrieved from the sidewalk were admissible in a trial against the defendant. State v. Nesbitt, 305 Ga. App. 28, 699 S.E.2d 368 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer recovered from the defendant's vehicle because the evidence supported the trial court's finding that the officer did not unreasonably prolong the stop of the vehicle, and once the drug dog alerted to the vehicle, the officer had probable cause to search the vehicle; a brief detention was authorized because it was reasonable for the officer to be suspicious in light of the defendant's furtive movement at the initial point of the stop, and that suspicion was heightened when the defendant attempted to explain that the defendant was looking for the defendant's wallet but then retrieved the defendant's license from a different part of the car, and when the defendant revoked the defendant's consent to search. Hardaway v. State, 309 Ga. App. 432, 710 S.E.2d 634 (2011).

Officer had probable cause to believe that, by lying about whether weapons were in a vehicle, the defendant had violated O.C.G.A. § 16-10-20 because at the time the defendant produced the rental agreement for the vehicle, the officer saw a firearm in the center console of the rental car, which the defendant apparently tried to conceal by quickly closing the console; when the officer asked the defendant whether any weapons were in the car the defendant denied it, and that was a reason for the officer to detain the defendant and to secure the firearm for the officer's own safety. Culpepper v. State, 312 Ga. App. 115, 717 S.E.2d 698 (2011).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress as the officer simply did not have reasonable suspicion that the defendant was engaged in or about to be engaged in a violation of the law after the officer found the defendant sleeping in a car in the parking lot of a funeral home, with the permission of the funeral home's owner, the officer did not see or smell any illegal substances; the officer did not question the defendant regarding the defendant's appearance or demeanor; the officer did not determine if the defendant had consumed alcohol; and the officer did not perform any field tests to determine if the defendant was under the influence of anything. Martin v. State, 316 Ga. App. 220, 729 S.E.2d 437 (2012).

Search based on lawful arrest. — Because an officer had probable cause to arrest a vehicle's occupants, including the defendant, after encountering a truck matching the description in a be-on-the-lookout bulletin, with the same number of occupants as advised therein, traveling on the road and in the direction identified, and from a location known by the officer to be the scene of an armed robbery, a search based on a lawful arrest was upheld; as a result, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of a search incident to the arrest. Boone v. State, 282 Ga. App. 67, 637 S.E.2d 795 (2006).

Search of vehicle incident to lawful arrest. — Officer's search of the defendant's vehicle incident to the defendant's arrest was lawful because the crime for which the defendant was under arrest was the possession of bagged marijuana in the defendant's pocket, and it was reasonable to believe that evidence relevant to the offense could be found in the vehicle from which the defendant exited.

Kirkland v. State, 316 Ga. App. 310, 728 S.E.2d 907 (2012).

Consensual automobile search when the defendant a passenger. — Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress; since the police had probable cause to search the driver's vehicle because a police officer had smelled the odor of burning marijuana coming from the car following a valid traffic stop and the driver had given consent to search the car, the police did not need to establish that probable cause existed to search individual containers in the car which might contain contraband since the probable cause that existed to search the car gave the police the right to also search each of the car's containers, and, thus, the trial court should not have suppressed evidence of contraband found in the book bag of the passenger, the defendant. State v. Selph, 261 Ga. App. 541, 583 S.E.2d 212 (2003).

Trial court erred in suppressing evidence found in a consensual search of a car in which the defendant was a passenger as the police officer did not impermissibly expand the scope or the duration of a valid traffic stop for an improperly displayed tag in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-2-41 by determining the status of the driver's license and whether the driver or defendant had outstanding warrants against them; even though 26 minutes into the stop the officer had not yet written the driver a ticket for the improperly displayed tag, the officer was not required to write the ticket and conclude the stop prior to diligently completing the background checks, which were delayed by the driver's admission that the driver might have had an outstanding warrant in another county that the officer had not discovered, and investigating the officer's reasonable suspicions regarding alcohol and open containers arising out of the officer's knowledge of another officer's encounter with the men earlier in the evening. State v. Williams, 264 Ga. App. 199, 590 S.E.2d 151 (2003).

Consensual automobile search. — Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motion to suppress evidence gathered in the search of the defendant's vehicle, which resulted in the seizure of a plastic bag containing additional baggies that tested positive for methamphetamine, in light of the state's evidence indicating that the defendant was driving under the influence; while the state introduced evidence indicating that the defendant had been driving under the influence, the state's evidence also showed that the arresting officer asked for and got the defendant's consent only after the defendant convinced the officer that the defendant was in full possession of the defendant's faculties. Davis v. State, 287 Ga. App. 478, 651 S.E.2d 750 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0176, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 179 (Ga. 2008).

Trial court correctly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained during a traffic stop because: (1) there was probable cause for the initial stop, based on an officer's observance of a traffic violation—a nonfunctional tag light; (2) the officer sought and obtained the defendant's voluntary permission to search the car; (3) there was no evidence that the stop was unreasonably prolonged by questioning; and (4) there was no evidence that the officer performed a pat-down search nor that the officer ever put the officer's hands in the defendant's pocket. Carnes v. State, 293 Ga. App. 549, 667 S.E.2d 620 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer found in the defendant's vehicle because the defendant's consent to search the vehicle was not the product of an illegal detention since after returning the defendant's driver's license and issuing a warning ticket, the officer told the defendant that the defendant was free to leave, but the defendant remained on the scene and engaged in casual conversation about the high level of drug activity in the area and the fact that the defendant worked nearby; the defendant's conduct showed that the defendant did not feel intimidated by the officer's presence, and under the circumstances, the initial traffic stop had de-escalated into a consensual encounter when the officer requested consent to search, which the defendant readily provided, and there was no evidence that the officer coerced the defendant's consent, tricked the defendant, or conveyed a message that the defendant's consent to search was required. Davis v. State, 306 Ga. App. 185, 702 S.E.2d 14 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress marijuana a police officer found during the search of the defendant's car because the evidence showed that the defendant was legally detained when the officer requested consent to search; the officer's testimony reflected that the officer sought consent to search immediately after issuing a verbal warning. Nix v. State, 312 Ga. App. 43, 717 S.E.2d 550 (2011).

Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied because the officer had reasonable articulable suspicion to conduct a traffic stop based on an alert from the license-plate recognition system showing that a wanted person could be driving the subject vehicle, the defendant's driving on a suspended license provided probable cause for an arrest, and the defendant consented to a search of the vehicle. Hill v. State, 321 Ga. App. 817, 743 S.E.2d 489 (2013).

Consent to search of vehicle. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's suppression motion as the defendant's car was searched with the defendant's consent while the officer was investigating the officer's reasonable suspicion that the defendant might be transporting drugs or stolen merchandise, even though the defendant had been given a traffic citation at the time that the consent was requested; the officer testified at the suppression hearing that the officer still needed to verify the VIN of the car and to verify that the car was an actual rental vehicle and not a stolen car when the consent was requested, and that the defendant was free to leave, but that because of the officer's concerns about the car, the car was not going anywhere. Vaughn v. State, 263 Ga. App. 536, 588 S.E.2d 330 (2003).

Because the defendant committed two traffic violations, an ensuing stop of the defendant's vehicle was not unjustifiably extended, the defendant voluntarily granted the officers consent to search, and a canine free-air search was undertaken immediately and as a result of the defendant's consent, the trial court properly denied suppression of the evidence seized as a result of the stop. Noble v. State, 283 Ga. App. 81, 640 S.E.2d 666 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's suppression motion as the evidence showed that once an officer obtained the defendant's consent to conduct a free air search around the vehicle the defendant was driving, a drug dog alerted for contraband within the vehicle, and once this occurred, the officer had probable cause to believe the defendant was transporting drugs. Garvin v. State, 283 Ga. App. 242, 641 S.E.2d 176 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying either the defendant's motion to suppress the methamphetamine seized during the consensual search of the defendant's vehicle or a motion to suppress the defendant's voluntary custodial statement as the testimony of the arresting and investigating officers established that the defendant did not display any problems with the understanding of the English language as did videotapes of the vehicle search and the in custody interview, which likewise showed the defendant having no problems with the English language. Therefore, the defendant's consent to the search of the vehicle nor the defendant's waiver of the defendant's Miranda rights were invalidated. Serrano v. State, 291 Ga. App. 500, 662 S.E.2d 280 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because an officer did not extend the duration of a traffic stop; the officer's testimony supported the conclusion that the officer asked for consent to search during the time that the officer was issuing citations, and the officer's questioning did not extend the duration of the defendant's detention. Arroyo v. State, 309 Ga. App. 494, 711 S.E.2d 60 (2011).

Officer's basis for stop. — Denial of the defendant's suppression motion was upheld on appeal as: (1) the defendant's vehicle was not stopped by the investigating officer; (2) the defendant voluntarily pulled into a driveway and stopped; (3) the officer did not prevent the defendant's departure; and (4) the officer had a reasonable and objective basis to conclude that the defendant committed the traffic offense of improper backing in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-249(a). Collier v. State, 282 Ga. App. 605, 639 S.E.2d 405 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0542, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 217 (Ga. 2007).

Search of vehicle justified by officer's observations. — Search of a van was lawful under the independent basis of the automobile exception to the warrant requirement since the objective facts known to the deputy after the deputy lawfully stopped the van, including needle marks on the occupants' arms, drug paraphernalia, and evidence of drug usage on the floor of the front seat, gave the deputy probable cause to believe that the van contained contraband. Autry v. State, 277 Ga. App. 305, 626 S.E.2d 528 (2006).

Officers' initial approach of the defendant's vehicle and request for consent to search were warranted, even without an articulable suspicion of criminal activity at the time of the officers' approach; moreover, even if a reasonable articulable suspicion of criminal activity had been required to briefly detain the defendant, the officers had such suspicion upon seeing: (1) individuals approach defendant's car in an area known for drug activity; (2) the individuals turn and walk away upon seeing the police; and (3) the defendant's passenger swallowing what appeared to be a crack rock as the police approached. Sego v. State, 279 Ga. App. 484, 631 S.E.2d 505 (2006).

Traffic stop by a sheriff's deputy was not unreasonably prolonged without a reasonable articulable suspicion of criminal activity based on evidence that: (1) a rental agreement in the defendant's possession had expired; (2) the officer was justified in calling for the drug dog because the officer did not know whether the car was stolen and because the defendant was nervous, backed toward the car when the defendant declined consent to search, and confessed to an open container violation; and (3) the trial court properly credited testimony from the dog's handler that the dog alerted when the dog showed interest in the passenger door, although the dog's response was not an active alert; thus, the trial court properly rejected the defendant's motion to suppress. Tanner v. State, 281 Ga. App. 101, 635 S.E.2d 388 (2006).

Defendant failed to establish that trial counsel's failure to timely file a motion to suppress evidence a police officer seized from the defendant's vehicle prejudiced the case because the warrantless search of the vehicle was lawful under the automobile exception to the warrant requirement; the objective facts known to the officer after the car was lawfully stopped gave the officer probable cause to believe that the car contained contraband, and those facts included the smell of marijuana in the car, flakes of what the officer suspected to be marijuana on the floorboards of the car, and the defendant's visible agitation during the traffic stop. Brown v. State, 311 Ga. App. 405, 715 S.E.2d 802 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer recovered from a rental car because the officer had reasonable grounds for detaining the defendant since the officer found the defendant and a friend in the parking lot of a closed business late at night, knew that several burglaries and thefts had occurred in the area recently, and observed that the defendant and the friend appeared to be nervous when the officer spoke with the defendant and the friend; in the course of securing a firearm the officer saw a firearm in the center console of the rental car, the officer saw in plain view a digital scale with white residue, affording the officer probable cause to effect a custodial arrest of the defendant. Culpepper v. State, 312 Ga. App. 115, 717 S.E.2d 698 (2011).

Trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence an officer seized from the defendant's vehicle because the suspected contraband was in plain view from outside the vehicle, and once the officer smelled the odor of marijuana on the recovered item, the officer had even stronger grounds to search the vehicle; because the officer saw the item before returning the defendant's license or issuing the ticket, the officer was not exceeding the scope of the initial traffic stop by seizing the object. Arnold v. State, 315 Ga. App. 798, 728 S.E.2d 317 (2012).

C. Searches (Cont'd)

Search of vehicle not justified by officer's observation. — Trial court erred by denying two defendants' motion to suppress the drug evidence found in the vehicle in which one defendant was driving, and the other defendant was a passenger, because the search of the vehicle was conducted after the defendants were illegally detained after a traffic stop. The officers were justified in stopping the vehicle upon observing the vehicle speeding but by only observing nervousness and an expandable baton, the officers exceeded the scope of a permissible search by continuing to detain the defendants without any cause to believe the defendants were dangerous; thus, the search was not justified. Bell v. State, 295 Ga. App. 607, 672 S.E.2d 675 (2009).

Standard for inventory searches. — Contents of an impounded vehicle are routinely inventoried to protect the property of the owner, protect the officers against claims for lost or stolen property, and protect the police from potential danger, and the validity of such conduct is not dependent upon the absolute necessity for the police to take charge of property to preserve the property, but depends instead on whether the police conduct was reasonable under the Fourth Amendment in light of the circumstances confronting the police at the time; thus, police were authorized to impound and later perform a routine inventory of the defendant's car when the defendant was arrested at the home of a friend in connection with a murder and the disappearance of the defendant's spouse, the defendant's car was at the home of the friend, and police knew that the defendant had been planning to leave the state with the friend and that the defendant's car was wanted in an investigation in another county because, under the circumstances, the police had reason to believe that the defendant's detention would be lengthy and the officers were not required to trust that the car would remain untouched if they left the car at the friend's home. Wright v. State, 276 Ga. 454, 579 S.E.2d 214 (2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1106, 124 S. Ct. 1059, 157 L. Ed. 2d 892 (2004).

Inventory search of vehicle. — Defendant's motion to suppress evidence of cocaine and crack pipes found during an inventory search of the car was properly denied as: (1) the police impound was not unlawful; (2) waiting a reasonable time, usually 20 minutes, prior to having the car towed, was not unreasonable as a matter of law; and (3) the officers were not required to call the defendant's relatives first. Carlisle v. State, 278 Ga. App. 528, 629 S.E.2d 512 (2006).

Because an officer was authorized to arrest the defendant for weaving, a decision to impound the vehicle the defendant was driving was not unreasonable and an inventory search of the vehicle was authorized; thus, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of the search. Lopez v. State, 286 Ga. App. 873, 650 S.E.2d 430 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the trial court's finding that the impoundment of the defendant's motorcycle was reasonably necessary under the circumstances was supported by the evidence because the defendant was arrested for attempting to elude police and for several traffic offenses, including driving with an expired license, the defendant was not going to be allowed to drive the motorcycle under any circumstances. Grizzle v. State, 310 Ga. App. 577, 713 S.E.2d 701 (2011).

Impoundment of defendant's car was reasonable under U.S. Const., amend. IV, and the resulting inventory search was proper as the defendant and the defendant's companion were arrested, no one remained to take custody of the car, and the car was on the shoulder of an exit ramp where the car would have impeded a large truck attempting to exit the highway. Scott v. State, 316 Ga. App. 341, 729 S.E.2d 481 (2012).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the inventory search of a van was unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment due to a lack of evidence of police policy; the record contained no evidence about the police department's policy or procedures on inventory searches, but rather, the officers simply testified that the officers' searches of a flatbed wrecker, the van, and the van's contents were inventory searches pursuant to the impoundment. Capellan v. State, 316 Ga. App. 467, 729 S.E.2d 602 (2012).

Search after suspect abandoned vehicle. — Probable cause existed to search a vehicle, which was left behind when a suspect fled a drug transaction upon seeing a police officer approach; it was of no consequence that the car was impounded before the warrant was issued for the car's search. Scott v. State, 277 Ga. App. 126, 625 S.E.2d 526 (2006).

Because a motion to suppress the evidence seized from the vehicle that the defendant and the defendant's cohorts were riding in would have been futile as the evidence showed the defendants abandoned the vehicle on foot after being involved in a high-speed chase with police, the defendant's trial counsel could not have been ineffective in failing to file the motion. Skaggs-Ferrell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 872, 652 S.E.2d 891 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence an officer seized from the defendant's vehicle because the evidence undisputedly showed that the defendant had abandoned the vehicle, and since the defendant abandoned the defendant's car, the defendant had no standing to assert the claim that the search was invalid as a warrantless search incident to an arrest; the defendant abandoned the defendant's vehicle when the defendant fled to escape police, leaving the vehicle parked in a stranger's driveway with the door open, and before searching the open vehicle, an officer even confirmed with the landowner that the defendant's vehicle was not parked there with the owner's permission. Johnson v. State, 305 Ga. App. 635, 700 S.E.2d 612 (2010).

Search proper as inventory and as incident to driver's arrest. — Because an inventory search of a codefendant's vehicle after impoundment was reasonable, and because the search was performed incident to the codefendant's lawful arrest, there was no basis to suppress the evidence seized from the search. Williams v. State, 308 Ga. App. 464, 708 S.E.2d 32 (2011).

Evidence found during search of vehicle after accident admissible. — When the defendants were taken to a hospital after a one-party automobile accident, leaving the vehicle posing a threat to public safety, and the officer conducted an investigative inventory before a private wrecker towed the vehicle, evidence of cocaine discovered by the officer during the normal investigative search will not permit a motion to suppress under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30. State v. Izquierdo, 160 Ga. App. 33, 285 S.E.2d 769 (1981).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress evidence including cocaine and a pistol found in a duffel bag on the floorboard of the defendant's vehicle after the car was involved in an accident killing a deer since the defendant was unable to provide proof that the vehicle was insured, and impoundment was therefore valid; thus, the items seized were both admissible through the inventory search of the lawfully impounded vehicle, and via a search incident to the defendant's arrest for operating the vehicle without insurance and driving on a suspended license. State v. Howard, 264 Ga. App. 691, 592 S.E.2d 88 (2003).

Car being towed. — There was no error in denying a motion to suppress as an officer's direction removing the defendant from a car following a traffic stop, which led to the discovery of cocaine, was reasonable given the circumstances. Though the officer had no basis for suspecting unlawful activity, the defendant could not remain in the car because the car was going to be towed. Carter v. State, 297 Ga. App. 608, 677 S.E.2d 792 (2009).

D. Traffic Stops

Stop based on erroneous facts. — It was not error to admit evidence and statements showing intoxication, even though the stop of the defendant's automobile was due to an error on the part of the officer or the dispatcher who "ran the tag" and erroneously determined that the automobile was stolen. Cunningham v. State, 231 Ga. App. 420, 498 S.E.2d 590 (1998).

Reasonable belief justifying stop. — Trial court's denial of the defendant's motion to suppress evidence that was found in a car the defendant was driving was not clearly erroneous when the initial stop of the defendant by officers was made with a reasonable articulable suspicion of criminal activity when the defendant, the defendant's companion, and the car met descriptions that the police were searching for in connection with the burglaries. When the defendant immediately fled on foot when police stopped the vehicle, probable cause to search the car, which turned out to be stolen, existed. Porter v. State, 264 Ga. App. 526, 591 S.E.2d 436 (2003).

Motion to suppress was properly denied when the officer had a reasonable basis to make an investigatory stop of defendant's vehicle; it was reasonable for the officer to infer, based on the officer's training, experience, and common sense that the person driving the truck who stopped, looked at the officer while the officer was at the house attempting to serve the warrant, and then took off, could have been the person the officer was trying to find and arrest. Howard v. State, 265 Ga. App. 835, 595 S.E.2d 660 (2004).

Despite the defendant's claim that a sheriff's deputy lacked a specific and articulable suspicion of criminal activity necessary to execute a traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle and thus that the evidence seized thereafter had to be suppressed, the appeals court found otherwise as sufficient facts had been conveyed to the deputy prior to the stop for the deputy to have a reasonable belief that the defendant had been involved in a domestic dispute and might be under the influence of alcohol to justify a finding that the resulting stop was valid; hence, suppression was properly denied. Lacy v. State, 285 Ga. App. 647, 647 S.E.2d 350 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1514, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 620 (Ga. 2007).

Because a concerned citizen reported that a suspected drunk driver was driving a specific vehicle in a specific location, a police officer had a reasonable, articulable suspicion to justify an investigative traffic stop; accordingly, the defendant did not show a basis for reversing the trial court's order denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Adcock v. State, 299 Ga. App. 1, 681 S.E.2d 691 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress when a police officer was authorized to stop the vehicle the defendant was driving because of a perceived traffic violation and to continue the officer's investigation because the defendant did not have a driver's license; the particularized and objective basis for the initial stop was the information from the Georgia Crime Information Center that the male owner of the registered vehicle defendant was operating had a suspended driver's license, and once the stop was made, and it was ascertained that the defendant was not the owner of the car, the officer had a duty to further investigate only because the defendant could not produce a driver's license. Humphreys v. State, 304 Ga. App. 365, 696 S.E.2d 400 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendants' motion to suppress evidence police officers seized pursuant to search warrants for a residence and vehicles and a traffic stop because all of the facts, taken together, justified the stop based on a reasonable articulable suspicion that the occupants of the vehicles were involved in an active marijuana growing operation; a search warrant for the residence was pending based on probable cause to believe that an active marijuana growing operation was being conducted inside, the officers had information from multiple sources that the residence was a marijuana grow house, the house exhibited the physical characteristics of other grow houses that had been recently discovered, and the officers observed the defendants driving away from the residence in tandem with a truck and large recreational trailer, which had been obscured in the backyard behind a privacy fence. Prado v. State, 306 Ga. App. 240, 701 S.E.2d 871 (2010).

Statute later rendered unconstitutional did not invalidate stop. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress after finding that the excessive-window-tinting statute, O.C.G.A. § 40-8-73.1(b), was unconstitutional because an officer had a reasonable articulable suspicion to justify the traffic stop; the officer observed that the defendant's vehicle had darkly tinted windows and reasonably believed that to be in violation of § 40-8-73.1, and the fact that the statute was later found to be unconstitutional did not render the stop invalid. Christy v. State, 315 Ga. App. 647, 727 S.E.2d 269 (2012).

Trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained during a traffic stop because there was some evidence that the defendant attempted to avoid a roadblock; the defendant made an immediate, sudden turn into a driveway, reversed course, and drove away from the checkpoint at the same time that the police officer noticed the defendant's headlights. Blakely v. State, 316 Ga. App. 213, 729 S.E.2d 434 (2012).

Both initial stop and unrelated questions permissible. — Denial of the defendant's motion to suppress was proper because the officer's observation of the defendant's car crossing over the lane line without a signal and of an inoperable third brake light gave the officer probable cause that a traffic violation had occurred and the officer's questioning of the defendant unrelated to the stop did not prolong the stop. White v. State, 319 Ga. App. 540, 732 S.E.2d 107 (2012).

Second investigatory stop justified. — Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress evidence since the vehicle was properly stopped a second time after the police officer stopped the vehicle originally for a traffic violation and observed that the defendant's female companion appeared to be the driver, and let the defendant go with a warning; however, the officer had a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity that warranted the second investigatory stop when the officer saw the car stall as the woman tried to drive away, as the officer suspected that the woman had never driven that type of car, and that the defendant actually had been driving at the time the officer stopped the vehicle for the first offense the officer observed. State v. Trammel, 270 Ga. App. 395, 606 S.E.2d 613 (2004).

Terry stop of vehicle on information from police dispatch. — Police dispatcher who reports a crime at a specified location gives police an articulable suspicion to investigate and detain individuals at the scene. When a police officer received a dispatch on suspicion of drunk driving describing the defendant and the defendant's vehicle, and the officer saw the defendant in the defendant's vehicle matching that description immediately after receiving the dispatch, the officer had a reasonable, articulable suspicion to justify a Terry stop and it was error to grant the defendant's motion to suppress the stop even though the stop was made without the officer observing any traffic violations. State v. Harden, 267 Ga. App. 381, 599 S.E.2d 329 (2004).

Dispatcher's descriptions of vehicle justified stop. — Because police officers saw a vehicle matching a dispatcher's description shortly after receiving the dispatch, and the vehicle attempted to elude the officers, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-395(a), the officers had a specific and articulable reason to stop the vehicle; consequently, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motions to suppress, in limine, and for a new trial. Francis v. State, 275 Ga. App. 164, 620 S.E.2d 431 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motion to suppress evidence because a traffic stop of the defendant was authorized; an officer had a particularized and objective basis for suspecting the defendant of criminal activity based on the officer's knowledge that the officer was to be on the lookout for a car similar in description to the car the defendant was driving and the officer's observations of the defendant's suspicious driving. Aponte v. State, 296 Ga. App. 778, 676 S.E.2d 279 (2009).

Stop based on be-on-the-lookout bulletin. — Motion to suppress was properly denied in a defendant's trial for driving under the influence of alcohol and violating the open container law as an officer's be-on-the-lookout (BOLO) bulletin provided reasonable suspicion of criminal activity sufficient to authorize the stop of the defendant's vehicle; the BOLO provided particularized information describing the color, manufacturer, and model of the vehicle, the number and race of the vehicle's occupants, and the vehicle's location and direction of travel. Faulkner v. State, 277 Ga. App. 702, 627 S.E.2d 423 (2006).

Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress as the investigating officer lacked any particularized basis to suspect the defendant of any criminal activity, and information contained in a "be on the lookout" alert for a certain vehicle failed to supplant the officer's belief that the defendant was involved in a reported burglary given that: (1) the description of the vehicle being driven and the suspect were inadequate; (2) no information was provided about the lapse of time between the crime occurring and the traffic stop; (3) no information was provided about the number of persons about in the area; and (4) the defendant was not engaged in any activity which would have otherwise authorized a traffic stop. State v. Dias, 284 Ga. App. 10, 642 S.E.2d 925 (2007).

Stop justified despite ulterior motives. — Defendant was properly convicted of trafficking in methamphetamine because the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress items police officers seized as a result of a traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle when the stop was lawful under the circumstances; because the officer witnessed the defendant commit a traffic violation, the officers' action in pulling over the vehicle after the defendant committed the traffic violation was valid, even though the officers had ulterior motives in initiating the stop. Gonzalez v. State, 299 Ga. App. 777, 683 S.E.2d 878 (2009).

No justification for stop. — Because: (1) an investigating officer did not have a particularized and objective reason to suspect the defendant of any criminal activity before stopping the defendant's vehicle; and (2) the act of driving at night, lawfully, on a public road, and in a high crime area, did not justify the stop in the absence of additional circumstances, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Young v. State, 285 Ga. App. 214, 645 S.E.2d 690 (2007).

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress because the trial court was authorized to find that the police officer who initiated the traffic stop lacked an articulable suspicion to believe that the defendant was impeding the flow of traffic in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-184(a) when under the facts, the officer's belief that the defendant was impeding the flow of traffic was an insufficient basis for initiating an investigative stop; the court of appeals would not disturb the trial court's findings, which was based upon conflicting witness testimony, that at the time of the traffic stop, the defendant was traveling above the posted minimum speed limit and only a few miles below the posted maximum speed limit when the defendant's vehicle was passed by two vehicles that were speeding. State v. Parke, 304 Ga. App. 124, 695 S.E.2d 413 (2010).

Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a deputy sheriff obtained in the course of a traffic stop because the court's findings that the deputy did not really believe at the time of the stop that the absence of side view mirrors supplied proper grounds for a stop and that the deputy did not, in fact, see anyone toss anything from the car were not clearly erroneous; the factual findings were based not only upon a video that was absent from the record on appeal but also upon an assessment of the credibility of the deputy. State v. Reid, 313 Ga. App. 633, 722 S.E.2d 364 (2012).

Tags being old and worn not justification. — Because it was evident that the officer's claim of the tag's condition as being worn and old and appearing more than 30 days out of date, which was the sole articulated basis for the investigatory stop, was found by the trial court to lack credibility, and the appellate court found no clear error in the trial court's credibility determination, the state failed to adduce credible evidence that the officer observed a tag that appeared more than 30 days old, and supplied no basis to disturb the trial court's decision to grant the defendant's motion to suppress. State v.

Stop was not pretextual. — Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied because an investigatory stop was not pretextual, but was based on a reasonable, articulable suspicion after corroboration of a tip from a known tipster, along with a traffic offense; the tip contained details as to future actions that were not easily predicted, and a detective corroborated the tip before ordering the stop by verifying the vehicle's make, model, year, color, route, location, and occupant. Wright v. State, 272 Ga. App. 423, 612 S.E.2d 576 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress items police officers seized as a result of a traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle because the stop was lawful under the circumstances; because the officer witnessed the defendant commit a traffic violation, the officers' action in pulling over the vehicle after the defendant committed the traffic violation was valid, even though the officers had ulterior motives in initiating the stop. Gonzalez v. State, 299 Ga. App. 777, 683 S.E.2d 878 (2009).

Traffic stop initiated by conversation with concerned citizen improper. — Because a traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle was not based on the commission of a traffic violation or illegal act, but instead was based on the unreliable information provided by a concerned citizen to a police sergeant which amounted to hearsay gleaned from an overheard conversation, and did not provide the officer with the type of "inside information" that would not have been known to the public at large, the defendant's motion to suppress the marijuana seized as a result of the traffic stop was properly granted. State v. Holloway, 286 Ga. App. 129, 648 S.E.2d 473 (2007).

Search of person on reasonable suspicion after routine traffic stop. — Motion to suppress was properly denied when an officer, who pulled over a van on a traffic stop for following too closely, had justification to investigate the driver and the driver's passenger since a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity accompanied the totality of the facts on the stop: (1) the officer noticed an unusual amount of activity when the officer turned the officer's lights on to pull the car over; (2) the van did not pull over for a mile or two after the officer turned the officer's lights on, which was highly unusual; and (3) the driver and the passenger were extremely nervous when questioned and the driver and the passenger gave conflicting reports on why the driver and the passenger were traveling in the area. Rucker v. State, 266 Ga. App. 293, 596 S.E.2d 639 (2004).

Search after investigative stop for DUI. — When the state presented uncontradicted evidence that the police stopped the defendant for driving while under the influence after seeing the defendant's vehicle weaving over the yellow centerline, this was sufficient to support the legality of a search and seizure. State v. Haddock, 235 Ga. App. 726, 510 S.E.2d 561 (1998).

Defendant's continued detention proper. — Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied as the defendant's continued detention after an investigatory stop was justified based on a marijuana smell in the vehicle, the defendant's nervousness, and that the defendant twice attempted to go to the vehicle to get the defendant's gun, which was in a bag with methamphetamine. Wright v. State, 272 Ga. App. 423, 612 S.E.2d 576 (2005).

Trial court erred in finding that the defendant's continued detention after a license check was without legal justification as a police sergeant, after detecting an odor of alcohol from the defendant's vehicle, was legally justified to determine whether the defendant was driving while under the influence, and could not do so without conducting field sobriety tests; moreover, a search of the defendant occurred only after the defendant granted the officer consent to do so and the consent was voluntarily given. State v. Johnson, 282 Ga. App. 102, 637 S.E.2d 825 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0374, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 58 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of drug contraband found in the defendant's vehicle after the vehicle was stopped due to a broken taillight as the officers had the right to detain the defendant while awaiting word as to possible outstanding warrants; a certified drug recognition expert questioned the defendant and observed the defendant having bloodshot eyes, droopy eyelids, and displaying relaxed inhibitions; and the defendant sufficiently and voluntarily consented to the search of the vehicle as was shown on a videotape of the traffic stop, despite the defendant being handcuffed at the time. Maloy v. State, 293 Ga. App. 648, 667 S.E.2d 688 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress marijuana a police officer found in a vehicle in which the defendant was a passenger because the defendant was legally detained when the officer sought the driver's consent to search, and the officer made the officer's request shortly after completing the officer's check of the occupants' identification, which was within six minutes of initiating the stop; having found that the defendant was not subject to an illegal detention, the trial court did not err in further concluding that the defendant lacked standing to challenge the search on other grounds. Baker v. State, 306 Ga. App. 99, 701 S.E.2d 572 (2010).

Detention not prolonged. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the officer was authorized to perform a traffic stop; since the officer asked the defendant about marijuana around the same time the officer was verifying the defendant's license, the officer did not unreasonably prolong the detention. Parker v. State, 317 Ga. App. 93, 730 S.E.2d 717 (2012).

Order granting the defendant's motion to suppress was reversed because the undisputed evidence showed that the open-air dog sniff occurred while the officer conducted the mission of the traffic stop, and it did not prolong the traffic stop since the K-9 handler conducted the search while the officer was still checking the driver's license. State v. Herman, 344 Ga. App. 359, 810 S.E.2d 183 (2018).

Search incident to an arrest following a traffic stop. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the crack cocaine found in a search incident to an arrest of the defendant for having an open container of alcohol following a traffic stop because the defendant's car was parked in a high crime area so that the traffic stop was legally permissible. Welch v. State, 263 Ga. App. 70, 587 S.E.2d 220 (2003).

Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied because methamphetamine and an illegal weapon found in the defendant's vehicle gave an officer probable cause to arrest the defendant; the resulting search of the defendant's vehicle, which yielded additional methamphetamine and a large quantity of marijuana, was justified as a search incident to a lawful arrest. Wright v. State, 272 Ga. App. 423, 612 S.E.2d 576 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motion to suppress evidence in the defendant's prosecution for financial transaction card theft under O.C.G.A. § 16-9-31; the defendant's repeated reaching into the glove compartment while trying to find a car rental agreement, coupled with the defendant's initial lack of cooperation when asked to exit the car and the fact that the defendant reached to the defendant's waistband several times, provided a police officer with the basis for conducting a pat-down search, which led to a broader search when the officer observed a bag of marijuana sticking out of the defendant's waist band resulting in the defendant's arrest. Leonard v. State, 281 Ga. App. 184, 635 S.E.2d 795 (2006).

Inability to read license plate justifying stop. — Trial court erred in granting the suppression motions filed by both the first and second defendant, who occupied the vehicle stopped as a violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-2-41 provided a sufficient reason for the traffic stop; moreover, the trial court erred in ruling that some portions of O.C.G.A. § 40-2-41 did not apply to the out-of-state license plate on the subject vehicle and by ruling that even though the word "Carolina" on the license plate was not legible and, hence, there was no violation of the statute because the police officer testified about an inability to recognize it as a South Carolina license plate. State v. Davis, 283 Ga. App. 200,

Investigatory stop for taillight violation. — Grant of the defendant's motion to suppress was not clearly erroneous as the officer stopping the defendant's automobile for an investigatory stop provided no factual basis for believing that the defendant's older model automobile violated the taillight specifications in O.C.G.A. § 40-8-23(e) simply because newer models violated the statute; further, the trial court could have found that the officer's testimony that the officer had conducted research into the newer models' taillights was less than credible. State v. Keddington, 264 Ga. App. 912, 592 S.E.2d 532 (2003).

Dark tinted windows. — Defendant's vehicle was properly stopped for following too closely to another vehicle even though the police officer making the stop indicated at the suppression hearing that the officer initially followed the vehicle only due to the vehicle's excessive window tint. Perry v. State, 274 Ga. App. 551, 618 S.E.2d 172 (2005).

Trial court erred in granting the defendants' motion to suppress the drug evidence seized following a traffic stop for a violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-8-73.1 as an officer's observations of a vehicle's dark tinted windows, and belief that the windows violated the statute were sufficient to justify the stop; moreover, a free air search by a drug-sniffing dog did not violate the defendants' Fourth Amendment rights. State v. Simmons, 283 Ga. App. 141, 640 S.E.2d 709 (2006).

Stop based on seat belt violation. — Consensual search upon a traffic stop for a seatbelt violation supported the trial court's denial of a motion to suppress as the search conducted pursuant to the defendant's consent was not a search based solely on the defendant's failure to wear a seatbelt. Blitch v. State, 281 Ga. 125, 636 S.E.2d 545 (2006).

Because sufficient evidence existed to support a finding that the arresting officer had a clear and unobstructed view of the defendant not wearing a seat belt as required by O.C.G.A. § 40-8-76.1(f), the officer's subsequent stop of the defendant's vehicle was supported by probable cause, making suppression of the evidence thereafter seized unwarranted; as a result, reconsideration of the court's ruling did not amount to an abuse of discretion. Schramm v. State, 286 Ga. App. 156, 648 S.E.2d 392 (2007).

Traffic stop ended prior to consent. — Defendant was entitled to suppression of marijuana found in a potato chip bag in a car in which the defendant was a passenger because a police officer improperly asked the driver for consent to search the vehicle after handing the driver a citation for a seatbelt violation; the traffic stop ended before the driver gave consent. State v. Felton, 297 Ga. App. 35, 676 S.E.2d 434 (2009).

Speeding justified stop. — Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied; the stop of the defendant was reasonable because the defendant was exceeding the speed limit and crossed the center line twice. Morrison v. State, 272 Ga. App. 34, 611 S.E.2d 720, aff'd, 280 Ga. 222, 626 S.E.2d 500 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer obtained through a traffic stop of a driver's vehicle because the stop of the defendant and the driver was valid since the officer's observation that the vehicle was traveling 40 miles per hour in a 35-mile-per-hour zone authorized the officer to initiate the traffic stop, and the officer was on the lookout for the vehicle based on information relayed by the county drug squad; the stop was not illegally extended because it did not matter whether the request to search came during the traffic stop or immediately thereafter, and there was no illegal detention since the questioning was almost instantaneous, all indications were that the search of the vehicle was by consent of the driver. Hammont v. State, 309 Ga. App. 395, 710 S.E.2d 598 (2011).

Purpose of stop not related to later offense. — Fact that the charge against the defendant of driving as an habitual violator of motor vehicle laws was not related to the original purpose of the stop did not require the exclusion of the arresting officer's testimony relating to the charge if the stop was proper. State v. Roe, 211 Ga. App. 129, 438 S.E.2d 186 (1993).

Suppression of evidence following impoundment without basis. — Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained after the defendant's car was impounded during a traffic stop because, even though the officer had reasonable articulable suspicion to initiate the traffic stop based on criminal database search results that the defendant's car was not insured, once the defendant provided proof of insurance in an acceptable manner, the officer did not have probable cause to arrest the defendant or issue the defendant a citation; and, without probable cause to issue the citation, the officer had no basis for impounding the defendant's vehicle. State v. Lewis, 344 Ga. App. 630, 811 S.E.2d 436 (2018).

Defendant's continued detention after traffic stop improper. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence deputies seized from the defendant's car because the deputies did not have reasonable grounds upon which to continue to detain the defendant after the deputies called for a drug dog; the state offered no evidence that the deputies still were investigating the defendant's failure to properly signal a right turn when the deputies called for a canine unit to come to the scene and detained the defendant until the dog arrived or that the deputies had a reasonable suspicion that the defendant was involved in some criminal activity besides the traffic violation when the deputies called for the drug dog and continued to detain the defendant until the dog arrived and sniffed the car. Dominguez v. State, 310 Ga. App. 370, 714 S.E.2d 25 (2011).

Suppression motion properly denied. — Drugs were lawfully seized because the defendant's commission of a traffic offense pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 40-2-6.1 allowed an officer to make a valid traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle and thus allowed the officer to ask for consent to search and use a drug-sniffing dog to sniff the exterior of the vehicle. Thus, the defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied. Thomas v. State, 289 Ga. App. 161, 657 S.E.2d 247 (2008), cert. dismissed, No. S08C0959, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 491 (Ga. 2008).

Suppression motion erroneously granted on basis of venue. — Grant of defendant's motion to suppress on the basis of venue was reversed because the state did not need to establish venue at the pretrial hearing on the defendant's motion to suppress as it was not relevant to the issues raised in the motion, which challenged the reasonable basis for the traffic stop or whether the resulting search of the defendant and the defendant's vehicle were supported by probable cause. State v. Wallace, 338 Ga. App. 611, 791 S.E.2d 187 (2016).

6. Videotape

Identification by videotape. — Because a victim's identification of the defendant as the robber was corroborated by other witnesses, the evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for armed robbery as well as to provide probable cause for a search warrant; because it was proper for the witnesses to identify the defendant from a videotape, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motions to suppress and in limine. Bradford v. State, 274 Ga. App. 659, 618 S.E.2d 709 (2005).

Failure to proffer videotape evidence. — Order suppressing a videotape made by one of the officers involved in the stop of the defendant was upheld on appeal as the state failed to proffer the videotape for inclusion in the record; hence, nothing was presented for the appeals court to review. State v. Winther, 282 Ga. App. 289, 638 S.E.2d 428 (2006).

Suppression of videotape not required. — Trial court did not err by denying the motion to suppress because the proper implied consent warning, as enacted by the General Assembly, was read to the defendant without error, there was nothing in the record supporting the defendant's contention that the state suppressed the videotape of the stop in bad faith, and the stop was not pretextual as the corporal observed the defendant staggering, the defendant's car weaving, and erratic driving prior to stopping the defendant. Monas v. State, 270 Ga. App. 50, 606 S.E.2d 80 (2004).

It was not error for the trial court to refuse to suppress a portion of the defendant's videotaped interview with police on the basis that the statements about the defendant's alcohol consumption improperly placed the defendant's character at issue because generally an adult's consumption of alcohol was irrelevant to the issue of character. Sanford v. State, 284 Ga. 785, 671 S.E.2d 820 (2009).

7. Youthful Offenders

O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 does not apply to searches by school officials. — Granting that public primary and secondary school students have minimal rights under U.S. Const., amend. 4 to be free from searches and seizures by school officials, nonetheless the exclusionary rule is not applicable to enforce those rights, and students aggrieved by the action of school officials must fall back upon such other legal remedies as applicable law may allow the students. State v. Young, 234 Ga. 488, 216 S.E.2d 586, cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1039, 96 S. Ct. 576, 46 L. Ed. 2d 413 (1975).

Applicability to searches by school officials. — Trial court's denial of the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained from the defendant's classroom computer, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30, was proper when a school principal and school technical expert accessed the defendant's computer, and there was no indication that they were acting in the capacity of, or at the request of, law enforcement personnel; the exclusionary rule of U.S. Const., amend. 4 is only applicable to actions undertaken by law enforcement officers and does not apply to the actions of school officials. Joines v. State, 264 Ga. App. 558, 591 S.E.2d 454 (2003).

Applicability to searches by private individuals. — Upon a de novo review of the trial court's application of the law to the facts, because a warrantless search of the defendant's gym locker was conducted by private citizens and not by law enforcement, the search did not implicate the Fourth Amendment; hence, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of the search. Hobbs v. State, 272 Ga. App. 148, 611 S.E.2d 775 (2005).

Search of juvenile at school not authorized. — Law enforcement officer, who was acting as an agent for a school principal in searching a juvenile, upon reports that the juvenile had been overheard making arrangements to sell drugs on school grounds, was not authorized to search the juvenile absent probable cause to do so; thus, when the juvenile was searched and drugs were found, the court properly granted the juvenile's motion to suppress. State v. K.L.M., 278 Ga. App. 219, 628 S.E.2d 651 (2006).

Juvenile defendant's statement not suppressed. — Given an analysis of the Riley factors, and the fact that the juvenile defendant knowingly and voluntarily waived any constitutional rights due under Miranda, suppression of a custodial statement to law enforcement was not required. Green v. State, 282 Ga. 672, 653 S.E.2d 23 (2007).

Warrants and Affidavits

Absence of warrant is not material either to guilt or punishment. Gilreath v. State, 247 Ga. 814, 279 S.E.2d 650 (1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 984, 102 S. Ct. 2258, 72 L. Ed. 2d 862 (1982).

Arrest on valid warrant. — Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied as to an arrest warrant that was supported by probable cause since a witness identified the defendant and stated that the defendant was present at the murder scene and another witness confirmed the identification through a photo lineup and testified to observing the defendant carry out the actual crime; even if the affidavit contained allegedly misleading information that one witness was the victim's cousin and that the defendant was identified by witnesses via a six-photo lineup, the remaining information was still sufficient to support the probable cause finding. Waters v. State, 281 Ga. 119, 636 S.E.2d 538 (2006).

Invalid arrest warrant. — Because a search yielding evidence used against the defendant was incident to the execution of an arrest warrant which was later invalidated, and no good faith exception existed, the evidence seized against the defendant should have been suppressed as the arresting officer had no other basis to search the car in which the defendant was a passenger. Register v. State, 281 Ga. App. 822, 637 S.E.2d 761 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 216 (Ga. 2007).

Affidavit for search warrant insufficient. — Lack of information about informants and lack of corroboration to show reliability required the trial court to grant the defendant's motion to suppress. Elom v. State, 248 Ga. App. 273, 546 S.E.2d 50 (2001).

Defendant, who was charged with cocaine trafficking and possession of marijuana with intent to distribute, was entitled to suppression of evidence from the search of the defendant's residence because the search warrant was based on an officer's affidavit containing untrue information; the officer's interview with a person, who was arrested with the defendant, did not contain information, which was included in the officer's affidavit, that this person saw the defendant retrieve drugs from the home and hide the drugs in the woods or that this person saw drug paraphernalia in the defendant's residence. State v. Willis, 302 Ga. App. 355, 691 S.E.2d 261 (2010).

Denial of motion to suppress was reversed because the affidavit failed to provide any underlying details that would allow the magistrate to evaluate whether the conclusions were based on specific facts (derived, for example, from physical evidence or eyewitness testimony) rising to the level of probable cause or whether the conclusions were instead based on mere speculation or presumptions. Willoughby v. State, 315 Ga. App. 401, 727 S.E.2d 194 (2012).

Officer's affidavit insufficient. — Police officer's failure to independently corroborate any of the information provided by source A (an unidentified third party) to an anonymous tipster rendered the officer's affidavit insufficient to establish the reliability of either source. Absent a showing that the information in the affidavit was reliable, the trial court erred in denying the motion to suppress. Sutton v. State, 319 Ga. App. 597, 737 S.E.2d 706 (2013).

Affidavit for search warrant sufficient. — Even if a magistrate improperly relied upon a bloody sheet seen in plain view in a defendant's home as a basis for issuing a search warrant for the home, the arrest warrant still contained ample evidence from which to find probable cause that the defendant committed a battery on a victim inside the defendant's home; the evidence included the victim's physical injuries, the victim's statement that the defendant had shoved a curling iron down the victim's throat, and the presence of other blood observed inside the house after deputies entered in search of the assault victim. Lord v. State, 297 Ga. App. 88, 676 S.E.2d 404 (2009).

Once the trial court found that the detective's affidavit contained sufficient facts for the issuance of the search warrant, it was up to the defendant to produce evidence to support the defendant's motion to suppress. Defendant not only failed to do so but failed to insist on a full evidentiary hearing; thus, the state met the state's burden of proof as a matter of law and the denial of the defendant's motion to suppress was mandated. Adams v. State, 300 Ga. App. 294, 684 S.E.2d 404 (2009).

Based on the totality of the circumstances, an affidavit provided a magistrate with a substantial basis for concluding that probable cause existed to believe that contraband would be found in two vehicles because the affidavit in support of the warrant recited the positive alert by an officer's canine as well as the marijuana growing operation in the residence from which the vehicles drove away. Prado v. State, 306 Ga. App. 240, 701 S.E.2d 871 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a detective found in the defendant's home because given the totality of the circumstances, the magistrate who issued the search warrant was authorized to conclude that there was a fair probability that contraband would be found at the defendant's home; the detective's affidavit in support of the warrant contained ample facts by which the magistrate could independently evaluate the veracity and reliability of anonymous informants and the informants' information, and a confidential informant's controlled buy of marijuana from the defendant at the defendant's residence on the day the detective applied for the warrant independently confirmed that illegal drug activities were taking place at the home. Taylor v. State, 306 Ga. App. 175, 702 S.E.2d 28 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 to suppress evidence seized pursuant to search warrants because the reconstituted affidavit supported the issuance of the search warrant; an agent of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation testified that an antifreeze container smelling of gasoline was found in the warranted search of a car registered in the defendant's name and located in the yard of the home of the defendant's parents, and the affidavit executed as part of the application for a warrant to search the car set out the facts surrounding the crime, that the victim's body had been transported from the place where the victim was killed to the site where the victim's body was found, and that the object of the warrant was one of two vehicles registered to the defendant that the defendant likely used to move the body. Glenn v. State, 288 Ga. 462, 704 S.E.2d 794 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 to suppress evidence seized pursuant to search warrants because the applications for search warrants to search the defendant's apartment and the car for which registration information was given in the detective's affidavit contained sufficient information from which a judicial officer could determine there was a fair probability that evidence of a crime would be found at those sites as the sites were likely methods of transporting the victim and the likely destination of appellant and the victim; in the detective's affidavit, the detective related the discovery of the victim's body and the statements of the victim's friend and roommate concerning the victim's relationship with the defendant, and the victim's pregnancy and identification of the defendant as the father, who was not pleased about the pregnancy. Glenn v. State, 288 Ga. 462, 704 S.E.2d 794 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized from a search warrant authorizing entry into the defendant's home because the affidavit submitted in support of the warrant provided a sufficient basis for the magistrate to make a practical, commonsense decision that there was a fair probability that evidence of sexual exploitation of children would be found at the defendant's residence; the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children forwarded the information it received from a security specialist employed by the host of the website to the Georgia Bureau of Investigation (GBI), and the affidavit of a special agent with the GBI set forth facts that showed both the reliability and basis of knowledge of the specialist. James v. State, 312 Ga. App. 130, 717 S.E.2d 713 (2011), cert. denied, No. S12C0347, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 227 (Ga. 2012).

Trial court erred by granting the defendant's motion to suppress all of the evidence seized at a residence because the affidavits underlying the warrants provided the magistrate with sufficient information to support probable cause as the evidence in the affidavits sufficiently corroborated the information received from the informant and established a nexus between the apartment and another address. Based on the suspect's vehicle, the investigators conducted surveillance on the apartment and the other address, a search of the other address uncovered large amounts of cocaine and methamphetamine, and a background check on the suspect connected the suspect to both the apartment and the other address. State v. Perez, 349 Ga. App. 707, 824 S.E.2d 804 (2019).

Evidence seized as result of warrant. — Because the magistrate was presented with a substantial basis for concluding that evidence of child molestation would be found in the cameras and film located in the defendant's car, and such enabled the magistrate to form probable cause to support the issuance of a search warrant, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of the warrant. Manders v. State, 281 Ga. App. 786, 637 S.E.2d 460 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized pursuant to a search warrant as: (1) there was a presumption of reliability as to the report of a police officer or undercover agent in the line of duty to a fellow officer in support of the warrant; (2) the affidavit attached to the warrant set forth sufficient facts to establish the reliability of the informant; and (3) a search warrant for the defendant's home was not even necessary because at the time of the search the defendant was on probation. McTaggart v. State, 285 Ga. App. 178, 645 S.E.2d 658 (2007).

Because a search warrant affidavit provided the issuing magistrate with sufficient probable cause connecting the defendant to the residence of a female friend for the magistrate to logically conclude that there was a fair probability that evidence of a crime would be found therein, despite the omission of additional evidence by the affiant, an order granting suppression of the evidence seized therein was reversed; moreover, the police did not have to observe the defendant living with the female, based on the information provided to the police that the pair could still be living together. State v. Hunter, 282 Ga. 278, 646 S.E.2d 465 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the DNA evidence obtained pursuant to a search warrant as the warrant, given the totality of the circumstances, was based upon sufficient fingerprint evidence which provided an accurate foundation for identifying the defendant as a suspect in all four crimes. Carruth v. State, 286 Ga. App. 431, 649 S.E.2d 557 (2007).

Trial court properly denied suppression of the defendant's blood sample for a DNA comparison pursuant to a particularized search warrant seeking the sample as the warrant and the attached affidavit when read together particularly described the evidence to be seized and gave the executing officers adequate notice of the search warrant's scope and command. Holloway v. State, 287 Ga. App. 655, 653 S.E.2d 95 (2007).

Because the application for a search warrant established that the victim lived in a residence at a specific address, that the defendant lived in the basement apartment located in the residence, that the defendant had severely beaten the victim, and that there was a fair probability that evidence of the crime could be found either in the defendant's apartment or in the victim's part of the residence, probable cause existed to search the defendant's basement apartment and the victim's part of the residence; accordingly, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence found in the apartment. Fletcher v. State, 284 Ga. 653, 670 S.E.2d 411 (2008).

Trial court did not err in refusing to suppress the defendant's hospital records, which showed that the defendant used drugs on the day the defendant shot the victim, because on the evidence's face, the affidavit for the search warrant issued for the records demonstrated a fair probability that evidence of the defendant's drug use would be found in the hospital records; the alleged omissions in the affidavit, which was based on the statements of the defendant's spouse, had the potential to impeach the statements made by the spouse, but the omissions did not eliminate the existence of probable cause because if the omitted material were included in the warrant, probable cause would still exist. Herrera v. State, 288 Ga. 231, 702 S.E.2d 854 (2010).

Failure to leave a copy of the supporting affidavit at the searched premises did not render a warrant facially void for lack of particularity since the warrant referred to the attached affidavit, which specified the exact location of the property to be searched and the particular items to be seized and there was no dispute that the location, the scope of the search, and seizure conformed to the warrant; thus, denial of defendant's motion to suppress was not in error. Battle v. State, 266 Ga. App. 532, 597 S.E.2d 417 (2004).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence police officers found at a residence because the fact that the investigator who submitted the affidavit for the search warrant did not leave a copy of the affidavit with the warrant at the premises did not render the warrant invalid; the warrant satisfied the particularity requirement of the Fourth Amendment and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII on the warrant's face because the warrant listed the address of the place to be searched and contained a description of the home, and the warrant also listed items to be seized, including marijuana, weighing devices, and other paraphernalia used in the distribution of drugs. Pass v. State, 309 Ga. App. 440, 710 S.E.2d 641 (2011).

Failure to tender warrant or affidavit. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the state did not carry the state's burden to prove the validity of the warrant in that the affidavit supporting the warrant was not tendered into evidence. Smith v. State, 324 Ga. App. 542, 751 S.E.2d 164 (2013).

Warrant for arrest of defendant's passenger justified search. — Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of drugs and a handgun found during the warrantless search of the defendant's vehicle as the arrest of the defendant's passenger on an outstanding warrant authorized the stop of the defendant's vehicle and the mobility of the car, coupled with the existence of probable cause to believe the car contained marijuana, based on the officer smelling the marijuana upon approaching the vehicle, authorized the search. Somesso v. State, 288 Ga. App. 291, 653 S.E.2d 855 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0505, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 281 (Ga. 2008).

Affidavit containing false statements and omitting material information. — In reviewing the sufficiency of an affidavit containing false statements and omitting material information, the false statements must be deleted, the omitted truthful material must be included, and the affidavit must be reexamined to determine whether probable cause exists to issue a search warrant. Redding v. State, 192 Ga. App. 87, 383 S.E.2d 640 (1989).

Proof that facts in affidavit false may prove search illegal. — Proof that the facts sworn to in the supporting affidavit were actually false might well be proof of illegal execution of a search warrant. Wood v. State, 118 Ga. App. 477, 164 S.E.2d 233 (1968).

Search exceeded the warrant. — Because the scope of the search exceeded the warrant and the search was excessive, the court erred in denying the motion because of the difficulty in enumerating the items improperly seized; the remedy is the suppression and return of the unlawfully seized items. Grant v. State, 220 Ga. App. 604, 469 S.E.2d 826 (1996).

Search did not exceed warrant. — Because a search warrant referred to the crimes of possession of methamphetamines and theft by receiving stolen property, the warrant did not violate the particularity requirement; therefore, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Allison v. State, 299 Ga. App. 542, 683 S.E.2d 104 (2009).

Insufficient evidence of existence of valid warrant. — State failed to meet the state's burden under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b) of proving that a search of a defendant's hotel room was made pursuant to a valid warrant because the state failed to produce the warrant or supporting affidavit, and the sheriff's testimony concerning the warrant was hearsay because the sheriff had no personal knowledge of the warrant. Sosebee v. State, 303 Ga. App. 499, 693 S.E.2d 838 (2010).

Warrant and affidavit in record prior to suppression hearing. — Because the testifying officer had personal knowledge concerning the existence of a valid search warrant and the warrant and supporting affidavit were in the record prior to the suppression hearing, the state met the state's burden of producing evidence showing the validity of the warrant since the defendant offered nothing in opposition, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress. Tyre v. State, 323 Ga. App. 37, 747 S.E.2d 106 (2013).

Evidence Acquired Unlawfully

Evidence seized as result of illegal police activity. — Law proscribes only unreasonable searches and seizures and prohibits the use of evidence seized as a result of lawless police activity. State v. Sanders, 155 Ga. App. 274, 270 S.E.2d 850 (1980).

Evidence Acquired Unlawfully (Cont'd)

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress statements, drugs, paraphernalia, and cash the police found after searching the defendant's home as fruit of the poisonous tree because although the police had authority to enter the house for the purpose of apprehending the defendant, the subsequent reentry by the police was illegal since an officer reentered the house without a warrant, valid consent, or exigent circumstances; both before and at the time of the defendant's arrest, the defendant told the police not to enter the house, and it could not be assumed that the victim's need for assistance justified the officer's reentry because the exigent circumstances authorizing entry for the limited purpose of effecting the defendant's arrest had expired. State v. Driggers, 306 Ga. App. 849, 702 S.E.2d 925 (2010).

Deputy's discovery of the tailgate allegedly from the stolen truck was problematic because the deputy did not have a warrant or consent when the deputy went behind the house and, thus, the deputy's observation of the tailgate behind the house was illegal, and since the state did not show that the observation of the battery charger alone supported the issuance of the search warrant, the defendant's motion to suppress should have been granted. Bowman v. State, 332 Ga. App. 407, 773 S.E.2d 33 (2015).

No exigent circumstances justifying entry. — Because the state failed to carry the state's burden of establishing exigent circumstances justifying the entry of the police into defendants' trailer to arrest persons for underage drinking, the trial court properly granted the defendants' motion to suppress the evidence seized from the unlawful entry. State v. Ealum, 283 Ga. App. 799, 643 S.E.2d 262 (2007).

Suppression of marijuana and cocaine was proper after three uniformed officers stepped into the codefendant's hotel room without permission and asked about luggage and other bags in the room, because following the officers' entry to retrieve three zipped bags, which the codefendant's said were not theirs, the second defendant acquiesced in an officer's request to search the second defendant's bag and the state did not fulfill the state's burden to show that consent for the search was voluntary. State v. Hamby, 317 Ga. App. 480, 731 S.E.2d 374 (2012).

Exigent circumstances not found. — Defendant's suppression motion was properly granted when: (1) an officer executing an arrest warrant for a third person had unreasonably looked through the defendants' window, discovering the defendants using marijuana; (2) the officers did not identify themselves as police officers when the officers knocked at the defendants' door; (3) defendants hid the marijuana before opening the door; (4) the police confronted defendants about the marijuana after the police determined that the third person was not in the house; and (5) the appellate court could not conclude, as a matter of law, that there were exigent circumstances justifying the warrantless seizure of the drugs, in that the drugs were in danger of being destroyed, simply because the defendants hid the drugs before opening the door. State v. Schwartz, 261 Ga. App. 742, 583 S.E.2d 573 (2003).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence as the evidence that the police officer seized was obtained after the officer made a warrantless entry into the defendant's apartment without consent and without exigent circumstances to justify that entry; thus, the contraband that the officer observed or discovered as part of that entry was observed or discovered as a result of the officer being in a location where the officer did not have a lawful right to be. Leon-Velazquez v. State, 269 Ga. App. 760, 605 S.E.2d 400 (2004).

Although police officers had probable cause to investigate a crime, the Fourth Amendment prohibited the police from entering the defendant's home or the home's curtilage without a warrant absent consent or a showing of exigent circumstances; consequently, the trial court erred by denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence of a ten-foot high marijuana plant plainly growing in defendant's backyard. Kirsche v. State, 271 Ga. App. 729, 611 S.E.2d 64 (2005).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress as the back yard and the back door of the defendant's home fell within the general definition of curtilage of the home and the state failed to show an exception, such as exigent circumstances, to the homeowners' Fourth Amendment right to protection of the back yard/door curtilage of the home. Arp v. State, 327 Ga. App. 340, 759 S.E.2d 57 (2014).

Evidence from exigent circumstances searches. — Given the existence of exigent circumstances, law enforcement officers were justified in searching the defendant's home without a warrant in order to determine if a child was present and in need of medical attention or in danger of imminent harm; as a result, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized as a result of that search. Richards v. State, 286 Ga. App. 580, 649 S.E.2d 747 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1766, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 702 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence the murder weapon and photographs of the crime scene because the search of the defendant's residence was authorized due to the exigent circumstances; officers arrived at the residence to conduct a welfare check and knocked on the door, which caused the door to open slightly, allowing the officers to see the victim lying motionless on the couch, and after the victim failed to respond to the officers' calls, the officers were authorized to proceed into the residence immediately to come to the victim's aid. Gibson v. State, 290 Ga. 6, 717 S.E.2d 447 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress photographs obtained subsequent to the police officers' entry into the defendant's home because the officers' entry was authorized by the exigent circumstances exception to the warrant requirement of the Fourth Amendment; the trial court was authorized to find that the age of the defendant's children, the children's undisputed inability to care for themselves, and the lack of adult supervision due to the defendant's absence and their father's arrest constituted an exigent circumstance that authorized the officers' entry into the residence for the purpose of temporarily supervising the children until a responsible adult arrived to relieve the officers, and once the officers were legally in the house pursuant to the exigent circumstances, the officers were authorized to photograph items of potential evidentiary significance that were in plain view, specifically, the family's living conditions. Staib v. State, 309 Ga. App. 785, 711 S.E.2d 362 (2011).

If police know about crime, warrantless arrest legal. — If law enforcement officers have sufficient personal knowledge of the acceptance of a bribe to justify the officers' arrest of appellant without a warrant, the arrest is legal without a warrant and the exclusionary rule of Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) is not applicable to the evidence seized incident to that arrest. Humphrey v. State, 231 Ga. 855, 204 S.E.2d 603, cert. denied, 419 U.S. 839, 95 S. Ct. 68, 42 L. Ed. 2d 66 (1974).

Evidence and motion failing to prove alleged illegal warrantless search. — If a written motion to suppress evidence is based on allegations of an illegal search without a warrant, and a seizure with a warrant, but there is nothing in the written motion to support a contention that the search, if made with a warrant, was illegal for any of the reasons stated in the statute, and if the evidence adduced on the hearing authorized a determination that the search itself took place with a warrant, the motion to suppress is properly denied. Raines v. State, 123 Ga. App. 794, 182 S.E.2d 491 (1971).

Failure to file motion to suppress to challenge. — Because the defendant did not file a timely motion to suppress any physical evidence in the case, the defendant waived any right to claim that the underlying search which produced the physical evidence was unconstitutional; thus, the defendant was not entitled to exclusion of testimony describing the physical evidence on the basis that the testimony was the fruit of an unconstitutional search. Riley v. State, No. A20A1376, 2020 Ga. App. LEXIS 431 (July 21, 2020).

If illegal arrest, fruits not admissible. — If an arrest without a warrant is illegal, the search is unlawful and the property seized as a result of the arrest should be suppressed as evidence by the trial court. Humphrey v. State, 231 Ga. 855, 204 S.E.2d 603, cert. denied, 419 U.S. 839, 95 S. Ct. 68, 42 L. Ed. 2d 66 (1974).

If there is no legal justification for the arrest, the unlawful fruits may not be introduced in evidence. Moore v. State, 155 Ga. App. 299, 270 S.E.2d 713 (1980).

Trial court erred in denying a defendant's motion to suppress because the state did not establish sufficient probable cause to arrest the defendant for driving under the influence since the state offered no evidence showing that the defendant's driving ability was impaired due to alcohol consumption; evidence that an officer smelled alcohol on the defendant's breath, that an alco-sensor test revealed the presence of alcohol, and that the defendant admitted that the defendant had been drinking "earlier in the day" was insufficient as a matter of law to constitute probable cause to arrest the defendant for driving under the influence. Handley v. State, 294 Ga. App. 236, 668 S.E.2d 855 (2008).

Fruits of pretextual arrest inadmissible. — When the state never physically produced at any point in the criminal proceedings and when the record did not otherwise confirm the existence of the alleged arrest warrant through which the state justified intruding into the defendant's home, resulting in the eventual search-warrant seizure of a controlled substance discovered pursuant to that arrest, a motion to suppress was improperly denied. Baez v. State, 206 Ga. App. 462, 425 S.E.2d 882 (1992).

Seizure for crime committed independent of warrant. — Results of a breath test obtained following the stop of the defendant pursuant to an arrest warrant on a family violence charge were untainted by any infirmity in the arrest warrant; the seizure of the breath test evidence resulted from a "second" arrest arising from the police officer's having witnessed the commission of an independent crime. King v. State, 211 Ga. App. 12, 438 S.E.2d 93 (1993).

Evidence obtained under a void warrant, is evidence illegally obtained and the taint of illegal procurement forbids its use as evidence. Anderson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 25, 270 S.E.2d 263 (1980).

Backpack too far from defendant to fall under search incident to arrest exception. — State failed to meet the state's burden to prove that the warrantless search of the defendant's backpack was lawful as the backpack was under the exclusive control of the officers and the defendant was handcuffed, leaving no danger that the defendant would gain access to the backpack to seize the weapon or destroy evidence. Huff v. State, 346 Ga. App. 120, 816 S.E.2d 304 (2018).

Requirements for Motion

1. In General

Motion must state facts showing search unlawful. — All motions to suppress, whether based on statutory or nonstatutory grounds, must state facts and not merely conclusions. Boatright v. State, 192 Ga. App. 112, 385 S.E.2d 298 (1989); Taylor v. State, 197 Ga. App. 678, 399 S.E.2d 213 (1990).

O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b) requires that a motion to suppress evidence "state facts showing that the search and seizure were unlawful." Unless the defendant has satisfied this requirement, the state is under no duty to present evidence in rebuttal. Wilson v. State, 197 Ga. App. 181, 397 S.E.2d 744 (1990).

O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 required only that the motion to suppress state facts showing that the search and seizure was unlawful. Watts v. State, 274 Ga. 373, 552 S.E.2d 823 (2001).

Because the defendant never sought a ruling from the trial court on the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained during a roadblock, the appellate court had nothing to review because the appellate court could not find that the trial court erred by denying a motion that was never presented to the trial court; further, the motion would have been denied, even if a ruling was sought, because the motion never mentioned the roadblock and never stated any facts showing that a search and seizure were unlawful, as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b), and a series of conclusions without support of stated facts did not meet the statutory requirements. Overton v. State, 270 Ga. App. 285, 606 S.E.2d 306 (2004).

Harm or prejudice must be demonstrated before a violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b) can be held to give rise to reversible error. State v. Peabody, 247 Ga. 580, 277 S.E.2d 668 (1981); Eidson v. State, 182 Ga. App. 321, 355 S.E.2d 691 (1987).

Defendant only required to state facts concerning illegal warrant. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 requires the defendant only to "state facts" showing that warrant was unlawful. The statute does not require that those facts be proven or substantiated before the state satisfies the state's burden of proof. The possibility that the defendant may not have competent evidence to support the defendant's allegation is irrelevant until the state has entered evidence that specifically rebuts the defendant's charge. Slaughter v. State, 168 Ga. App. 58, 308 S.E.2d 6 (1983), rev'd in part on other grounds, 252 Ga. 435, 315 S.E.2d 865 (1984).

Contents of motion inadequate. — Objections to the legality of a search and seizure are not properly brought before the trial court when the motion to suppress evidence states no facts showing wherein the search and seizure were unlawful. Mosier v. State, 160 Ga. App. 415, 287 S.E.2d 357 (1981).

Trial court did not err in dismissing the motion to suppress since the defendants' motion to suppress failed to state any facts alleging why the search and seizure were illegal. Davis v. State, 203 Ga. App. 315, 416 S.E.2d 789, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 905, 416 S.E.2d 789 (1992).

Motion to suppress evidence found during a search was insufficient since the defendant stated in the defendant's motion that the warrant pursuant to which the search was conducted was invalid, but did not provide any facts to support such conclusion. Powles v. State, 248 Ga. App. 4, 545 S.E.2d 153 (2001).

Order suppressing evidence gathered at a traffic stop was reversed after the defendant's motion asked the trial court to suppress the fruits of a warrantless search of the defendant's home when there had been no search of the defendant's home, and the motion did not raise an issue of whether the officer had a valid basis to justify a traffic stop. The motion was so grossly inapplicable to the facts of the case that the motion did not give the state reasonable notice of the motion's nature and scope. The officer had a reasonable, articulable suspicion to justify an investigative traffic stop of the defendant solely on the basis of information from a dispatcher who reported that a citizen saw the defendant's vehicle, with the defendant's license number, being driven erratically, by a driver who appeared intoxicated. State v. Gomez, 266 Ga. App. 423, 597 S.E.2d 509 (2004).

Sufficient facts were contained in a motion which revealed the date of the stop, the identity of the person stopped, the identity of the officer who made the stop, the law enforcement organization with which the officer was affiliated, the nature of the stop, the offenses charged, and the conclusion that no violations occurred which would justify the stop. State v. Goodman, 220 Ga. App. 169, 469 S.E.2d 327 (1996).

Consideration of brief filed with motion. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b) does not preclude consideration of the defendant's brief, which was filed contemporaneously with the motion to suppress, as part of the motion. Stanley v. State, 206 Ga. App. 125, 424 S.E.2d 90 (1992).

Procedurally defective motion to suppress. — Motion to suppress which is procedurally defective is properly overruled, and a motion to suppress which is made orally is procedurally defective and a denial thereof is authorized. Graves v. State, 135 Ga. App. 921, 219 S.E.2d 633 (1975).

Must object to defective intoxication test. — If the defendant previously has not moved to suppress the evidence, results of a defectively administered intoxication test are inadmissible over objection. State v. Johnston, 160 Ga. App. 71, 286 S.E.2d 47 (1981), aff'd, 249 Ga. 413, 291 S.E.2d 543 (1982).

Objection by codefendant's counsel not a motion to suppress. — Objection to further testimony by a police officer on the grounds that the officer unlawfully initiated a traffic stop was improper as a motion to suppress tangible evidence because the objection was not made in writing as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b), and the objection was made by the codefendant's counsel rather than the defendant's counsel. Dunn v. State, 262 Ga. App. 643, 586 S.E.2d 352 (2003).

Requirements for Motion (Cont'd)

Claim of error in denying suppression motion waived. — Defendant waived the defendant's claim that the defendant's suppression motion was improperly denied by affirmatively stating at trial that the defendant had no objection to the admission of the evidence; when a prior motion to suppress has been filed, merely failing to object to the admission of the evidence during the subsequent trial does not constitute a waiver of the grounds asserted in the motion, but affirmatively stating there is no objection to admission of the evidence in effect concedes the point. Mew v. State, 267 Ga. App. 454, 600 S.E.2d 397 (2004).

Contents of motion adequate. — Motion containing facts showing the date of the search, the general location, the identity of the person searched, the organization with which the officer making the search was affiliated, that defendant did not consent to the search in fact, and the conclusion that the search was unsupported by probable cause or articulable suspicion was sufficient to require the state to meet the state's allegations with proof to the contrary. Hill v. State, 222 Ga. App. 839, 476 S.E.2d 634 (1996).

Motions to suppress that established the type of searches (Terry stops-and-frisks) and identified the legal issues raised (whether the stops-and-frisks were authorized by reasonable suspicion and whether the resulting arrests were supported by probable cause) put the state on notice as to the witnesses whose testimony was required; failure of the motions to identify the officers conducting the stops-and-frisks, and to more fully detail the attendant facts, was not fatal to the sufficiency of the motions. Dean v. State, 246 Ga. App. 263, 540 S.E.2d 246 (2000).

Defendant's motion to suppress met the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b) because the motion was sufficient to put the state on notice that all of the searches the state conducted pursuant to a warrant were at issue, that it was necessary to have present at the hearing the affiant detective, and that the legal issue for resolution was the sufficiency of the affidavit. Glenn v. State, 288 Ga. 462, 704 S.E.2d 794 (2010).

Motion not applicable to questions on chain of custody. — Motion to suppress may properly be directed only to the issue of whether evidence has been illegally obtained or seized, not to the issue of chain of custody. Kelly v. State, 145 Ga. App. 780, 245 S.E.2d 20 (1978).

Issue of incorrect address not raised in motion to suppress. — Trial court erred in granting the motion to suppress when the defendant had ample opportunity to review the warrant in advance of the hearing and assert an incorrect address as a defect in the defendant's motion to suppress, and since the issue was not raised in the motion to suppress and the state was not properly placed on notice that this issue would be raised at the hearing on the motion, the objection must be deemed waived. State v. Armstrong, 203 Ga. App. 159, 416 S.E.2d 537 (1992).

2. Writing

Legislative intent to require motion in writing. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 clearly evinces the legislative intent that suppression, or exclusion, of the evidence must be founded upon motion, or objection, in writing. Brannen v. State, 117 Ga. App. 69, 159 S.E.2d 476 (1967).

Written motion to suppress required. — Before a hearing is held on a motion to suppress, the motion must be in writing and state facts showing that the search and seizure were unlawful. Hayes v. State, 168 Ga. App. 94, 308 S.E.2d 227 (1983); Young v. State, 225 Ga. App. 208, 483 S.E.2d 636 (1997).

Appellate court declined to consider the defendant's challenge to the denial of a motion to suppress because the defendant failed to present the arguments to the trial court in the written motion to suppress. Wise v. State, 321 Ga. App. 39, 740 S.E.2d 850 (2013).

No objection required when motion in limine obtained. — As a preliminary matter, because the defendant obtained a ruling on a motion in limine, the defendant was not under an obligation to object when the state cross-examined the defendant concerning the defendant's sexual history and habits. Having obtained a ruling in limine, it was not necessary for the defendant to raise an objection at trial when the evidence was introduced in order to preserve this issue for appellate review. Herring v. State, 288 Ga. App. 169, 653 S.E.2d 494 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0448, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 205 (Ga. 2008).

Oral motion in limine. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 applies only to motions to suppress evidence made by criminal defendants, and the state's oral motion in limine was therefore not required to be in writing. Brown v. State, 192 Ga. App. 864, 386 S.E.2d 734 (1989).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's oral motion made during a trial to suppress evidence obtained from a search of the defendant's person. Belcher v. State, 230 Ga. App. 235, 496 S.E.2d 306 (1998); Bellamy v. State, 243 Ga. App. 575, 530 S.E.2d 243 (2000).

Oral motion inadequate. — Because the defendant's oral motion to suppress was made on the first day of trial, the motion failed to satisfy the requirements of subsection (b) of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 and Uniform Superior Court Rule 31.1; therefore, the trial court did not err in denying the motion. Copeland v. State, 272 Ga. 816, 537 S.E.2d 78 (2000).

Defendant's oral objection at trial to the admission of alleged cocaine seized from the defendant's person based on Fourth Amendment grounds was not reviewable because the defendant failed to file a written motion to suppress the evidence as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30. Nelson v. State, 305 Ga. App. 65, 699 S.E.2d 66 (2010).

Exception allowing oral motion. — Only when the movant becomes aware of the illegal seizure at such a late hour that a written motion to suppress is impossible should an oral motion to suppress and a hearing thereon be entertained. Rucker v. State, 250 Ga. 371, 297 S.E.2d 481 (1982).

Writing and timely filing required. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 requires that a motion to suppress evidence be in writing and filed before arraignment. When the defendant's motion did neither, the defendant failed to preserve the right to challenge the validity of the search of the defendant's motel room. Jackson v. State, 252 Ga. App. 268, 555 S.E.2d 908 (2001).

When the defendant waited until trial to raise the argument that a shotgun was illegally seized from the defendant's house, the motion to suppress was not timely under the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 and Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.1, so the issue was waived both for trial and on appeal. Cranford v. State, 275 Ga. App. 474, 621 S.E.2d 470 (2005).

In a prosecution for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, because the defendant failed to voice an objection at trial regarding an inaccuracy in a search warrant affidavit as to the precise location of the alleged cocaine sale which served as the basis of the charge, but instead raised the issue for the first time in a motion for a new trial, the objection was late; thus, the appellate court's review of the issue was waived. Jackson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 368, 636 S.E.2d 34 (2006).

Defendant waived the issue of suppression of drug evidence because the defendant did not file a written motion to suppress under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b) and neither objected to the admission of the drug evidence nor to the deputy's testimony regarding the search. Ferrell v. State, 312 Ga. App. 122, 717 S.E.2d 705 (2011).

Compelling trial court to put oral suppression motion in writing. — Because the state failed to request that the trial court put an oral order of suppression in writing, and show that the trial court refused to do so, the state did not have the right to appeal from that order; moreover, while the state could have filed a mandamus petition seeking to require the court to put the oral order in writing, the state did not seek that relief. State v. Morrell, 281 Ga. 152, 635 S.E.2d 716 (2006).

Writing held adequate. — See State v. Blosfield, 165 Ga. App. 111, 299 S.E.2d

Requirements for Motion (Cont'd)

588 (1983); State v. Jones, 245 Ga. App. 763, 538 S.E.2d 819 (2000).

Under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b), a defendant waived the right to challenge the lack of a search warrant because the issue had not been raised in the defendant's written motion to suppress, which was premised on the existence of a search warrant. The defendant could have ascertained prior to the motion hearing whether a warrant existed; moreover, even if the defendant was validly surprised at the motion hearing to learn for the first time that no search warrant was issued, the defendant did not request a continuance to amend the motion to suppress to be in accordance with § 17-5-30(b). Young v. State, 282 Ga. 735, 653 S.E.2d 725 (2007).

3. Timely Motion

Motion to suppress must be made at trial. Hawes v. State, 240 Ga. 327, 240 S.E.2d 833 (1977), but see Stewart v. State, 232 Ga. App. 565, 502 S.E.2d 502 (1998).

Motion to suppress must be filed prior to trial. — Although O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 does not provide for a specific time when a motion to suppress must be filed, it is clear that the motion shall be filed before trial since the motion's purpose is to avoid the interruption of the trial for the purpose of investigating the collateral issue of the legality of the means by which the evidence was obtained. Stansifer v. State, 166 Ga. App. 785, 305 S.E.2d 481 (1983), but see Hatcher v. State, 224 Ga. App. 747, 482 S.E.2d 443 (1997), and Stewart v. State, 232 Ga. App. 565, 502 S.E.2d 502 (1998); Burch v. State, 213 Ga. App. 392, 444 S.E.2d 370 (1994); Tucker v. State, 222 Ga. App. 517, 474 S.E.2d 696 (1996).

Initial motion should be at trial, not on habeas corpus. — If the search warrants were illegal for any reason and the evidence obtained thereunder inadmissible on the prisoners' trials, this can be adjudicated upon such trial, rather than authorize the prisoner's discharge on habeas corpus in advance of the trial. Carlin v. Nevil, 227 Ga. 359, 180 S.E.2d 740 (1971).

Habeas corpus review test. — Habeas corpus review test on U.S. Const., amend. 4 claims is whether a defendant had a full and fair opportunity to litigate; not whether the claim was, in fact, litigated. Jacobs v. Hopper, 238 Ga. 461, 233 S.E.2d 169 (1977).

Habeas corpus review test for federal courts is adopted for state habeas corpus review: a court need not apply the exclusionary rule on habeas review of a claim under U.S. Const., amend. 4 absent a showing that the prisoner was denied a full and fair litigation of that claim at trial and on direct review. Jacobs v. Hopper, 238 Ga. 461, 233 S.E.2d 169 (1977).

Exclusionary rule does not affect evidence admitted without timely challenge. — Requirement that all evidence obtained by searches and seizures in violation of U.S. Const., amend. 4 is inadmissible in state courts and is only an exclusionary rule which does not affect the competence of evidence admitted without timely challenge. Graves v. State, 135 Ga. App. 921, 219 S.E.2d 633 (1975).

Untimely but properly challenged evidence competent if rules satisfied. — Evidence which is merely subject to exclusion but is not timely and properly challenged is competent evidence, provided, of course, that the applicable rules of evidence are satisfied. Touchstone v. State, 121 Ga. App. 602, 174 S.E.2d 450 (1970).

Defendant unaware of grounds for motion. — This law is similar to Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(e) which expressly provides that the motion shall be made before trial or hearing unless opportunity therefor did not exist or the defendant was not aware of the grounds for the motion. Thomas v. State, 118 Ga. App. 359, 163 S.E.2d 850 (1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 943, 89 S. Ct. 1273, 22 L. Ed. 2d 477 (1969).

Motion to suppress must be made prior to written plea. — Although there is no time limit set out in O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 for the filing of a motion to suppress, the motion must be made before the defendant enters defendant's written plea. Waller v. State, 251 Ga. 124, 303 S.E.2d 437 (1983), rev'd on other grounds, 467 U.S. 39, 104 S. Ct. 2210, 81 L. Ed. 2d 31 (1984); Sartin v. State, 201 Ga. App. 612, 411 S.E.2d 582 (1991); Ellis v. State, 216 Ga. App. 232, 453 S.E.2d 810 (1995).

Motion to suppress prior to joining issues. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 is limited in time only so far as the statute requires filing of a motion to suppress prior to joining of issues. State v. Shead, 160 Ga. App. 260, 286 S.E.2d 767 (1981).

Motion held untimely. — After the defendant learned of a pistol's seizure ten days before the defendant announced ready to proceed to trial at the call of the trial calendar but nevertheless did not file the defendant's motion to suppress the weapon until the day after the defendant announced ready, the motion was untimely. Highfield v. State, 198 Ga. App. 530, 402 S.E.2d 125 (1991).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress because the motion was untimely filed, only six days before trial in the matter. Baseler v. State, 213 Ga. App. 822, 446 S.E.2d 250 (1994).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by failing to grant the defendant's request to present additional evidence in support of the defendant's motion to suppress which was made after the original hearing and ruling denying the motion. Pickens v. State, 225 Ga. App. 792, 484 S.E.2d 731 (1997).

Motion filed five weeks after arraignment was properly dismissed as untimely. Stewart v. State, 232 Ga. App. 565, 502 S.E.2d 502 (1998).

Failure to timely file results in waiver. — Trial court did not err in dismissing as untimely a defendant's motion in limine to suppress unlawfully obtained evidence with regard to a cocaine trafficking charge. The defendant waived formal arraignment and pled not guilty, and more than three months later the defendant filed a motion in limine to suppress evidence, arguing that both the cocaine and testimony regarding the cocaine should be excluded on the ground that both were products of an unlawful search; the defendant was unable to circumvent the requirements of Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.1 by couching the defendant's motion to suppress as a motion in limine; and the defendant's failure to file a timely motion to suppress waived any right to claim that the search was unconstitutional. Fraser v. State, 283 Ga. App. 477, 642 S.E.2d 129 (2007), overruled in part by State v. Lane, 308 Ga. 10, 838 S.E.2d 808 (2020).

Untimely objection amounts to waiver. — Failure to interpose a timely motion to suppress in compliance with Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) amounts to a waiver of the constitutional guaranty against illegal search and seizure in respect to the search and seizure in question. Brannen v. State, 117 Ga. App. 69, 159 S.E.2d 476 (1967); Watts v. State, 117 Ga. App. 558, 161 S.E.2d 516 (1968); Lane v. State, 118 Ga. App. 688, 165 S.E.2d 474 (1968); West v. State, 120 Ga. App. 390, 170 S.E.2d 698 (1969); Bissel v. State, 126 Ga. App. 61, 189 S.E.2d 701 (1972); Wilson v. State, 126 Ga. App. 145, 190 S.E.2d 128 (1972); Foskey v. State, 126 Ga. App. 268, 190 S.E.2d 556 (1972); Hawes v. State, 240 Ga. 327, 240 S.E.2d 833 (1977); Wilcoxen v. State, 162 Ga. App. 800, 292 S.E.2d 905 (1982).

There is a waiver of defects in the affidavit upon which the search warrant was issued, or in the warrant itself, or in the absence of a warrant authorizing the search if no timely motion to suppress is filed. Reid v. State, 129 Ga. App. 660, 200 S.E.2d 456 (1973).

Oral objection to evidence obtained by unlawful search and seizure is not sufficient unless preceded by suppression of the evidence pursuant to a motion to suppress in compliance with Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30). Failure to interpose a timely motion to suppress in compliance with that section amounts to a waiver of the constitutional guaranty in respect to the search and seizure in question. Graves v. State, 135 Ga. App. 921, 219 S.E.2d 633 (1975).

Federal habeas petitioner did not offer any compelling reason to disturb the Georgia court's conclusion that the petitioner's suppression motion was untimely filed and, therefore, waived. Holton v. Newsome, 750 F.2d 1513 (11th Cir. 1985).

In a prosecution on four counts of child molestation, the defendant's failure to file a timely motion to suppress waived the right to claim that the seized items were inadmissible as fruits of the poisonous tree. Walker v. State, 277 Ga. App. 485, 627 S.E.2d 54 (2006).

State's failure to object to timely filed motion. — State waived the state's claim that the defendant's motion to suppress, filed two months after arraignment, was untimely as the state failed to raise the issue or object to the motion on that basis before the trial court; moreover, the state's failure to object was particularly significant in light of the express provision in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-110 allowing the trial court to extend the time for filing. Hicks v. State, 287 Ga. App. 105, 650 S.E.2d 767 (2007).

Waiver of judge's error in denying hearing. — It is procedural error for the trial court to deny the appellant a hearing upon the appellant's motion to suppress outside the presence of the jury, but if no objection is made to its admission, the appellant waives any objection which might be urged, including those contained in the written motion to suppress. Yarbrough v. State, 151 Ga. App. 474, 260 S.E.2d 369 (1979).

Whether warrant void or otherwise defective. — Requirement for timely objection to introduction of illegally seized evidence applies with equal force to a warrant that is void as it does to a warrant that is defective for some other reason. Butler v. State, 134 Ga. App. 131, 213 S.E.2d 490 (1975).

Later objection barred. — Failure to comply with O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b) when evidence is first introduced bars a later objection to the admission of such evidence. Gilreath v. State, 247 Ga. 814, 279 S.E.2d 650 (1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 984, 102 S. Ct. 2258, 72 L. Ed. 2d 862 (1982).

Failure to request permission to file late motion. — Trial court did not err by refusing to consider a defendant's motion to suppress which was untimely filed on the day of trial since no written extension for a late filing was requested prior to trial. Thompson v. State, 195 Ga. App. 18, 392 S.E.2d 732 (1990).

Discretion of trial court. — Defendants failed to show an abuse of the trial court's discretion in denying the request for leave to file the untimely motion to suppress. Davis v. State, 203 Ga. App. 315, 416 S.E.2d 789, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 905, 416 S.E.2d 789 (1992).

Objection must be raised when evidence offered. — To be valid, an objection to evidence based on grounds other than unlawful search and seizure must be voiced at the time the evidence is actually offered. Hawkins v. State, 117 Ga. App. 70, 159 S.E.2d 440 (1967).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress a written statement given to police during the course of a pretrial interview, despite that at the time the statement was given, the defendant invoked a right to counsel, as a defense objection to the admission of the statement on this ground came after the statement was already admitted, and was thus untimely. Copeland v. State, 281 Ga. App. 656, 637 S.E.2d 90 (2006).

Waiver results upon failure to make timely objection. — When testimony is tendered, an objection must be made affording the court the opportunity to rule upon the admissibility of the testimony upon the grounds then urged and in the context of the matter as the matter then appears, and failure to make a timely objection to testimony when the testimony is offered results in a waiver of any objection that might have been urged. Childers v. State, 130 Ga. App. 555, 203 S.E.2d 874 (1974).

Hearing Procedure

Requirement to hold hearing preserved by objection. — After a motion to suppress has been filed, failure to hold the mandatory hearing is error, and the error is preserved by objection to admission of the evidence sought to be suppressed. Gray v. State, 145 Ga. App. 293, 243 S.E.2d 687 (1978).

Trial court required to address tainted fruit rule. — Trial court erred by granting the defendant's motion to suppress after concluding that the state failed to prove the legality of the defendant's arrest for failing to tender the open container ordinance as the trial court was required to go on to address and rule on whether the drugs discovered during the subsequent search of the backpack in the vehicle constituted tainted fruit of the arrest based on the officers' testimony regarding the smell of marijuana. State v. Alford, 347 Ga. App. 208, 818 S.E.2d 668 (2018).

Motion sufficient to put state on notice of grounds. — Defendant's motion to suppress was not insufficient to put the state on notice of the specific grounds of the motion; although the motion did not state the investigating officer's name, the motion stated the indictment number and alleged that a search was illegal and that probable cause was lacking. State v. Owens, 285 Ga. App. 370, 646 S.E.2d 340 (2007).

If state fails to show search validity at hearing, even imperfect motion granted. — If the state failed to produce any evidence proving the validity of a search and seizure at a hearing, a trial court should grant a motion to suppress, whether or not the sufficiency of the motion made complies with the law and amounts to a legal motion to suppress the evidence. State v. McNutt, 146 Ga. App. 369, 246 S.E.2d 402 (1978).

State need not prove lawful search if no valid attack. — Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) does not require that the state present evidence of the legality of a search in the absence of a valid attack thereon. Jacobs v. State, 133 Ga. App. 812, 212 S.E.2d 468 (1975).

State bears burden of proving warrantless search lawful. — Under a warrantless search and seizure, the burden of proving that the search and seizure was lawful is upon the state. Phillips v. State, 167 Ga. App. 260, 305 S.E.2d 918 (1983).

State's satisfaction of burden to show that search with warrant lawful. — When a motion to suppress is made on one of the three grounds of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(a)(2), challenging the validity of a search and seizure with a warrant, the burden of showing that the search and seizure was lawful is on the state; this burden is satisfied by production of the warrant and the warrant's supporting affidavit, and by showing that the warrant is not subject to the statutory challenge alleged. State v. Slaughter, 252 Ga. 435, 315 S.E.2d 865 (1984).

When a motion to suppress based on a challenge to the warrant is not based upon one of the three statutory grounds of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(a)(2), the state's burden is satisfied by production of the warrant and the warrant's supporting affidavit; the burden then shifts to the defendant to show the invalidity of the warrant on nonstatutory grounds. State v. Slaughter, 252 Ga. 435, 315 S.E.2d 865 (1984).

Error in placing burden of going forward on the defendant in a drug prosecution who challenged the validity of the search warrant under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 was harmless since the warrant and affidavit were attached to the order and the detective who requested issuance of the warrant was the only witness at the hearing. Bowman v. State, 205 Ga. App. 347, 422 S.E.2d 239 (1992).

State failed to prove lawfulness of encounter. — After defendant's O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30(b) motion to suppress put the state on notice of the defendant's contention that an initial police encounter was unlawful and the state did not prove the lawfulness, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Burrell v. State, 261 Ga. App. 677, 583 S.E.2d 521 (2003).

When state fails to prove municipal ordinance as basis for search. — If the state fails to prove the existence of a municipal ordinance by introduction of a certified copy of the ordinance, the ordinance, whose existence the court may not judicially recognize, cannot serve as a basis for upholding the arrest and incident search. Owens v. State, 153 Ga. App. 525, 265 S.E.2d 856 (1980), overruled on other grounds, State v. Thackston, 289 Ga. 412, 716 S.E.2d 517 (2011).

Motion must indicate legal basis challenging traffic stop. — Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress based on an improper traffic stop as nothing in the motion to suppress indicated that the defendant was challenging the legal basis for the traffic stop. State v. Conley, 273 Ga. App. 855, 616 S.E.2d 174 (2005).

Burden of persuasion remains. — Burden of proof referred to in Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) is a burden of persuasion, and does not shift during the course of the motion hearing even though the burden of producing evidence may shift back and forth. Pope v. State, 134 Ga. App. 455, 214 S.E.2d 686 (1975).

Challenger of a search warrant does not have the burden of proving the warrant's invalidity; once a motion to suppress has been filed, the burden of proving the lawfulness of the warrant is on the state and that burden never shifts. Davis v. State, 266 Ga. 212, 465 S.E.2d 438 (1996).

Since the search warrant and affidavit at issue are not in the record nor before the trial court, the burden of production never shifts to the defendant to produce evidence regarding the allegedly false or omitted information and the trial court erred in denying the motion to suppress. Watts v. State, 274 Ga. 373, 552 S.E.2d 823 (2001).

When the defendant's conviction was reversed because the state did not meet the state's burden of production as to the defendant's suppression motion challenging the sufficiency of a search warrant affidavit when the state produced neither the affidavit nor the resulting search warrant, this was a ruling on the merits which was res judicata, and the defendant's plea in bar in the trial court, on remand, seeking to prevent the state from relitigating the issue, should have been granted. Watts v. State, 261 Ga. App. 230, 582 S.E.2d 186 (2003).

Trial judge is to resolve questions of fact pertaining to the admissibility of evidence subject to a motion to suppress. Gilliland v. State, 139 Ga. App. 399, 228 S.E.2d 314 (1976), vacated on other grounds, 238 Ga. 542, 233 S.E.2d 801 (1977).

Findings of fact not required. — There is no authority which requires a trial judge to make findings of fact after a hearing on a motion to suppress, if the hearing on the motion, including arguments of counsel, was recorded and transcribed verbatim and is included in the record and transcript accompanying the appeal. Shirley v. State, 166 Ga. App. 456, 304 S.E.2d 468 (1983).

Trial judge's decision on facts and credibility assumed correct. — Trial court's decision on questions of fact and credibility at a suppression hearing must be accepted unless clearly erroneous. Williams v. State, 151 Ga. App. 833, 261 S.E.2d 720 (1979); McShan v. State, 155 Ga. App. 518, 271 S.E.2d 659 (1980).

If there is a conflict in the evidence on the motion to suppress, the ruling of the trial court will be upheld if there is evidence to authorize a finding in support of the court's order. State v. Medders, 153 Ga. App. 680, 266 S.E.2d 331 (1980).

Judge hearing the motion to suppress is the trier of fact, and the judge's factual conclusion that there are no exigent circumstances, if supported by evidence, is controlling, even though the set of circumstances which ended with the search began with the stopping of a moving vehicle. State v. Watts, 154 Ga. App. 789, 270 S.E.2d 52 (1980).

On appeal of the denial of a motion to suppress, the evidence is to be construed most favorably to the findings and judgment made and the trial court's findings must be adopted unless determined to be clearly erroneous. Thomas v. State, 203 Ga. App. 529, 417 S.E.2d 353, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 908, 417 S.E.2d 353 (1992).

Judge may admit hearsay to show how search conducted. — Judge may admit testimony on hearing of a motion to suppress, though hearsay, showing how or why the search was made. Jones v. State, 131 Ga. App. 699, 206 S.E.2d 601 (1974).

Judge may admit hearsay to show probable cause. — In a hearing on a motion to suppress, there is no inhibition against hearsay evidence in the showing of probable cause in an affidavit for obtaining a search warrant. Lloyd v. State, 139 Ga. App. 625, 229 S.E.2d 106 (1976).

Judge may consider matters not introduced. — Hearing is analogous to one on a motion for summary judgment in that the court may consider a wide variety of matters which need not be "introduced" to the judge. Merritt v. State, 121 Ga. App. 832, 175 S.E.2d 890 (1970).

Defendant requesting judge trial waives right to jury determination of search legality. — If appellant decides to have the appellant's case tried before a judge alone, the appellant effectively waives the appellant's right to submit to a jury the question of the legality of a search. Aycock v. State, 142 Ga. App. 755, 236 S.E.2d 863 (1977).

Waiver of hearing before jury on motion means no harmful error. — If the defendant waived any objection regarding a hearing before a jury on the motion to suppress, there was no harmful error in having a judge decide the issue alone. Lloyd v. State, 139 Ga. App. 625, 229 S.E.2d 106 (1976).

Error if judge requires jury. — If the trial judge in effect compels that the hearing be held before a jury, then error results. Lloyd v. State, 139 Ga. App. 625, 229 S.E.2d 106 (1976).

Section provides way to record issues for appeal of trial judge's ruling. — Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) provides the defendant a full and fair opportunity to have claims under U.S. Const., amend. 4 considered prior to the defendant's trial, and the law provides a method by which a defendant may secure a record on these issues that will enable a court, on direct appeal, to review the trial court's ruling. Jacobs v. Hopper, 238 Ga. 461, 233 S.E.2d 169 (1977).

Violation of motion to suppress in jury's presence. — Although receipt of evidence on a motion to suppress in the presence of jury constitutes a statutory violation, it does not rise to the level of denial of a constitutional right. State v. Peabody, 247 Ga. 580, 277 S.E.2d 668 (1981).

Evidence in support of motion heard in jury's presence. — When there has been a waiver of the right to have the evidence heard outside of the presence of the jury and no harm or prejudice has occurred to the defendants because the evidence was heard in the jury's presence, reversal of the conviction is unwarranted. State v. Peabody, 247 Ga. 580, 277 S.E.2d 668 (1981).

Motion to suppress outside jury's presence. — Failure to hear evidence on motion to suppress illegally obtained evidence outside of presence of jury is not per se reversible error. State v. Peabody, 247 Ga. 580, 277 S.E.2d 668 (1981).

Right to have evidence on motion presented outside jury's presence may be waived. — After the trial judge announces at commencement of trial that the judge will receive evidence on the motion to suppress during the course of the trial and the defense attorneys raised no objections, the defense effectively waived the complaint that has been denied the right to have this evidence presented outside of the jury's presence. State v. Peabody, 247 Ga. 580, 277 S.E.2d 668 (1981).

Commission of error by trial judge cannot be ignored by party. — Party cannot sit idly by, ignore the commission of error by the trial judge, take the party's chances on a favorable verdict, and then complain on appeal if the favorable verdict does not materialize. State v. Peabody, 247 Ga. 580, 277 S.E.2d 668 (1981).

Reintroduction of previously suppressed evidence in subsequent indictment. — If evidence has been suppressed as to another indictment, the evidence cannot be reintroduced as to a second indictment. Cook v. State, 141 Ga. App. 241, 233 S.E.2d 60 (1977).

Issues raised initially on appeal not considered. — Because the defendant on appeal abandoned the "second-tier" argument raised at the suppression hearing, and instead argued that the evidence should have been suppressed because the state failed to show that the officer was in the lawful discharge of any official duty during questioning, the latter argument was not addressed, as the argument was raised for the first time on appeal. Harper v. State, 285 Ga. App. 261, 645 S.E.2d 741 (2007).

Error to barring state to present evidence as sanction. — No constitutional provision or statute authorizes a trial court to bar the state from presenting evidence at a hearing on a motion to suppress as a sanction for prior prosecutorial conduct that the court deems to be dilatory in nature; because evidence exclusion is an extreme sanction and one not favored in the law, a trial court should exercise great caution before barring the state from showing why evidence the state seeks to admit at trial should not be suppressed. State v. Smith, 308 Ga. App. 345, 707 S.E.2d 560 (2011).

Appeals

Standard of review. — Trial court's ruling on a motion to suppress will be upheld if it is right for any reason. Strickland v. State, 265 Ga. App. 533, 594 S.E.2d 711 (2004).

On review, the Court of Appeals of Georgia will uphold a trial court's findings as to disputed facts in a motion to suppress unless clearly erroneous, whereas the trial court's application of the law to undisputed facts is subject to de novo appellate review. State v. Harden, 267 Ga. App. 381, 599 S.E.2d 329 (2004).

Because a trial court credited a police officer's testimony and decided the defendant's suppression motion on an issue of law rather than on any issue of conflicting evidence, the Court of Appeals correctly used the de novo standard of review. Silva v. State, 278 Ga. 506, 604 S.E.2d 171 (2004).

Failure to file written motion as waiver of appeal. — By failing to file a written motion to suppress evidence alleged to have been obtained by an illegal search and seizure as required by Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30), a defendant waives any objection to the evidence on that ground. Peppers v. State, 144 Ga. App. 662, 242 S.E.2d 330 (1978).

By failing to file a written motion to suppress, a defendant waives an appeal on that ground. Dennis v. State, 166 Ga. App. 715, 305 S.E.2d 443 (1983).

Trial court did not err by admitting the results of an intoximeter test even though the prosecution did not introduce evidence that the intoximeter had been calibrated since no objection was made at the time the evidence of the intoximeter results was offered. Although the defendant later attempted to exclude the evidence by an oral motion to suppress, such oral motions are not authorized. Jenkins v. State, 198 Ga. App. 843, 403 S.E.2d 859 (1991).

Trial court properly convicted a defendant of driving under the influence, less safe, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391(a)(1), after a bench trial as the evidence showed that: (1) an officer saw the defendant drunk earlier in the evening while responding to a dispute between neighbors; (2) the defendant admitted to drinking; and (3) the defendant admitted to driving the defendant's vehicle while drunk from the defendant's home to a lake home. Any error in the charging instrument was deemed waived on appeal as the defendant should have addressed any purported error by a special demurrer and, likewise, the defendant failed to file a motion to suppress challenging the officers' entry into the defendant's dwelling without authority; thus, that issue was deemed waived. Pruitt v. State, 289 Ga. App. 307, 656 S.E.2d 920 (2008).

Although the defendant filed a motion to suppress evidence seized from the two search warrants executed on the defendant's home on October 20, because the defendant did not move to suppress the evidence seized the day before, which was based on the defendant's consent to search the defendant's person and home, the defendant did not preserve that issue for appeal. Evans v. State, 842 S.E.2d 837, No. S20A0007, 2020 Ga. LEXIS 339 (May 4, 2020).

Failure to request ruling meant waiver on appeal. — Defendant waived the right to argue that the trial court erred in failing to grant a motion to suppress a pistol because the trial court did not make a ruling regarding suppression of the pistol, and the defendant never requested such a ruling; when the pistol was tendered into evidence at trial the defendant expressly stated that the defendant had no objections. Rockholt v. State, 291 Ga. 85, 727 S.E.2d 492 (2012).

Since the defendant did not challenge evidence based on an improper inventory search in the defendant's motion to suppress, the state was not given notice of the issue and the issue was waived on appeal. McBurrows v. State, 325 Ga. App. 303, 750 S.E.2d 436 (2013).

Failure to include trial transcript in record on appeal. — Because the defendant failed to include the trial transcript in the record for the appellate court to review an order denying the defendant's motion to suppress, the appellate court had to assume as a matter of law that the evidence presented supported the trial court's findings, and that the court properly exercised the court's judgment and discretion. Pittman v. State, 286 Ga. App. 415, 650 S.E.2d 302 (2007).

Failure to raise any issue in trial court challenging search warrant. — With regard to a defendant's convictions on multiple counts of rape and related crimes, because the defendant did not raise any issue in the trial court regarding either the existence of the warrant for the defendant's blood sample or the adequacy of the supporting affidavit, the appellate court found no merit to the defendant's contention on appeal that the denial of the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained from the warrant seeking a blood sample was in error. Baker v. State, 295 Ga. App. 162, 671 S.E.2d 206 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0571, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 183 (Ga. 2009).

Guilty plea waives suppression issue on appeal. — Because the defendant pled guilty to the charges of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, the defendant waived any claim that the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence of the firearm found in the defendant's residence. Stuart v. State, 267 Ga. App. 463, 600 S.E.2d 629 (2004).

If objection overruled, ruling appealable. — If the motion to suppress is denied, an objection may nevertheless be lodged on the ground that the testimony relates to property which was illegally seized during an unlawful search, and if the objection is overruled the ruling may become a proper subject of an enumeration of error on appeal. Reid v. State, 129 Ga. App. 660, 200 S.E.2d 456 (1973), criticized, Childers v. State, 130 Ga. App. 555, 203 S.E.2d 874 (1974).

Standard of review following grant of motion. — On appeal from a trial court's ruling on a motion to suppress, an appellate court construes the evidence most favorably to upholding the trial court's ruling, and the appellate court adopts the trial court's findings on disputed facts unless clearly erroneous. Since the trial court sits as the trier of fact, the court's findings are analogous to a jury verdict and will not be disturbed if there is any evidence to support the findings. Rucker v. State, 266 Ga. App. 293, 596 S.E.2d 639 (2004).

Standard of review of denial of a motion to suppress. — When reviewing a trial court's decision on a motion to suppress, an appellate court's responsibility is to ensure that there was a substantial basis for the decision; the evidence is construed most favorably to uphold the findings and judgment, and the trial court's findings on disputed facts and credibility are adopted unless the findings and judgment are clearly erroneous. Further, since the trial court sits as the trier of fact, its findings are analogous to a jury verdict and will not be disturbed if there is any evidence to support the findings. Williams v. State, 265 Ga. App. 489, 594 S.E.2d 704 (2004).

State's appeal. — State could not appeal from order compelling the return of seized property to the defendant after the state stipulated to not using the property at issue in the trial of the charges pending against the defendant, and the state did not challenge the trial court's ruling on defendant's motion to suppress. State v. McIntyre, 191 Ga. App. 565, 382 S.E.2d 669 (1989).

State's direct appeal of a judgment granting the defendant's motion to suppress evidence that the victims identified the defendant from photographic lineups was authorized by O.C.G.A. § 5-7-1(a)(4) because the state's direct appeal was from an order that: (1) was issued prior to the impaneling of a jury or the defendant being put in jeopardy; and (2) granted the defendant's motion to suppress evidence that was allegedly obtained in an illegal manner, and which the trial court deemed to be "meritorious" even apart from the prosecutor's supposed dilatory conduct; during the final hearing on the defendant's motion, the trial court refused to allow the state to present evidence to contest the motion as a means of sanctioning the state for prosecutorial conduct that the trial court deemed to be dilatory in nature, and the fact that the trial court was the direct cause of the state's inability to meet the state's burden of showing that the identifications were lawfully obtained in no way divested the court of appeals of jurisdiction to hear the state's appeal pursuant to § 5-7-1(a)(4). State v. Smith, 308 Ga. App. 345, 707 S.E.2d 560 (2011).

17-5-31. Quashing warrant or suppressing evidence because of technical irregularity not affecting substantial rights of accused.

No search warrant shall be quashed or evidence suppressed because of a technical irregularity not affecting the substantial rights of the accused.

History. — Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 12; Ga. L. 1990, p. 8, § 17.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Law disapproves of raising untimely technicalities in search warrant. — Raising of technical irregularities in a search warrant is not favored by the law, especially when the defendant has not timely exercised the defendant's statutory right by a motion to suppress evidence allegedly illegally seized. Parker v. State, 118 Ga. App. 837, 166 S.E.2d 41 (1968).

Failure to swear to return before proper official. — Absent a showing of prejudicial error to the defendant, the failure to swear to the return before an officer authorized to administer oaths is not such a fatal defect as to vitiate the search warrant. Waters v. State, 122 Ga. App. 808, 178 S.E.2d 770 (1970).

Failure to swear when affidavit signed. — If the affiant was duly sworn, the failure to give a separate oath when the affidavit of probable cause was signed cannot be held to have undermined the warrant. State v. Penansky, 140 Ga. App. 405, 231 S.E.2d 152 (1976).

Omission of time of issuance. — When officers have a warrant and serve the warrant when the officers arrive to make the search, an omission on the warrant of the time of issuance is a technical irregularity not affecting the substantial rights of the accused which would not require suppression of the evidence seized. Merritt v. State, 121 Ga. App. 832, 175 S.E.2d 890 (1970).

Typographical errors. — Since the affidavit and warrant were all before the magistrate at the same time on the same date, the trial court correctly found that any errors as to the time the affidavit and warrant were signed were typographical and not so material as to destroy the integrity of the affidavit or the validity of the warrant. Carlton v. State, 251 Ga. App. 339, 554 S.E.2d 318 (2001).

Although a typographical error in the search warrant for the defendant's residence indicated the wrong street number of the home, when the defendant was named in the warrant and given the level of descriptive detail that matched the searched premises, as well as the officer's actions to verify that the defendant lived at the residence, the description of the premises to be searched was sufficiently exact to pass muster; accordingly, denial of suppression pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-31 was not error. Lester v. State, 278 Ga. App. 247, 628 S.E.2d 674 (2006).

Affidavit in support of the search warrant was not legally insufficient to establish probable cause when the affidavit identified another individual as the suspected shooter in one paragraph of a six-page affidavit because the investigating officer testified that it was a typographical error and the defendant was correctly named on the warrant and identified as the suspect throughout the majority of the affidavit. Carson v. State, 314 Ga. App. 515, 724 S.E.2d 821 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file motions to suppress search warrants for the two recovered cell phones and the information obtained therefrom because, although the warrants erroneously stated the date of the murder as November 6, 2014 rather than November 6, 2013, mere typographical or clerical errors did not ordinarily provide a basis to suppress the evidence; and, even if the error in the warrants was deemed not to be purely typographical or clerical, and the extracted data outside the permissible scope of the warrants, the defendant did not claim, much less show, any specific resulting prejudice. Dent v. State, 303 Ga. 110, 810 S.E.2d 527 (2018).

Incorrect caption on search warrant. — Alleged "irregularities" as to time of issuance of the warrant and the incorrect caption on the search warrant all fall within the category of a technical irregularity not affecting the substantial rights of the accused. Birge v. State, 143 Ga. App. 632, 239 S.E.2d 395 (1977).

Failure to put street address in clear warrant. — When a search warrant clearly authorized the search of the premises described in the caption, the failure to reflect the street address or description in the body of the warrant is a technical irregularity which did not affect the substantial rights of the defendants and did not authorize suppression of the evidence. Latimer v. State, 134 Ga. App. 372, 214 S.E.2d 390 (1975).

Incorrect street address invalidated warrant. — Search warrant containing the wrong street address was defective under both the federal and Georgia constitutions as the defect was not a mere technical irregularity under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-31 because it did not incorporate the affidavit and application and thus could not be construed with reference to them; furthermore, the warrant did not contain other descriptive elements that would allow an officer to locate the place with reasonable certainty. Thomas v. State, 287 Ga. App. 262, 651 S.E.2d 183 (2007).

Erroneous description of location technical irregularity because address and all other information correct. — When a search warrant affidavit incorrectly described the house to be searched as the second house on the right, when it was actually the third house on the right, this error was a technical irregularity which did not invalidate the affidavit or the warrant based on the affidavit because the warrant contained the house's complete and correct address, city, physical description, and the fact that the house did not face the street named in the address. Marshall v. State, 273 Ga. App. 17, 614 S.E.2d 169 (2005).

Because defendant's house trailer had no house number, description of trailer sufficient. — Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motion to suppress evidence based on an allegedly insufficiently particular description of the property to be searched in the warrants. The warrants described the defendant's trailer home, which had no house number on the home, and the home's curtilage on the property where the home was located. Price v. State, 303 Ga. App. 859, 694 S.E.2d 712 (2010).

Inventory does not affect suspect's rights. — Making and filing of an inventory following execution of a search warrant is merely a ministerial act not affecting the substantive rights of the accused. Manemann v. State, 147 Ga. App. 747, 250 S.E.2d 164 (1978).

Introduction of uncertified copy of search warrant. — Introduction of an uncertified copy of the search warrant in lieu of the original established no basis for excluding contraband discovered pursuant to the warrant, since the officer upon whose application the warrant had been issued testified at the trial, and there was no contention that the copy was not an exact duplicate of the original. Cayce v. State, 192 Ga. App. 97, 383 S.E.2d 648 (1989).

Execution of warrant after warrant's issuance but before police have physical possession of the warrant. — When (1) a search warrant, supported by probable cause, had properly issued before any search of the defendant's residence was conducted; (2) the police officers informed the resident of the premises of the existence of the warrant before the search; (3) the warrant arrived during the search and a copy was left with the resident at the conclusion of the search as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-25; and (4) there was no claim or indication that the officers exceeded the scope of the search authorized by the properly issued warrant, the trial court erred, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-31, in suppressing the warrant based on the officers' commencement of the search before having physical possession of the warrant because no substantial right of the defendant was affected by the execution of the warrant after the warrant's issuance but prior to the warrant's arrival at the scene. State v. Rocco, 255 Ga. App. 565, 566 S.E.2d 365 (2002).

One copy of warrant unsigned after magistrate finding. — When one of three copies of a search warrant was not signed but at least one copy was signed at the time the warrant was issued, the warrant is not invalid if the magistrate made a judicial finding of the existence of probable cause prior to issuing the warrant. Braden v. State, 135 Ga. App. 827, 219 S.E.2d 479 (1975).

Officer's failure to sign return of things seized. — Defect in the search warrant procedure wherein the officer executing the warrant failed to sign the "return of things seized" is not a fatal defect because of the absence of a showing of prejudicial error to the defendant. Vaughn v. State, 126 Ga. App. 252, 190 S.E.2d 609 (1972).

Failure to file affidavit or prove docket record of warrant. — Search warrant is not inadmissible because the officers failed to file the affidavit with the issuing court after the warrant was executed or because there was no evidence indicating that a docket record of the warrant was made as these are technical irregularities not affecting the substantial rights of the accused. Sampson v. State, 165 Ga. App. 833, 303 S.E.2d 77 (1983).

Absence of attesting officer's signature fatal. — In that the attesting officer's signature determines the validity of the affidavit and the search warrant, the signature's absence cannot be considered a mere technical irregularity. State v. Barnett, 136 Ga. App. 122, 220 S.E.2d 730 (1975).

Untimely return of warrant not fatal when no showing of prejudice. — Trial court properly refused to suppress blood and urine test records under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-31, although a written return of the warrant was not made in a timely fashion, as provided in O.C.G.A. § 17-5-29, because a defendant received a copy of the inventory of the medical records seized, and made no showing of prejudice as a result of the delayed filing. Stubblefield v. State, 302 Ga. App. 499, 690 S.E.2d 892 (2010).

Magistrate's failure to determine probable cause. — Failure on the part of the magistrate to make a judicial determination of the existence of probable cause, which is a sine qua non to the issuance of the warrant, is not a mere technical irregularity within the meaning of this section. Reid v. State, 129 Ga. App. 660, 200 S.E.2d 456 (1973).

Fact that a taped "affidavit" was not in written form when the affidavit was presented to the magistrate was a technical defect; accordingly, the court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence. Williams v. State, 188 Ga. App. 334, 373 S.E.2d 42 (1988).

Technical violations of duplicate warrant requirement. — Fact that the copy of the search warrant received by the defendant after the defendant provided a DNA sample was lacking the issuing judge's signature as well as the date and time of the original warrant's execution did not warrant suppression of the DNA evidence pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-31, as any violations of the failure to comply with the duplicate warrant requirement of

O.C.G.A. § 17-5-25 were technical at best; further, the defendant made no showing of prejudice or that any substantial rights were affected by such omissions. State v. Stafford, 277 Ga. App. 852, 627 S.E.2d 802 (2006).

Lack of jurisdiction results in nullity. — Whether to require or suppress evidence in a given situation is a responsibility of the judicial, not the legislative, branch of the government under the Constitution. Lack of jurisdiction to issue the warrant is not a mere technicality, but results in a nullity. Pruitt v. State, 123 Ga. App. 659, 182 S.E.2d 142 (1971).

17-5-32. Search and seizure of documentary evidence in possession of attorney; exclusion of illegally obtained evidence.

(a) As used in this Code section, the term "documentary evidence" includes but is not limited to writings, documents, blueprints, drawings, photographs, computer printouts, microfilms, X-rays, files, diagrams, ledgers, books, tapes, audio and video recordings, and papers of any type or description.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no search and seizure without a warrant shall be conducted and no search warrant shall be issued for any documentary evidence in the possession of an attorney who is not a criminal suspect, unless the application for the search warrant specifies that the place to be searched is in the possession or custody of an attorney and also shows that there is probable cause to believe that the documentary evidence will be destroyed or secreted in the event a search warrant is not issued. This Code section shall not impair the ability to serve search warrants in cases in which the search is directed against an attorney if there is probable cause to suspect such attorney has committed a crime. This Code section shall not impair the ability to serve subpoenas on nonsuspect attorneys.

(c) In any case in which there is probable cause to believe that documentary evidence will be destroyed or secreted if a search warrant is not issued, no search warrant shall be issued or be executed for any documentary evidence in the possession or custody of an attorney who is not a criminal suspect unless:

(1) At the time the warrant is issued the court shall appoint a special master to accompany the person who will serve the warrant. The special master shall be an attorney who is a member in good standing of the State Bar of Georgia and who has been selected from a list of qualified attorneys maintained by the State Bar of Georgia. Upon service of the warrant, the special master shall inform the party served of the specific items being sought and that the party shall have the opportunity to provide the items requested. If the party, in the judgment of the special master, fails to provide the items requested, the special master shall conduct a search for the items in the areas indicated in the search warrant;

(2) If the party who has been served states that an item or items should not be disclosed, such item or items shall be sealed by the special master and taken to the superior court for a hearing. At the hearing the party whose premises has been searched shall be entitled to raise any issues which may be raised pursuant to Code Section 17-5-30 as well as claims that the item or items are privileged or claims that the item or items are inadmissible because they were obtained in violation of this Code section. Any such hearing shall be held in the superior court;

(3) Any such warrant must, whenever practicable, be served during normal business hours. The law enforcement officer or prosecutor serving the warrant shall not participate in the search but may accompany the special master when the special master is conducting the search;

(4) Any such warrant must be served upon a party who appears to have possession or control of the items sought. If, after reasonable efforts, the party serving the warrant is unable to locate any such person, the special master shall seal and return to the court for determination by the court any items which appear to be privileged;

(5) Any such warrant shall be issued only by the superior court. At the time of applying for such a warrant, the law enforcement officer or prosecutor shall submit a written search plan designed to minimize the intrusiveness of the search. When the warrant is executed, the special master carrying out the search shall have a duty to make reasonable efforts to minimize the intrusiveness of the search.

(d) Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, evidence obtained in violation of this Code section shall be excluded and suppressed from the prosecution's case-in-chief or in rebuttal, and such evidence shall not be admissible either as substantive evidence or for impeachment purposes.

ARTICLE 3

DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY SEIZED

17-5-50. Property unlawfully obtained; rights of owner; hearing; admissibility of photographs in lieu of original property; representation of unknown or absent defendants; statements made by defendant or agent at trial.

(a) The clerk or person having charge of the property section for any police department, sheriff's office, or other law enforcement agency in this state shall enter in a suitable book a description of every article of property alleged to be stolen, embezzled, or otherwise unlawfully obtained and brought into the office or taken from the person of a prisoner and shall attach a number to each article and make a corresponding entry thereof.

(b)(1) Any person claiming ownership of such allegedly stolen, embezzled, or otherwise unlawfully obtained property may make application to the law enforcement agency for the return of such property. Upon such an application being filed, the clerk or person in charge of the property section shall serve upon the person from whom custody of the property was taken a copy of such application. Such person from whom custody of the property was taken shall have a reasonable opportunity to claim ownership of such property and to request a hearing on forms provided by the person in charge of the property section.

(2) If the person from whom custody of the property was taken fails to assert a claim to such property, upon any applicant furnishing satisfactory proof of ownership of such property and presentation of proper personal identification, the person in charge of the property section may deliver such property to the applicant. The person to whom property is delivered shall sign, under penalty of false swearing, a declaration of ownership, which shall be retained by the person in charge of the property section. Such declaration, absent any other proof of ownership, shall be deemed satisfactory proof of ownership for the purposes of this Code section; provided, however, that, in the case of motor vehicles, trailers, tractors, or motorcycles which are required to be registered with the state revenue commissioner, any such stolen vehicle shall be returned to the person evidencing ownership of such vehicle through a certificate of title, tag receipt, bill of sale, or other such evidence. The stolen vehicle shall be returned to the person evidencing ownership within two days after such person makes application for the return of such vehicle unless a hearing on the ownership of such vehicle is required under this Code section or unless law enforcement needs the stolen vehicle for further criminal investigation purposes. Prior to such delivery, such person in charge of the property section shall make and retain a complete photographic record of such property. Such delivery shall be without prejudice to the state or to the person from whom custody of the property was taken or to any other person who may have a claim against the property.

(3) If the person from whom custody of the property was taken asserts a claim to such property and requests a hearing, the court which examines the charge against the person accused of stealing, embezzling, or otherwise unlawfully obtaining the property, or the court before whom the trial is had for stealing, embezzling, or otherwise unlawfully obtaining the property shall conduct the hearing to determine the ownership of such property.

(4) The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to any contraband or property subject to forfeiture under any provision of law.

(c) Photographs, video tapes, or other identification or analysis of the property involved, duly identified in writing by the law enforcement officer originally taking custody of the property as accurately representing such property, shall be admissible at trial in lieu of the original property.

(d) In the case of unknown or unapprehended defendants or defendants willfully absent from the jurisdiction, the court shall have discretion to appoint a guardian ad litem to represent the interest of the unknown or absent defendants.

(e) Statements made by the defendant or a person representing the defendant at a hearing provided for in subsection (b) of this Code section shall not be admissible for use against the defendant at trial.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Section not restricted to claims between defendant and alleged owner. — Although O.C.G.A. § 17-5-50 would normally appear to be a procedure for the consideration of conflicting claims between a defendant in a criminal case and the person from whom property might have been stolen or illegally obtained, the statutory language does not restrict it solely to such use but provides a method by which the state and any civil claimants might resolve the claim between them and the defendant. Thus, there is no reason that when a defendant makes a request for the return of the defendant's property that other claimants might not then be heard through the use of this procedure. Recoba v. State, 167 Ga. App. 447, 306 S.E.2d 713 (1983) (decided prior to 1982 amendment).

One week's prior notice of hearing sufficient. — Telephonic or personal notice to an interested party at least one week prior to a hearing to be held on the return of funds seized in connection with an arrest for violating the Controlled Substances Act, O.C.G.A. § 16-13-1 et seq., is sufficient as a matter of due process and incurs an obligation in the party to inquire further into the matter. Recoba v. State, 167 Ga. App. 447, 306 S.E.2d 713 (1983) (decided prior to 1982 amendment).

Sovereign immunity. — State may assert the state's immunity from suit in an action brought pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-50 to recover a sum which the state has improperly released to another party. State v. Collins, 171 Ga. App. 225, 319 S.E.2d 84 (1984).

Admission into evidence of photographs. — When the defendant charged with armed robbery asserts error in the admission of photographs allegedly depicting money taken during the robbery and either found on the defendant's person or under the seat in the police car in which the defendant was seated after the defendant's apprehension, the trial court properly permitted the entry of the photographs into evidence, since the provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-50, on their face, do not establish any procedural prerequisites to the admission into evidence of photographs of any stolen, embezzled, or otherwise unlawfully obtained property that is or was in the custody of the police. McCoy v. State, 190 Ga. App. 258, 378 S.E.2d 888 (1989).

Fuel equipment used in theft of fuel was not contraband. — Because fuel equipment attached to the defendant's truck, and which had been used in the defendant's crime of theft of diesel fuel, did not constitute contraband per se and there was no statutory authority supporting retention by the sheriff of the equipment after the defendant was discharged under O.C.G.A. § 42-8-62(a); thus, the equipment was ordered returned to the defendant pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-54. Any device which is used as a weapon in the commission of any crime against any person or any attempt to commit any crime against any person, any weapon the possession or carrying of which constitutes a crime or delinquent act, and any weapon for which a person has been convicted of violating Code Section 16-11-126 are declared to be contraband and shall be forfeited in accordance with the procedures set forth in Chapter 16 of Title 9, notwithstanding the time frames set forth in Code Section 9-16-7.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Right of felon to dispose of gun collection. — Mere fact that the court could not return a seized gun collection to the defendant because the defendant had been convicted of a felony did not authorize the court to treat the gun collection as contraband subject to disposal as set forth in O.C.G.A. § 17-5-51. LoGiudice v. State, 164 Ga. App. 709, 297 S.E.2d 499 (1982), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 950, 104 S. Ct. 2152, 80 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1984).

Only one of six seized firearms subject to forfeiture. — When six firearms were seized from the defendant's home but only a reckless conduct charge against the defendant was due to the use of only one of the firearms seized, therefore, only this one firearm was contraband under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-51 and thus forfeited; the remaining guns were returned to the defendant. Holland v. State, 204 Ga. App. 22, 418 S.E.2d 400 (1992).

Sentence based on defendant's plea of nolo contendere constituted a conviction for carrying a concealed weapon within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-51, requiring forfeiture of a weapon used in the commission of a crime. State v. Pitts, 199 Ga. App. 493, 405 S.E.2d 115 (1991).

17-5-52. Disposition of weapons used in commission of crime or delinquent act involving possession; civil forfeiture.

When a final judgment is entered finding a defendant guilty of the commission or attempted commission of a crime against any person or guilty of the commission of a crime or delinquent act involving the illegal possession or carrying of a weapon, any device which was used as a weapon in the commission of the crime or delinquent act shall be turned over by the person having custody of the weapon or device to the sheriff, chief of police, or other executive officer of the law enforcement agency that originally confiscated the weapon or device when the weapon or device is no longer needed for evidentiary purposes. Within one year after receiving the weapon or device, the sheriff, chief of police, or other executive officer of the law enforcement agency shall return or sell the weapon as provided in Code Section 17-5-54, or if the weapon or device is subject to forfeiture, the procedures set forth in Chapter 16 of Title 9 shall be followed notwithstanding the time frames set forth in Code Section 9-16-7. A state attorney seeking forfeiture under this Code section shall commence civil forfeiture proceedings within 60 days of the entry of a final judgment as contemplated by this Code section; the remaining provisions of Chapter 16 of Title 9 shall be applicable.

17-5-52.1. Disposal of forfeited or abandoned firearms; innocent owners; auctions; record keeping; liability of government entities.

Repealed by Ga. L. 2015, p. 693, § 3-16/HB 233, effective July 1, 2015. See Editor's notes for applicability.

Code Commission notes. — Former Code Section 17-5-52.1 was repealed effective July 1, 2015, by Ga. L. 2015, p. 693, § 3-16/HB 233. However, Ga. L. 2015, p. 805, § 10/HB 492, effective July 1, 2015, purported to amend subsection (d) of the former Code section to read as follows:

"(d) If an innocent owner of a firearm cannot be located or after proper notification he or she fails to pay for the return of his or her firearm, if the political subdivision is:

"(1) A municipal corporation, it shall dispose of its firearms as provided for in Code Section 36 37 6; provided, however, that municipal corporations shall not have the right to reject any and all bids or to cancel any proposed sale of such firearms, and all sales shall be to persons who are licensed as firearms collectors, dealers, importers, or manufacturers under the provisions of 18 U.S.C. Section 921, et seq. and who are authorized to receive such firearms under the terms of such license. Any political subdivision which disposes of firearms shall use proceeds from the sale of a firearm as are necessary to cover the costs of administering this Code section, with any surplus to be transferred to the general fund of the political subdivision; or

"(2) Not a municipal corporation, the state custodial agency or the political subdivision shall dispose of its firearms by sale at public auction to persons who are licensed as firearms collectors, dealers, importers, or manufacturers under the provisions of 18 U.S.C. Section 921, et seq. and who are authorized to receive such firearms under the terms of such license. A state custodial agency shall retain only such proceeds as are necessary to cover the costs of administering this Code section, with any surplus to be transferred to the general fund of this state, provided that a state custodial agency may be reimbursed for any firearms formerly in use by the state custodial agency that are sold under this Code section." For effect of subsequent amendment of a repealed statute, see Lampkin v. Pike, 115 Ga. 827 (1902).

Editor's notes. — This Code section was based on Code 1981, § 17-5-52.1, enacted by Ga. L. 2012, p. 1285, § 4/SB 350; Ga. L. 2015, p. 5, § 17/HB 90; Ga. L. 2015, p. 805, § 10/HB 492.

Ga. L. 2015, p. 5, § 54(e)/HB 90, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "In the event of a conflict between a provision in Sections 1 through 53 of this Act and a provision of another Act enacted at the 2015 regular session of the General Assembly, the provision of such other Act shall control over the conflicting provision in Sections 1 through 53 of this Act to the extent of the conflict." Accordingly, the amendment to subsection (d) of this Code section by Ga. L. 2015, p. 5, § 17/HB 90, was not given effect.

Ga. L. 2015, p. 693, § 4-1/HB 233, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "This Act shall become effective on July 1, 2015, and shall apply to seizures of property for forfeiture that occur on or after that date. Any such seizure that occurs before July 1, 2015, shall be governed by the statute in effect at the time of such seizure."

17-5-53. Disposition of devices with historical or instructional value.

(a) After a forfeiture of a device used in a crime, in the event the director of the Division of Archives and History or the commissioner of public safety, in that order or priority, shall desire to receive and retain a device described in Code Section 17-5-51 for historical or instructional purposes of his or her division or department and gives written notice thereof to the sheriff, either prior to the sheriff's advertisement of the device for sale or within ten days thereafter, the sheriff shall forthwith deliver the device to the requesting division or department which shall retain the device for such purposes. A device delivered to either the division or the department in accordance with this Code section shall become the property of the state.

(b) This Code section shall prevail over Code Section 17-5-52.

17-5-54. Definitions; disposition of personal property in custody of law enforcement agency.

(a) As used in this Code section, the term:

(1) "Civil forfeiture proceeding" shall have the same meaning as set forth in Code Section 9-16-2.

(2) "Firearm" means any handgun, rifle, shotgun, or similar device or weapon which will or can be converted to expel a projectile by the action of an explosive or electrical charge.

(3) "Law enforcement agency" means a law enforcement agency of this state or a political subdivision of this state, including the Department of Natural Resources.

(4) "Rightful owner" means a person claiming ownership of property which is the subject of a crime or has been abandoned.

(b) This Code section shall not apply to:

(1) Personal property which is the subject of any civil forfeiture proceeding;

(2) Any property which is the subject of a disposition pursuant to Code Sections 17-5-50 through 17-5-53; and

(3) Any abandoned motor vehicle for which the provisions of Chapter 11 of Title 40 are applicable.

(c)(1) Except as provided in Chapter 16 of Title 9, Code Sections 17-5-55 and 17-5-56, and subsection (b) of this Code section, when a law enforcement agency assumes custody of any personal property which is the subject of a crime or has been abandoned, a disposition of such property shall be made in accordance with the provisions of this Code section.

(2) When a final verdict and judgment is entered finding a defendant guilty of the commission of a crime, any personal property used as evidence in the trial shall be returned to the rightful owner of the property within 30 days following the final judgment; provided, however, that if the judgment is appealed or if the defendant files a motion for a new trial and if photographs, videotapes, or other identification or analysis of the personal property will not be sufficient evidence for the appeal of the case or new trial of the case, such personal property shall be returned to the rightful owner within 30 days of the conclusion of the appeal or new trial, whichever occurs last.

(3) Any person claiming to be a rightful owner of property shall make an application to the entity holding his or her property and shall furnish satisfactory proof of ownership of such property and present personal identification. The person in charge of such property may return such property to the applicant. The person to whom property is delivered shall sign, under penalty of false swearing, a declaration of ownership, which shall be retained by the person in charge of the property. Such declaration, absent any other proof of ownership, shall be deemed satisfactory proof of ownership for the purposes of this Code section; provided, however, that with respect to motor vehicles, paragraph (3) of subsection (b) and subsection (f) of this Code section shall govern the return of motor vehicles.

(4) If more than one person claims ownership of property, a court with jurisdiction over the property shall conduct a hearing to determine the ownership of such property.

(d) After a period of 90 days following the final verdict and judgment, when personal property that is in the custody of a law enforcement agency was used as evidence in a criminal trial or was abandoned, it shall be subject to disposition as provided in subsection (e) of this Code section if the property is not a firearm and as provided in subsection (g) of this Code section if the property is a firearm if it is:

(1) No longer needed in a criminal investigation or for evidentiary purposes in accordance with Code Section 17-5-55 or 17-5-56;

(2) Not claimed pursuant to Code Section 17-5-50; and

(3) Not claimed pursuant to subsection (c) of this Code section.

(e) For any unclaimed personal property that is not a firearm, the sheriff, chief of police, or other executive officer of a law enforcement agency shall make application to the superior court for an order to retain, sell, or discard such property. In the application the officer shall state each item of personal property to be retained, sold, or discarded. Upon the superior court's granting an order for the law enforcement agency to retain such property, the law enforcement agency shall retain such property for official use. Upon the superior court's granting an order which authorizes that the property be discarded, the law enforcement agency shall dispose of the property as other salvage or nonserviceable equipment. Upon the superior court's granting an order for the sale of personal property, the officer shall provide for a notice to be placed once a week for four weeks in the legal organ of the county specifically describing each item and advising possible owners of items of the method of contacting the law enforcement agency; provided, however, that miscellaneous items having an estimated fair market value of $75.00 or less may be advertised or sold, or both, in lots. Such notice shall also stipulate a date, time, and place said items will be placed for public sale if not claimed. Such notice shall also stipulate whether said items or groups of items are to be sold in blocks, by lot numbers, by entire list of items, or separately. Such unclaimed personal property shall be sold at a sale which shall be conducted not less than seven nor more than 15 days after the final advertised notice has been run. The sale shall be to the highest bidder. If such personal property has not been bid on in two successive sales, the law enforcement agency may retain the property for official use or the property will be considered as salvage and disposed of as other county or municipal salvage or nonserviceable equipment. With respect to unclaimed perishable personal property or animals or other wildlife, an officer may make application to the superior court for an order authorizing the disposition of such property prior to the expiration of 90 days.

(f) With respect to a motor vehicle which is the subject of a crime or has been abandoned but which is not the subject of any civil forfeiture proceeding, the law enforcement agency shall be required to contact the Georgia Crime Information Center to determine if such motor vehicle has been stolen and to follow generally the procedures of Code Section 40-11-2 to ascertain the registered owner of such vehicle.

(g)(1) With respect to unclaimed firearms, if the sheriff, chief of police, agency director, or designee of such official certifies that a firearm is unsafe because of wear, damage, age, or modification or because any federal or state law prohibits the sale or distribution of such firearm, at the discretion of such official, it shall be transferred to the Division of Forensic Sciences of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, a municipal or county law enforcement forensic laboratory for training or experimental purposes, or be destroyed.

(2) Otherwise, an unclaimed firearm:

(A) Possessed by a municipal corporation shall be disposed of as provided for in Code Section 36-37-6; provided, however, that municipal corporations shall not have the right to reject any bids or to cancel any proposed sale of such firearms, and all sales shall be to persons who are licensed as firearms collectors, dealers, importers, or manufacturers under the provisions of 18 U.S.C. Section 921, et seq., and who are authorized to receive such firearms under the terms of such license; or

(B) Possessed by the state or a political subdivision other than a municipal corporation, shall be disposed of by sale at public auction to persons who are licensed as firearms collectors, dealers, importers, or manufacturers under the provisions of 18 U.S.C. Section 921, et seq., and who are authorized to receive such firearms under the terms of such license. Auctions required by this subparagraph may occur online on a rolling basis or at live events, but in no event shall such auctions occur less frequently than once every 12 months during any time in which the political subdivision or state custodial agency has an inventory of five or more saleable firearms.

(3) If no bids from eligible recipients are received within six months from when bidding opened on a firearm offered for sale pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection, the firearm shall be transferred to the Division of Forensic Sciences of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, a municipal or county law enforcement forensic laboratory for training or experimental purposes, or be destroyed.

(h) Records shall be maintained showing the manner in which each personal property item came into possession of the law enforcement agency, a description of the property, all efforts to locate the owner, any case or docket number, the date of publication of any newspaper notices, and the date on which the property was retained by the law enforcement agency, sold, or discarded. All agencies subject to the provisions of this Code section shall keep records of the firearms acquired and disposed of as provided by this Code section as well as records of the proceeds of the sales thereof and the disbursement of such proceeds in accordance with records retention schedules adopted in accordance with Article 5 of Chapter 18 of Title 50, the "Georgia Records Act."

(i) The proceeds from the sale of personal property by the sheriff or other county law enforcement agency pursuant to this Code section shall be paid into the general fund of the county treasury. The proceeds from the sale of personal property by a municipal law enforcement agency pursuant to this Code section shall be paid into the general fund of the municipal treasury. The proceeds from the sale of personal property by a state agency pursuant to this Code section shall be paid into the general fund of the state.

(j) Neither the state nor any political subdivision of the state nor any of its officers, agents, or employees shall be liable to any person, including the purchaser of a firearm, for personal injuries or damage to property arising from the sale of a firearm under subsection (g) of this Code section unless the state or political subdivision acted with gross negligence or willful or wanton misconduct.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Property subject to forfeiture proceeding. — Term "personal property" as used in O.C.G.A. § 17-5-54 is broad enough to include cash. Boone v. Sheriff of Lowndes County, 232 Ga. App. 601, 502 S.E.2d 535 (1998).

When the claimant asserted a right to property which was the subject of a forfeiture proceeding under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-49, the state's filing of a dismissal did not terminate the proceeding, and the sheriff was not authorized to apply for an order disposing of the property pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-54. Boone v. Sheriff of Lowndes County, 232 Ga. App. 601, 502 S.E.2d 535 (1998).

Motion for return of seized materials. — In a civil rights action by the plaintiff, an owner of a bookstore, involving the seizure of allegedly obscene materials, the plaintiff's motion under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-54 for return of the materials did not constitute a pending state proceeding for purposes of abstention under Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37 (1972); the criminal action against the plaintiff was complete, constitutionally, and, the plaintiff had no burden to press for a hearing, and, even if the motion was a pending action, abstention was not available because the plaintiff's constitutional concerns would not be addressed in the proceeding; thus, return of the seized materials was required. Lee v. City of Rome, 866 F. Supp. 545 (N.D. Ga. 1994).

Fuel equipment used in theft of fuel was not contraband and not otherwise subject to forfeiture. — Because fuel equipment attached to the defendant's truck, and which had been used in the defendant's crime of theft of diesel fuel, did not constitute contraband per se, and there was no statutory authority supporting retention by the sheriff of the equipment after the defendant was discharged under O.C.G.A. § 42-8-62(a); thus, the equipment was ordered returned to the defendant pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-5-54. Norman v. Yeager, 335 Ga. App. 470, 781 S.E.2d 580 (2016).

Inconsistent claims of ownership. — Inconsistent claims of ownership are resolved against the defendant when the issue is disposition of personal property in accordance with O.C.G.A. § 17-5-54. Baez v. State, 231 Ga. App. 375, 500 S.E.2d 339 (1998).

Defendant entitled to personal items. — If defendant had personal items in the bag marked exhibit 1 at trial, and the items were not contraband or subject to forfeiture, defendant was entitled to return of the items. Baez v. State, 231 Ga. App. 375, 500 S.E.2d 339 (1998).

Destruction of cell phone did not violate due process rights. — Court of appeals erred in affirming an order dismissing an indictment against the defendant on the ground that the state destroyed the defendant's cell phone in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-54 because the defendant failed to show a violation of due process since there were no circumstances from which it could be concluded that the exculpatory value of the cell phone was obvious or evident to police or any other state actor before the phone was destroyed; the cell phone was initially seized because police believed that the phone was potentially inculpatory for possible use by the state at trial, and since the scenario did not permit the conclusion that it was apparent to police or anyone else involved in the seizure, custody, or disposition of the cell phone that the phone could possibly aid the defendant in the defense of any criminal charges, the evidence was not constitutionally material. State v. Miller, 287 Ga. 748, 699 S.E.2d 316 (2010).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Stolen property from a pawn shop may be disposed of pursuant to the provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-54. 1996 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 96-24.

17-5-55. Designation of custodian for introduced evidence; evidence log; storage, maintenance, and disposal of evidence.

(a) In all criminal cases, the court shall designate either the clerk of court, the court reporter, or any other officer of the court to be the custodian of any property that is introduced into evidence during the pendency of the case. Property introduced into evidence shall be identified or tagged with an exhibit number. After verdict and judgment has been entered in any criminal case, the person who has custody of the physical evidence introduced in the case shall inventory the evidence and create an evidence log within 30 days of the entry of the judgment. Within 30 days following the creation of the evidence log, physical evidence shall be returned to the rightful owner of the property unless the physical evidence itself is necessary for the appeal of the case, for a new trial, or for purposes of complying with this Code section or Code Section 17-5-56. The evidence log shall contain the case number, style of the case, description of the item, exhibit number, the name of the person creating the evidence log, and the location where the physical evidence is stored. After the evidence log is completed, the judge shall designate the clerk of court, the prosecuting attorney, or the law enforcement agency involved in prosecuting the case to obtain and store the evidence, and a notation shall appear in the evidence log indicating the transfer of evidence. If evidence is transferred to any other party, the evidence log shall be annotated to show the identity of the person or entity receiving the evidence, the date of the transfer, and the location of the evidence. The signature of any person or entity to which physical evidence is transferred shall be captured through electronic means that will be linked to the evidence log or the use of a property transfer form that will be filed with the evidence log. When physical evidence, other than audio or video recordings, is transferred to any person or entity, a photograph or other visual image of the evidence shall be made and placed in the case file.

(b) Physical evidence classified as dangerous or contraband by state or federal law, including, but not limited to, items described by state or federal law as controlled substances, dangerous drugs, explosives, weapons, ammunition, biomedical waste, hazardous substances, or hazardous waste shall be properly secured in a manner authorized by state or federal law. This evidence may be transferred to a government agency authorized to store or dispose of the material.

(c) Documents, photographs, and similar evidence shall be maintained and disposed of in accordance with records retention schedules adopted in accordance with Article 5 of Chapter 18 of Title 50, known as the "Georgia Records Act." Other physical evidence that contains biological material, including, but not limited to, stains, fluids, or hair samples that relate to the identity of the perpetrator of the crime, shall be maintained in accordance with Code Section 17-5-56. A party to an extraordinary motion for new trial or a habeas corpus action in which DNA testing is sought that was filed prior to the expiration of the time prescribed for the preservation of evidence by this Code section may apply to the court in which the defendant was convicted for an order directing that the evidence be preserved beyond the time period prescribed by this Code section and until judgment in the action shall become final.

(d) Except as is otherwise provided in subsections (b) and (c) of this Code section or by law, following the expiration of the period of time set forth in subsections (b) and (c) of this Code section, physical evidence may be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of Article 5 of Chapter 12 of Title 44, known as the "Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act," or, in the case of property of historical or instructional value, as provided in Code Section 17-5-53.

History. — Code 1981, § 17-5-55, enacted by Ga. L. 2003, p. 247, § 3; Ga. L. 2004, p. 575, § 2.

Code Commission notes. — Pursuant to Code Section 28-9-5, in 2003, in subsection (c), a comma was deleted following "Code section" in the third sentence; and, in subsection (d), "Title 44" was substituted for "Title 50" and a comma was added following "Property Act".

Law reviews. — For note on the 2003 enactment of this Code section, see 20 Ga. St. U.L. Rev. 119 (2003).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Failure to comply with § 17-5-55. — No compliance with O.C.G.A. § 17-5-55 was indicated because neither the original nor a copy of a videotaped forensic interview of a child molestation victim was included in the record on appeal from the trial court, and the record did not reflect that the trial court designated a custodian of the evidence or that any evidence log was maintained; when it appears that photographs or audio or video recordings might be needed on appeal by a party, such party should move the trial court to allow duplicates to be admitted into the record in addition to the originals and be retained by the clerk of the court for inclusion in any appellate record, and the trial court should include in the court's order, instructions that the clerk of court include such copies in the appellate record transmitted to the appellate court, when the appealing party either requests their inclusion or requests that nothing be omitted from the record on appeal because such a practice would ensure the completeness of the appellate record without delay. 17-5-56. Maintenance of physical evidence containing biological material.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in Code Section 17-5-55, on or after May 27, 2003, governmental entities in possession of any physical evidence in a criminal case, including, but not limited to, a law enforcement agency or a prosecuting attorney, shall maintain any physical evidence collected at the time of the crime that contains biological material, including, but not limited to, stains, fluids, or hair samples that relate to the identity of the perpetrator of the crime as provided in this Code section. Biological samples collected directly from any person for use as reference materials for testing or collected for the purpose of drug or alcohol testing shall not be preserved.

(b) In a case in which the death penalty is imposed, the evidence shall be maintained until the sentence in the case has been carried out. Evidence in all felony cases that contains biological material, including, but not limited to, stains, fluids, or hair samples that relate to the identity of the perpetrator of the crime shall be maintained for the period of time that the crime remains unsolved or until the sentence in the case is completed, whichever occurs last.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Duty of state. — State did not violate O.C.G.A. § 17-5-56(a) by failing to preserve material evidence when, following a single-car accident involving the defendant's car, the state removed samples of biological evidence from the interior of the defendant's car and sold the defendant's car to a salvage wholesaler who then sold the car to a mechanic, who cleaned, repaired, repainted, and resold the vehicle. State v. Mussman, 289 Ga. 586, 713 S.E.2d 822 (2011).

State was not obligated under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-56(a) to preserve four vials of the defendant's blood that were drawn as reference samples for DNA analysis. Even assuming the defendant's motion challenging the admissibility of the defendant's statements put the state on notice that the defendant's level of intoxication was an issue in determining whether the statements to law enforcement officers were voluntary, it did not indicate that the defendant was claiming that intoxication made the defendant physically incapable of committing the crimes and, thus, the defendant could not have been the perpetrator. Clay v. State, 290 Ga. 822, 725 S.E.2d 260 (2012).

Cigarette butts not constitutionally material. — Defendant did not show that the cigarette butts found in the dumpster were constitutionally material to the defendant's defense because although the butts were potentially useful to the defense the defendant raised in the custodial statement and at trial, that another person committed the crimes, that did not establish that the butts had an obvious or readily perceived exculpatory value, and the court's conclusion that the cigarette butts had apparent exculpatory value to that defense was not supported by the record because the DNA testing could have been exculpatory or inculpatory. Therefore, the lost cigarette butts were not constitutionally material and the trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment based on the failure to preserve the cigarette butts found in the dumpster in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-5-56(a). State v. Mizell, 288 Ga. 474, 705 S.E.2d 154 (2010).

Material collected from abortion. — When the defendant was convicted of rape, aggravated child molestation, and enticing a child for indecent purposes, because O.C.G.A. § 17-5-56 applies to physical evidence containing biological material that could identify the perpetrator and is collected at the time of the crime, the statute did not apply to the biological material collected at the victim's abortion more than two months after the crime occurred; and the statute did not apply to the sample collected from the victim's abortion because the sample was contaminated due to the storage procedure used by the medical clinic, not the state, and there was no usable biological material that would relate to the identity of the perpetrator. Davis v. State, 329 Ga. App. 797, 764 S.E.2d 588 (2014).

17-5-71. Preservation of evidence.

(a) In cases in which the victim reports an alleged sexual assault to law enforcement, the investigating law enforcement agency shall maintain any physical evidence collected as a result of an alleged sexual assault that contains biological material, including, but not limited to, stains, fluids, or hair samples that relate to the identity of the perpetrator of an alleged sexual assault, for 30 years from the date of arrest, or seven years from completion of sentence, whichever occurs last, and if no arrests, then for 50 years.

(b) If the victim does not cooperate with law enforcement in the investigation or prosecution of an alleged sexual assault, the investigating law enforcement agency shall maintain any physical evidence collected as a result of such alleged sexual assault that contains biological material, including, but not limited to, stains, fluids, or hair samples that relate to the identity of the perpetrator of the alleged sexual assault, for not less than 12 months from the date any such physical evidence is collected.

The 2019 amendment, effective July 1, 2019, in subsection (a), substituted "In cases in which the victim reports an alleged sexual assault to law enforcement" for "Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b) of this Code section or Code Section 17-5-55 or 17-5-56, on or after May 12, 2008" at the beginning, and substituted "30 years from the date of arrest, or seven years from completion of sentence, whichever occurs last, and if no arrests, then for 50 years" for "ten years after the report of the alleged sexual assault" at the end.

system or cooperates with law enforcement in pursuing prosecution of the underlying crime. A victim shall not be required to pay, directly or indirectly, for the cost of a forensic medical examination. The cost of a forensic medical examination shall be paid for by the Georgia Crime Victims Emergency Fund, as provided for in Chapter 15 of this title.

17-5-73. Victim's right to refuse request for polygraph examinations or other truth-telling devices.

No prosecuting attorney, investigating law enforcement agency, or government official shall ask or require any victim of a sexual assault to submit to a polygraph examination or any other truth-telling device as a condition precedent to investigating such alleged crime. The refusal of a victim to submit to a polygraph examination or any other truth-telling device shall not prevent an investigation or prosecution of any sexual assault.

(1) "Criminal violation" means a violation of state or federal criminal law but shall not include a violation of a county or municipal law, regulation, or ordinance.

(2) "Illegal alien" means a person who is verified by the federal government to be present in the United States in violation of federal immigration law.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (f) of this Code section, during any investigation of a criminal suspect by a peace officer, when such officer has probable cause to believe that a suspect has committed a criminal violation, the officer shall be authorized to seek to verify such suspect's immigration status when the suspect is unable to provide one of the following:

(1) A secure and verifiable document as defined in Code Section 50-36-2;

(2) A valid Georgia driver's license;

(3) A valid Georgia identification card issued by the Department of Driver Services;

(4) If the entity requires proof of legal presence in the United States before issuance, any valid driver's license from a state or district of the United States or any valid identification document issued by the United States federal government;

(5) A document used in compliance with paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of Code Section 40-5-21; or

(6) Other information as to the suspect's identity that is sufficient to allow the peace officer to independently identify the suspect.

(c) When attempting to determine the immigration status of a suspect pursuant to subsection (b) of this Code section, a peace officer shall be authorized to use any reasonable means available to determine the immigration status of the suspect, including:

(1) Use of any authorized federal identification data base;

(2) Identification methods authorized by federal law, including those authorized by 8 U.S.C.A. Section 1373(c) and 8 U.S.C.A. Section 1644;

(3) Use of electronic fingerprint readers or similar devices; or

(d) A peace officer shall not consider race, color, or national origin in implementing the requirements of this Code section except to the extent permitted by the Constitutions of Georgia and of the United States.

(e) If during the course of the investigation into such suspect's identity, a peace officer receives verification that such suspect is an illegal alien, then such peace officer may take any action authorized by state and federal law, including, but not limited to, detaining such suspected illegal alien, securely transporting such suspect to any authorized federal or state detention facility, or notifying the United States Department of Homeland Security or successor agency. Nothing in this Code section shall be construed to hinder or prevent a peace officer or law enforcement agency from arresting or detaining any criminal suspect on other criminal charges.

(f) No person who in good faith contacts or has contact with a state or local peace officer or prosecuting attorney or member of the staff of a prosecuting attorney for the purpose of acting as a witness to a crime, to report criminal activity, or to seek assistance as a victim to a crime shall have his or her immigration status investigated based on such contact or based on information arising from such contact.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Standing. — In a pre-enforcement constitutional challenge to sections 7 and 8 of Georgia House Bill 87, the Illegal Immigration Reform and Enforcement Act of 2011, in which Georgia officials appealed a district court's entry of a preliminary injunction enjoining enforcement of those two sections, an undocumented immigrant currently classified under deferred action status had standing to challenge section 8. Such an alien remained permissibly in the United States but had not acquired the requisite documentation to stave off the investigatory detention permitted by section 8, and such an alien faced a credible threat of detention under section 8 as the alien possessed none of the listed documentation to prove that the alien had permission to remain temporarily in the United States. 17-6-1. (For effective date, see note.) When offenses bailable; procedure; schedule of bails; appeal bonds.

(a) The following offenses are bailable only before a judge of the superior court:

(1) Treason;

(2) Murder;

(3) Rape;

(4) Aggravated sodomy;

(5) Armed robbery;

(5.1) Home invasion in the first degree;

(6) Aircraft hijacking and hijacking a motor vehicle in the first degree;

(7) Aggravated child molestation;

(8) Aggravated sexual battery;

(9) Manufacturing, distributing, delivering, dispensing, administering, or selling any controlled substance classified under Code Section 16-13-25 as Schedule I or under Code Section 16-13-26 as Schedule II;

(10) Violating Code Section 16-13-31 or Code Section 16-13-31.1;

(11) Kidnapping, arson, aggravated assault, or burglary in any degree if the person, at the time of the alleged kidnapping, arson, aggravated assault, or burglary in any degree, had previously been convicted of, was on probation or parole with respect to, or was on bail for kidnapping, arson, aggravated assault, burglary in any degree, or one or more of the offenses listed in paragraphs (1) through (10) of this subsection;

(12) Aggravated stalking; and

(13) Violations of Chapter 15 of Title 16.

(b)(1) All offenses not included in subsection (a) of this Code section, inclusive of offenses that are violations of local ordinances, are bailable by a court of inquiry. Except as provided in subsection (g) of this Code section, at no time, either before a court of inquiry, when indicted or accused, after a motion for new trial is made, or while an appeal is pending, shall any person charged with a misdemeanor be refused bail. When determining bail for a person charged with a misdemeanor, courts shall not impose excessive bail and shall impose only the conditions reasonably necessary to ensure such person attends court appearances and to protect the safety of any person or the public given the circumstances of the alleged offense and the totality of circumstances.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter:

(A) A person charged with violating Code Section 40-6-391 whose alcohol concentration at the time of arrest, as determined by any method authorized by law, violates that provided in paragraph (5) of subsection (a) of Code Section 40-6-391 may be detained for a period of time up to six hours after booking and prior to being released on bail or on recognizance; and

(B) When an arrest is made by a law enforcement officer without a warrant upon an act of family violence or a violation of a criminal family violence order pursuant to Code Section 17-4-20, the person charged with the offense shall not be eligible for bail prior to the arresting officer or some other law enforcement officer taking the arrested person before a judicial officer pursuant to Code Section 17-4-21.

(3)(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a judge of a court of inquiry may, as a condition of bail or other pretrial release of a person who is charged with violating Code Section 16-5-90 or 16-5-91, prohibit the defendant from entering or remaining present at the victim's school, place of employment, or other specified places at times when the victim is present or intentionally following such person.

(B) If the evidence shows that the defendant has previously violated the conditions of pretrial release or probation or parole which arose out of a violation of Code Section 16-5-90 or 16-5-91, the judge of a court of inquiry may impose such restrictions on the defendant which may be necessary to deter further stalking of the victim, including but not limited to denying bail or pretrial release.

(c)(1) In the event a person is detained in a facility other than a municipal jail for an offense which is bailable only before a judge of the superior court, as provided in subsection (a) of this Code section, and a hearing is held pursuant to Code Section 17-4-26 or 17-4-62, the presiding judicial officer shall notify the superior court in writing within 48 hours that the arrested person is being held without bail. If the detained person has not already petitioned for bail as provided in subsection (d) of this Code section, the superior court shall notify the district attorney and shall set a date for a hearing on the issue of bail within 30 days after receipt of such notice.

(2) In the event a person is detained in a municipal jail for an offense which is bailable only before a judge of the superior court as provided in subsection (a) of this Code section for a period of 30 days, the municipal court shall notify the superior court in writing within 48 hours that the arrested person has been held for such time without bail. If the detained person has not already petitioned for bail as provided in subsection (d) of this Code section, the superior court shall notify the district attorney and set a date for a hearing on the issue of bail within 30 days after receipt of such notice.

(3) Notice sent to the superior court pursuant to paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection shall include any incident reports and criminal history reports relevant to the detention of such person.

(d) A person charged with any offense which is bailable only before a judge of the superior court as provided in subsection (a) of this Code section may petition the superior court requesting that such person be released on bail. The court shall notify the district attorney and set a date for a hearing within ten days after receipt of such petition.

(e)(1) A court shall be authorized to release a person on bail if the court finds that the person:

(A) Poses no significant risk of fleeing from the jurisdiction of the court or failing to appear in court when required;

(B) Poses no significant threat or danger to any person, to the community, or to any property in the community;

(C) Poses no significant risk of committing any felony pending trial; and

(D) Poses no significant risk of intimidating witnesses or otherwise obstructing the administration of justice.

(2) When determining bail, as soon as possible, the court shall consider:

(A) The accused's financial resources and other assets, including whether any such assets are jointly controlled;

(B) The accused's earnings and other income;

(C) The accused's financial obligations, including obligations to dependents;

(D) The purpose of bail; and

(E) Any other factor the court deems appropriate.

(3) If the person is charged with a serious violent felony and has already been convicted of a serious violent felony, or of an offense under the laws of any other state or of the United States which offense if committed in this state would be a serious violent felony, there shall be a rebuttable presumption that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required or assure the safety of any other person or the community. As used in this subsection, the term "serious violent felony" means a serious violent felony as defined in Code Section 17-10-6.1.

(4) (For effective date, see note.) Any bond issued by an elected judge or judge sitting by designation that purports a dollar amount shall be executed in the full-face amount of such bond through secured means as provided for in Code Section 17-6-4 or 17-6-50 or shall be executed by use of property as approved by the sheriff in the county where the offense was committed.

(5) (For effective date, see note.) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, nothing in this Code section shall prohibit a duly sworn sheriff from releasing an inmate from custody in cases of medical emergency with the consent of the judge in the county in which he or she presides.

(f)(1) Except as provided in subsection (a) of this Code section or as otherwise provided in this subsection, the judge of any court of inquiry may by written order establish a schedule of bails and unless otherwise ordered by the judge of any court, an accused shall be released from custody upon posting bail as fixed in the schedule.

(2) For offenses involving an act of family violence, as defined in Code Section 19-13-1, bail or other release from custody shall be set by a judge on an individual basis and a schedule of bails provided for in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not be utilized; provided, however, that the judge shall include a listing of specific conditions which shall include, but not be limited to, having no contact of any kind or character with the victim or any member of the victim's family or household, not physically abusing or threatening to physically abuse the victim, the immediate enrollment in and participation in domestic violence counseling, substance abuse therapy, or other therapeutic requirements.

(3) For offenses involving an act of family violence, the judge shall determine whether one or more specific conditions shall be used, except that any offense involving an act of family violence and serious injury to the victim shall be bailable only before a judge when the judge or the arresting officer is of the opinion that the danger of further violence to or harassment or intimidation of the victim is such as to make it desirable that the consideration of the imposition of additional conditions as authorized in this Code section should be made. Upon setting bail in any case involving family violence, the judge shall give particular consideration to the exigencies of the case at hand and shall impose any specific conditions as he or she may deem necessary. As used in this Code section, the term "serious injury" means bodily harm capable of being perceived by a person other than the victim and may include, but is not limited to, substantially blackened eyes, substantially swollen lips or other facial or body parts, substantial bruises to body parts, fractured bones, or permanent disfigurements and wounds inflicted by deadly weapons or any other objects which, when used offensively against a person, are capable of causing serious bodily injury.

(4) For violations of Code Section 16-15-4, the court shall require increased bail and shall include as a condition of bail or pretrial release that the accused shall not have contact of any kind or character with any other member or associate of a criminal street gang and, in cases involving an alleged victim, that the accused shall not have contact of any kind or character with any such victim or any member of any such victim's family or household.

(5) For offenses involving violations of Code Section 40-6-393, bail or other release from custody shall be set by a judge on an individual basis and not a schedule of bails pursuant to this Code section.

(g) No appeal bond shall be granted to any person who has been convicted of murder, rape, aggravated sodomy, armed robbery, home invasion in any degree, aggravated child molestation, child molestation, kidnapping, trafficking in cocaine or marijuana, aggravated stalking, or aircraft hijacking and who has been sentenced to serve a period of incarceration of five years or more. The granting of an appeal bond to a person who has been convicted of any other felony offense or of any misdemeanor offense involving an act of family violence as defined in Code Section 19-13-1, or of any offense delineated as a high and aggravated misdemeanor or of any offense set forth in Code Section

40-6-391, shall be in the discretion of the convicting court. Appeal bonds shall terminate when the right of appeal terminates, and such bonds shall not be effective as to any petition or application for writ of certiorari unless the court in which the petition or application is filed so specifies.

(h) Except in cases in which life imprisonment or the death penalty may be imposed, a judge of the superior court by written order may delegate the authority provided for in this Code section to any judge of any court of inquiry within such superior court judge's circuit. However, such authority may not be exercised outside the county in which said judge of the court of inquiry was appointed or elected. The written order delegating such authority shall be valid for a period of one year, but may be revoked by the superior court judge issuing such order at any time prior to the end of that one-year period.

(i) (For effective date, see note.) As used in this Code section, the term "bail" shall include the release of a person on an unsecured judicial release, except as limited by Code Section 17-6-12.

(j) For all persons who have been authorized by law or the court to be released on bail, sheriffs and constables shall accept such bail; provided, however, that the sureties tendered and offered on the bond are approved by the sheriff of the county in which the offense was committed.

Delayed effective date. — This Code section, as set out above, becomes effective January 1, 2021. For version of this Code section in effect until January 1, 2021, see the 2020 amendment note.

The 2018 amendment, effective July 1, 2018, in paragraph (b)(1), inserted "inclusive of offenses that are violations of local ordinances," in the middle of the first sentence, and added the third sentence; designated the existing provisions of the introductory paragraph of subsection (e) as paragraph (e)(1); redesignated former paragraphs (e)(1) through (e)(4) as present subparagraphs (e)(1)(A) through (e)(1)(D), respectively; added paragraph (e)(2); designated the ending undesignated paragraph of subsection (e) as paragraph (e)(3); substituted "However, if" for "If" in present paragraph (e)(3); substituted "an accused" for "a person charged with committing any offense" in the middle of paragraph (f)(1); substituted "bail or other release from custody shall be set by a judge on an individual basis and a schedule of bails provided for in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not be utilized; provided, however, that the judge" for "the schedule of bails provided for in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall require increased bail and" near the middle of paragraph (f)(2); in paragraph (f)(3), in the first sentence, deleted "the schedule of bails and" following "determine whether", and deleted "of its" preceding "specific conditions"; in paragraph (f)(4), substituted "accused" for "defendant" twice, and substituted "an alleged victim" for "a victim" in the middle; in subsection (i), deleted "the" following "shall include" in the middle, and deleted "the provisions of" preceding "Code Section 17-6-12".

The 2020 amendment, effective January 1, 2021, added paragraphs (e)(4) and (e)(5) and, in subsection (i), substituted "the release" for "releasing" and substituted "an unsecured judicial release" for "such person's own recognizance".

Code Commission notes. — Pursuant to Code Section 28-9-5, in 1991, "six" was substituted for "6" in paragraph (2) of subsection (b) (now subparagraph (b)(2)(A)).

Pursuant to Code Section 28-9-5, in 1995, paragraph (11) of subsection (a), as enacted by Ga. L. 1995, p. 989, § 1, was redesignated as paragraph (12) of subsection (a), owing to the use of a duplicate paragraph designation by Ga. L. 1995, p. 379, § 1.

Pursuant to Code Section 28-9-5, in 2010, "Chapter 15 of Title 16" was substituted for "the 'Georgia Street Gang Terrorism and Prevention Act'" in paragraph (a)(13).

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1986, p. 166, § 3, not codified by the General Assembly, provided that that Act would become effective July 1, 1986, and would apply to prosecutions commenced on or after that date.

Ga. L. 1994, p. 1625, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall be known and may be cited as the 'Anti-motor Vehicle Hijacking Act of 1994'".

Ga. L. 1995, p. 379, § 3, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that the amendment by that Act shall apply to all bail hearings held on or after July 1, 1995, without regard to whether the offense was committed prior to, on, or after July 1, 1995, and without regard to whether an underlying prior conviction occurred prior to, on, or after July 1, 1995.

Ga. L. 1995, p. 989, § 3, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that the amendment by that act shall apply to acts committed on or after July 1, 1995.

Ga. L. 1999, p. 391, §§ 1 and 2, not codified by the General Assembly, provides in part that the memory of all victims of drunken driving and Heidi Marie Flye, Cathryn Nicole Flye, and Audrey Marie Flye should be honored and that this Act shall be known and may be cited as "Heidi's Law".

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 1/HB 1059, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The General Assembly finds and declares that recidivist sexual offenders, sexual offenders who use physical violence, and sexual offenders who prey on children are sexual predators who present an extreme threat to the public safety. Many sexual offenders are extremely likely to use physical violence and to repeat their offenses; and some sexual offenders commit many offenses, have many more victims than are ever reported, and are prosecuted for only a fraction of their crimes. The General Assembly finds that this makes the cost of sexual offender victimization to society at large, while incalculable, clearly exorbitant. The General Assembly further finds that the high level of threat that a sexual predator presents to the public safety, and the long-term effects suffered by victims of sex offenses, provide the state with sufficient justification to implement a strategy that includes:

"(1) Incarcerating sexual offenders and maintaining adequate facilities to ensure that decisions to release sexual predators into the community are not made on the basis of inadequate space;

"(2) Requiring the registration of sexual offenders, with a requirement that complete and accurate information be maintained and accessible for use by law enforcement authorities, communities, and the public;

"(3) Providing for community and public notification concerning the presence of sexual offenders;

"(4) Collecting data relative to sexual offenses and sexual offenders;

"(5) Requiring sexual predators who are released into the community to wear an electronic monitoring system for the rest of their natural life and to pay for such system; and

"(6) Prohibiting sexual predators from working with children, either for compensation or as a volunteer.

"The General Assembly further finds that the state has a compelling interest in protecting the public from sexual offenders and in protecting children from predatory sexual activity, and there is sufficient justification for requiring sexual offenders to register and for requiring community and public notification of the presence of sexual offenders. The General Assembly declares that in order to protect the public, it is necessary that the sexual offenders be registered and that members of the community and the public be notified of a sexual offender's presence. The designation of a person as a sexual offender is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from the conviction of certain crimes. Likewise, the designation of a person as a sexual predator is neither a sentence nor a punishment but simply a regulatory mechanism and status resulting from findings by the Sexual Offender Registration Review Board and a court if requested by a sexual offender."

Ga. L. 2006, p. 379, § 30(c)/HB 1059, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect or abate the status as a crime of any such act or omission which occurred prior to the effective date of the Act repealing, repealing and reenacting, or amending such law, nor shall the prosecution of such crime be abated as a result of such repeal, repeal and reenactment, or amendment."

Ga. L. 2012, p. 899, § 9-1(a)/HB 1176, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "This Act shall become effective on July 1, 2012, and shall apply to offenses which occur on or after that date. Any offense occurring before July 1, 2012, shall be governed by the statute in effect at the time of such offense and shall be considered a prior conviction for the purpose of imposing a sentence that provides for a different penalty for a subsequent conviction for the same type of offense, of whatever degree or level, pursuant to this Act."

General Consideration

For history of section, see Newsome v. Scott, 151 Ga. 639, 107 S.E. 854 (1921).

Constitutionality of subsection (g). — Provision in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1(g) (former subsection (d)) denying appeal bonds to persons convicted of "murder, rape … and who have been sentenced to serve a period of seven years or more" does not violate either the due process or equal protection clause. Hall v. State, 254 Ga. 507, 330 S.E.2d 878 (1985).

O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1(g)'s (former subsection (d)) classification of persons ineligible for appeal bonds is rationally related to at least two legitimate state interests. First, it is rationally related to the promotion of public confidence in the judicial system by prohibiting persons given longer sentences for serious crimes from returning to the community pending appeal. Similarly, in providing that persons convicted of serious crimes who receive longer sentences are not entitled to an appeal bond, it is rationally related to the legitimate objective of assuring that such persons will not flee pending the outcome of their appeal. Browning v. State, 254 Ga. 478, 330 S.E.2d 879 (1985); Moran v. State, 268 Ga. 817, 493 S.E.2d 126 (1997).

Applicability to "capital offenses." — O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1, as amended, is applicable to capital "offenses," not convictions. Hardin v. State, 251 Ga. 533, 307 S.E.2d 669 (1983).

Former Code 1933, § 27-901 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1) was applicable to the first 90 days of confinement, and Ga. L. 1973, p. 291, § 1 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50) was applicable to all crimes after 90 days of confinement. After 90 days without bail and without indictment, the mandate of the preceding section was that bail must be set by the trial judge. Burke v. State, 234 Ga. 512, 216 S.E.2d 812 (1975).

Duty of court. — Sole duty of the court hearing an application for bail is to determine whether or not the accused should be entitled to bail and, if so, the amount. At such hearing the court does not pass on the merits of the case and there is no determination of guilt or innocence, or even probable cause. Craft v. State, 154 Ga. App. 682, 269 S.E.2d 490 (1980).

Bail considerations. — Many factors are to be considered in fixing bail, some of which are the ability of the defendant to give bail, the seriousness of the offense, penalty, character, and reputation of the accused, health, probability of the defendant appearing to serve sentence, forfeiture of other bonds, and whether a fugitive. Jones v. Grimes, 219 Ga. 585, 134 S.E.2d 790 (1964).

Considerations to be employed by the superior court in granting or denying pre-trial bonds are the same as the considerations to be employed in granting or denying appeal bonds. Hardy v. State, 192 Ga. App. 860, 386 S.E.2d 731 (1989).

Principal factor in fixing bail is probability of appearance of the accused. — In setting the amount of bail, the principal factor considered, to the determination of which most other factors are directed, is the probability of the appearance of the accused, or of the accused's flight to avoid punishment. Jones v. Grimes, 219 Ga. 585, 134 S.E.2d 790 (1964); Goodine v. Griffin, 309 F. Supp. 590 (S.D. Ga. 1970).

When fixing the amount of bail, the judge is to consider chiefly the probability that the accused, if freed, will appear at trial; other factors to be considered include the accused's ability to pay, the seriousness of the offense, and the accused's character and reputation. Spence v. State, 252 Ga. 338, 313 S.E.2d 475 (1984); Howard v. State, 197 Ga. App. 693, 399 S.E.2d 283 (1990).

Trial court erred in admitting, at trial, a pretrial statement made by the defendant's parent to an investigator as the defendant was not afforded a meaningful opportunity to cross-examine the parent regarding the statement during a bond hearing, and the reasonable doubt standard and the significant risk standard could not be equated, given that determining whether a specific crime was committed reached different issues than determining the possibility of future bad conduct by the defendant. Dickson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 539, 636 S.E.2d 721 (2006).

Question is whether appearance for trial may be reasonably assured. — In passing on an application for bond, the question before the judge is whether the appearance of the accused for trial may be reasonably assured. Craft v. State, 154 Ga. App. 682, 269 S.E.2d 490 (1980).

Factors considered in felony cases. — Grant or refusal of bail in felony cases pending appeal lies within the sound discretion of the trial court. Release should not be granted unless, after hearing, the court affirmatively determines that there is no substantial risk of the defendant absconding, that the defendant is unlikely to commit a serious crime or intimidate witnesses, and that the appeal is not frivolous and not taken for delay. Sapp v. State, 147 Ga. App. 690, 250 S.E.2d 23 (1978).

Authority of arresting officer to accept bond from felon. — Arresting officer has no authority to accept bond from one arrested under warrant for felony, but should return the party arrested to the county in which the crime was alleged to have been committed, for examination before a judicial officer of that county and the fixing of bail by such officer in case of commitment. Paulk v. Sexton, 203 Ga. 82, 45 S.E.2d 768 (1947).

Who is a person "charged with a misdemeanor." — Defendant is not a person "charged with a misdemeanor" after conviction and a review of the judgment of conviction by every court of the land to which the defendant could apply, which judgment of conviction has become final. Hodges v. Balkcom, 209 Ga. 856, 76 S.E.2d 798 (1953).

Bail in misdemeanor cases. — When one has been convicted of a misdemeanor and there was no motion for new trial pending, former Code 1933, § 27-901 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1) had no application. Johnson v. Aldredge, 192 Ga. 209, 14 S.E.2d 757 (1941).

Only persons convicted in misdemeanor cases are entitled to bail as a matter of law. Sellers v. State, 112 Ga. App. 607, 145 S.E.2d 827 (1965).

Trial court has authority to place conditions on bail in misdemeanor cases. Clarke v. State, 228 Ga. App. 219, 491 S.E.2d 450 (1997).

Review of revocation of probation. — Defendants, who are confined upon revocation of probationary sentences and who seek review by certiorari of order of revocation are not entitled to be released on bond, since the defendants are not seeking to review a "judgment of conviction" within the provisions of former Code 1933. Foster v. Jenkins, 210 Ga. 383, 80 S.E.2d 277 (1954).

Excessive bail is the equivalent of a refusal to grant bail, and in such cases habeas corpus is an available and appropriate remedy for relief. Jones v. Grimes, 219 Ga. 585, 134 S.E.2d 790 (1964).

No contact order against defendant. — For offenses involving an act of family violence, O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1(f)(2) expressly authorized the trial court to impose special bond conditions that the accused have no contact of any kind or character with the victim; moreover, even without this express statutory authorization, the trial court had the inherent authority to impose such conditions when the defendant was charged with a violent crime against a specific victim. Patel v. State, 283 Ga. App. 181, 641 S.E.2d 184 (2006).

Admissibility at trial of defendant's testimony at bail hearing. — Absent objections grounded on the Fifth Amendment at the bail hearing, the decision of defense counsel to bring the extraneous issue of guilt or innocence into the bail proceeding did not preclude, on Fifth Amendment grounds, the use at trial of incriminating testimony given at such hearing. Cowards v. State, 266 Ga. 191, 465 S.E.2d 677 (1996).

Rights not violated. — State did not violate O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1(d), despite the defendants' contrary claim, as the superior court was not required to act on a bail motion within ten days of receiving a petition for release, nor did the statute provide for a release if such action was not undertaken. Capestany v. State, 289 Ga. App. 47, 656 S.E.2d 196 (2007).

Discretion of Court

Discretion as to amount of bail. — Amount of bail to be assessed in each criminal case is left to the sound discretion of the trial judge and in the absence of clear abuse of such discretionary power, the judge's action will not be controlled. Goodine v. Griffin, 309 F. Supp. 590 (S.D. Ga. 1970).

Granting or refusal of bail in capital cases is a matter peculiarly within the discretion of the judge of the superior court, and will not be controlled, unless it has been manifestly and flagrantly abused. To assist an appellate court in determining whether there has been an abuse of discretion, the trial court must make an affirmative finding that the defendant is likely to commit a serious crime, intimidate witnesses, or will flee if released. Merritt v. State, 169 Ga. App. 523, 313 S.E.2d 780 (1984).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion for pretrial bond after stating in the court's written order that the defendant posed a significant risk of committing further felonies pending trial of this matter and poses a significant risk to persons in the community, including the defendant personally. Prigmore v. State, 327 Ga. App. 368, 759 S.E.2d 249 (2014).

On remand, the habeas court was directed to hold a hearing on the petitioner's habeas petition because the record showed that the petitioner exhausted efforts to seek an interlocutory review of the trial court's order denying bond and the petitioner had no other adequate remedy for meaningful review of the lawfulness of continued detention. Tumlinson v. Dix, 844 S.E.2d 765, No. S20A1277, 2020 Ga. LEXIS 456 (2020).

Discretion as to grant of appeal bond. — Under the 1996 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1, the trial court is required to exercise discretion in determining whether to grant an appeal bond, and the court must hold an evidentiary hearing at which the court may consider evidence presented during the trial as well as additional oral or documentary evidence. Knapp v. State, 223 Ga. App. 267, 477 S.E.2d 621 (1996).

Despite the fact that the defendant was not convicted of the listed felonies outlined in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1(g), the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant an appeal bond as the defendant was found guilty of two violent sex crimes, had a prior aggravated assault conviction, and the likelihood of a successful appeal was minimal. Luke v. State, 282 Ga. App. 749, 639 S.E.2d 645 (2006).

Georgia Supreme Court recognizes that the Georgia General Assembly has chosen to treat murder cases differently in O.C.G.A. § 5-7-5, and trial courts must be allowed some level of discretion to deny requests for bail pending appeals by the state in such cases; that discretion of trial courts in these cases should be governed by the standards for deciding whether to grant pretrial bail. Johnson v. State, 304 Ga. 369, 818 S.E.2d 601 (2018).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by denying the defendant's motion for appeal bond because the defendant's case was currently at an appellate stage until the Georgia Supreme Court considered the state's appeal; thus, it was appropriate for the trial court to have evaluated the defendant's request for an appeal bond by the standards for pretrial bail in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1(e). Johnson v. State, 304 Ga. 369, 818 S.E.2d 601 (2018).

Discretion of court in noncapital felony cases. — After conviction, the decision of whether or not to grant bail in a noncapital felony rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and should that court determine that bail should not be granted, the offense, as to that defendant, is nonbailable. Finley v. Thompson, 100 Ga. App. 508, 112 S.E.2d 166 (1959).

Abuse of discretion in felony cases. — Granting or refusing of bail in felony cases after indictment and conviction is a matter within the sound discretion of the court below, and the Supreme Court will not control that discretion unless that discretion has been flagrantly abused. Smith v. State, 203 Ga. 636, 47 S.E.2d 866 (1948).

Granting or refusing of bail in felony cases after indictment and conviction is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court, and the appellate court will not control that discretion unless that discretion has been flagrantly abused. Hardwick v. State, 131 Ga. App. 721, 206 S.E.2d 727 (1974).

If there is some evidence to support at least part of the underlying basis for the trial court's conclusion, there is no flagrant abuse of the trial court's discretion in denying bail. Parrish v. State, 182 Ga. App. 247, 355 S.E.2d 682 (1987).

Abuse of discretion in narcotics and perjury cases. — Since the General Assembly has placed the noncapital offense of sale of narcotics as well as perjury into the same category as the capital offenses of rape, armed robbery, aircraft hijacking, treason, and murder insofar as bail is concerned, the old rule applied in capital cases, the granting or refusal of bail in capital cases is a matter peculiarly within the discretion of the judge of the superior court, and will not be controlled, unless that discretion has been manifestly and flagrantly abused, must be applied to narcotics and perjury cases. Reed v. State, 134 Ga. App. 47, 213 S.E.2d 147 (1975).

No abuse of discretion. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying a motion for bail by the defendant charged with aggravated assault, since the defendant had no significant ties to the community, had previously failed to appear when ordered, and had to be extradited from California after the defendant's last failure to appear in court. Stirling v. State, 189 Ga. App. 283, 375 S.E.2d 302 (1988), aff'd, 192 Ga. App. 39, 383 S.E.2d 595 (1989).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying an appeal bond based on evidence that the defendant showed a violent character which, coupled with the defendant's violent temper, lack of remorse, and belief that the defendant had committed no wrong in shooting a fleeing teenager who appeared to be stealing defendant's truck, indicated that the defendant would be a danger to others. Prayor v. State, 214 Ga. App. 132, 447 S.E.2d 155 (1994).

Evidence of the guilt or innocence of the person detained does not figure prominently in the judge's determination over whether to deny bail and therefore the delay in receiving an exculpatory statement of a witness did not infringe upon the defendant's constitutional rights when the justice denied bail. Rock v. Lowe, 893 F. Supp. 1573 (S.D. Ga. 1995), aff'd without op., 79 F.3d 1161 (11th Cir. 1996).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motions for bond because, as to the defendant's initial request for bond, the defendant had a bond hearing in another case denied and the defendant did not state any additional facts that were not presented at the first hearing; as to the two subsequent motions for bond, the trial court held that the court could not make a finding that the defendant posed no significant risk of intimidating witnesses or otherwise obstructing the administration of justice; and, as to the additional motions for bond, the defendant presented no new information, testimony, or evidence that indicated a change in circumstances. Wimbush v. State, 345 Ga. App. 54, 812 S.E.2d 489 (2018).

Bail condition prohibiting harassing victim. — If the defendant was charged with battery against a specific female victim, it was not an abuse of discretion for the court to forbid the defendant to threaten, harass, stalk, or abuse the victim as conditions of bail. Clarke v. State, 228 Ga. App. 219, 491 S.E.2d 450 (1997).

Trial court abused the court's discretion. — Trial court abused the court's discretion in setting conditions of a bond that were totally unrelated to the defendant's offense and were, therefore, unreasonable as a matter of law. Dudley v. State, 230 Ga. App. 339, 496 S.E.2d 341 (1998).

Denial of a supersedeas bond following defendant's conviction of child molestation was not an abuse of discretion since there was evidence that during the time the case was pending trial, the defendant and the defendant's spouse would drive by the victim's house and "make faces at the children" playing in the yard and that the people involved lived fairly closely together. Ferry v. State, 210 Ga. App. 321, 436 S.E.2d 59 (1993).

Murder is bailable only within sound discretion of trial judge. Myron v. State, 248 Ga. 120, 281 S.E.2d 600 (1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1154, 102 S. Ct. 1025, 71 L. Ed. 2d 310 (1982).

Denial of bail not an abuse of discretion. — Petitioner charged with 16 counts of violating the Georgia RICO Act, O.C.G.A. § 16-14-1, securities fraud, and theft, who owned no assets in the United States and had allegedly funneled significant assets to Belize, where petitioner traveled frequently, was not entitled to bail as of right under O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1(a), Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XVII, or U.S. Const., amend. VIII. Constantino v. Warren, 285 Ga. 851, 684 S.E.2d 601 (2009).

Practice and Procedure

Bail refused because of prior conviction. — Fact that the magistrate could not grant bail to the defendant, who had a prior conviction for burglary, was a result of the defendant's prior conviction and was not due to a "statutorily" deficient hearing. Burson v. State, 183 Ga. App. 647, 359 S.E.2d 731, cert. denied, 183 Ga. App. 905, 359 S.E.2d 731 (1987).

Effect of refusal to accept money. — Upon learning that the arrestee wanted to post bail and had the money to do so, a sheriff's sergeant was told by a sheriff's captain that because the arrestee was arrested by the City of Midville, the arrestee had to pay the fine at Midville. Although the sergeant made several calls to the City of Midville in an unsuccessful attempt to inform Midville that the arrestee had enough money to post bail, Burke County refused to accept the money, and this refusal amounted to a constitutional violation. Bunyon v. Burke County, 306 F. Supp. 2d 1240 (S.D. Ga. 2004).

Failure of the magistrate to initially set a bond did not require that the indictment against the defendant be quashed since when the error was brought to the magistrate's attention by the defendant's parole officer the magistrate immediately held a hearing and set bail. Nixon v. State, 256 Ga. 261, 347 S.E.2d 592 (1986).

Use of bond determination to compel urine test. — Consent for a urine test was not voluntary since the consent was premised on incomplete and thus deceptively misleading information received from a police officer that the test results would be used only "for determination of bond." Had the defendant been cautioned that the results of the search and seizure of the defendant's urine would be used to supply evidence against the defendant in an independent criminal prosecution, no consent might have been given. Beasley v. State, 204 Ga. App. 214, 419 S.E.2d 92 (1992).

Bond conditions did not constitute criminal punishment for double jeopardy purposes. — Defendant did not suffer multiple criminal punishment on account of the harassing phone call charge, under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-39.1(a), and the trial court did not err by refusing to bar the prosecution on grounds of double jeopardy as the defendant's bond conditions did not constitute criminal punishment; given the nature of the underlying charge and the abusive content of the letter defendant sent to the victim's workplace, the bond conditions were intended to further the interests of public safety, under O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1(e), and not to act as a punishment for the harassing phone call charge and, even if the defendant was not validly incarcerated for violating the bond, the defendant was not incarcerated in order to punish the defendant for the harassing phone calls charge. Bozzuto v. State, 276 Ga. App. 614, 624 S.E.2d 166 (2005); Edvalson v. State, 339 Ga. App. 348, 793 S.E.2d 545 (2016).

Conducting a hearing to modify the bond conditions of a third-time DUI offender and placing limitations upon the offender's driving privileges, predicated upon the necessity to protect the welfare and safety of the citizens of Georgia from a recidivist offender, was not punishment, nor was the hearing prosecution, for the purposes of double jeopardy. Strickland v. State, 300 Ga. App. 898, 686 S.E.2d 486 (2009).

Considering the nature of the defendant's arrest and charges, the amount and conditions of the defendant's bond, which included home confinement, drug and alcohol evaluation and counseling, installation of an ignition interlock device on the defendant's vehicle, and a SCRAM bracelet, were not punishment for purposes of double jeopardy; instead, the conditions were rationally related to an alternative purpose as the conditions were designed to prevent the defendant from being a danger to the community by committing future acts of driving under the influence while awaiting trial and to assure defendant's presence at court proceedings. Alden v. State, 314 Ga. App. 439, 724 S.E.2d 451 (2012), cert. denied, No. S12C1277, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 1011 (Ga. 2012). See also Edvalson v. State, 339 Ga. App. 348, 793 S.E.2d 545 (2016).

Denial of pretrial bail is interlocutory matter. — Denial of a motion for pretrial bail is an interlocutory matter requiring a defendant to follow the interlocutory procedure set forth in O.C.G.A. § 5-6-34(b). Howard v. State, 194 Ga. App. 857, 392 S.E.2d 562 (1990).

Only appealable issue from the denial of bail is the abuse vel non of the trial judge's discretion. Fields v. Tankersley, 487 F. Supp. 1389 (S.D. Ga. 1980).

When denial of bail not grounds for reversal. — If the record discloses that appellant has been tried, adjudicated a delinquent, sentenced, and detained because of that conviction, any possible error in denial of bail as ground for reversal has been removed. R.T.M. v. State, 138 Ga. App. 92, 225 S.E.2d 510 (1976).

Revocation of the bond. — Bond for a person charged with stalking lies within the discretion of the trial judge; however, because a bond revocation involves the deprivation of one's liberty the decision must comport with at least minimal state and federal due process requirements. Hood v. Carsten, 267 Ga. 579, 481 S.E.2d 525 (1997).

Appeal bond for rapist. — Granting of an appeal bond to a defendant convicted of statutory rape is discretionary with the convicting court. Grayer v. State, 176 Ga. App. 248, 335 S.E.2d 483 (1985).

Burden on appellant for appeal bond. — Burden of seeking a stay of execution and a release on bond is upon the appellant. Shaw v. State, 178 Ga. App. 67, 341 S.E.2d 919 (1986).

Trial court should not grant bond pending appeal unless the appellant presents sufficient information, evidence, or argument to convince the court that there is no substantial risk appellant will not appear to answer judgment, is not likely to commit a serious crime, intimidate witnesses, or otherwise interfere with the administration of justice, and that the appeal is not frivolous or taken for the purpose of delay. If the appellant does not carry this burden of convincing the court to reach a negative answer to all of these criteria, release should not be granted. Shaw v. State, 178 Ga. App. 67, 341 S.E.2d 919 (1986).

Applicability in federal proceeding. — Habeas corpus plaintiff, protesting conditions of plaintiff's detention for a state criminal violation, had to look to state law for any rights plaintiff might have regarding bond. Datz v. Hutson, 806 F. Supp. 982 (N.D. Ga. 1992), aff'd, 14 F.3d 58 (11th Cir. 1994).

Burden of proof. — Defendant has the burden of producing evidence on community ties, but the state has the burden of persuading by a preponderance of the evidence that a defendant is not entitled to release on bail. Ayala v. State, 262 Ga. 704, 425 S.E.2d 282 (1993).

Application for appeal bond remanded. — Defendant's case was remanded to allow the trial court to revisit the defendant's bond application as the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims had not been finally resolved and had been remanded, and as the questions surrounding the bond application were not moot; if the trial court denied the bond application, it was directed to specify the basis for the application's denial. Carter v. State, 267 Ga. App. 520, 600 S.E.2d 637 (2004).

Authority of superior court judge over order of designated judge. — Superior court judge had the authority to reconsider and revoke a pretrial bond that was set by another judge who was presiding in the judge's place by designation; the designated judge should not have granted the bond to the defendant after expressly finding that the defendant was likely to intimidate witnesses or otherwise interfere with the administration of justice. Rooney v. State, 217 Ga. App. 850, 459 S.E.2d 601 (1995).

Appeal bond prohibited. — O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1(g), precluding a trial court from granting an appeal bond to the defendant, who had been convicted of child molestation and aggravated child molestation, did not violate the separation of powers provision of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. II, Para. III because there was no constitutional right to an appeal bond, so the system under which prisoners were allowed to be released on bond pending an appeal was a legislative function, and the legislature's establishment of the parameters of such bonds did not invade the province of the judiciary. Getkate v. State, 278 Ga. 585, 604 S.E.2d 838 (2004).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Approval of sureties. — Former Code 1933, §§ 27-901, 27-902, 27-801 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-1, 17-6-2 and 17-7-90) provide for the approval of sureties by sheriffs or judicial officers. Qualifications, such as solvency and reliability, may be inquired into before approval. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-83.

Responsibility for approving or rejecting the surety on a criminal bail bond in a felony offense remains in the court having jurisdiction over the offense but, since it is a ministerial function, it may be delegated to a nonjudicial officer such as a sheriff. The authority to approve or reject the surety in misdemeanor cases is given by statute to the sheriff. 1976 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U76-39.

Residence of surety. — When a sheriff is authorized to accept bail and when the sureties have been approved by the sheriff of any county of this state, the detaining sheriff must accept bail in reasonable amounts without regard to the residence of the approved sureties. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-168.

Real estate as appearance bond when not completely paid for. — Justice of the peace may use discretion in accepting real estate which is not completely paid for as an appearance bond in a criminal proceeding. 1969 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 69-180.

Arbitrary detention period unlawful. — Arbitrary period of detention or until the accused has sobered is unlawful, unless the defendant is unable or unwilling to post bond, and if there is no responsible person available to take custody of the defendant. Therefore, an intoxicated person is entitled to be released into the custody of a responsible person as soon as bail is allowable and paid. If a police officer is acting reasonably, in good faith, and within the procedures prescribed by law, the officer cannot be held liable for any subsequent acts of the accused once the person is released from custody. 1967 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 67-214.

Prosecuting one for possessing one ounce or less of marijuana in a superior court makes the crime a felony punishable as a misdemeanor and would not invoke former Code 1933, § 27-901 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1). 1974 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U74-79.

Release of one accused of escape. — Assuming that release of one accused of escape does not interrupt the service of an existing sentence, the accused is entitled to be released on bail if the offense is a misdemeanor and, if a felony, the accused is entitled to bail either before or after indictment. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-136.

Probate court jurisdiction to set bail. — Because a probate court may hold a court of inquiry pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-20, it may also set bail for any criminal offense not included in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1(a). 1995 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U95-1.

17-6-1.1. Electronic pretrial release and monitoring program for defendants; requirements; procedures; fees.

(a) In addition to other methods of posting bail or as special condition of bond, a defendant may be released from custody pending the trial of his or her case on the condition that the defendant comply with the terms and conditions of an electronic pretrial release and monitoring program which is approved pursuant to subsection (j) of this Code section. The sheriff of a county may enter into agreements with such approved providers. A bonding company, bonding agent, or probation service provider may be a provider of such services.

(b) If it appears to the court that a defendant subject to its jurisdiction is a suitable candidate for electronic pretrial release and monitoring, the court may, in its sole discretion and subject to the eligibility requirements of this Code section, authorize the defendant to be released under the provisions of an electronic pretrial release and monitoring program. A judge may only authorize electronic pretrial release and monitoring if that judge has jurisdiction to set a bond for the offense charged and the defendant is otherwise eligible for bond under subsection (e) of Code Section 17-6-1. When a court of competent jurisdiction has already set bond for a defendant indicating that the defendant is otherwise eligible for release on bail pursuant to subsection (e) of Code Section 17-6-1, in addition to accepting cash in satisfaction of the bond set by a court, the court may instruct the sheriff that the defendant is to be released to an electronic pretrial release and monitoring program.

(c) The court, in its sole discretion, may revoke at any time the eligibility of any defendant to participate in the electronic pretrial release and monitoring program in which event the defendant shall be immediately returned to custody. If the defendant's case has not been assigned to a particular division of the court, the chief judge shall have such authority.

(d) A defendant may not be released to, or remain in, an electronic pretrial release and monitoring program if such defendant has any other outstanding warrants, accusations, indictments, holds, or incarceration orders from any other court, law enforcement agency, community supervision officer, county or Department of Juvenile Justice juvenile probation officer, or probation officer serving pursuant to Article 6 of Chapter 8 of Title 42 that require the posting of bond or further adjudication.

(e) A defendant released pursuant to an electronic pretrial release and monitoring program shall abide by such conditions as the court may impose relating to such program, including, but not limited to, the following:

(1) Periods of home confinement;

(2) Compliance with all requirements and conditions of the electronic pretrial release and monitoring program provider;

(3) Compliance with any court orders or special conditions of bond which may include an order directing that no contact, direct or indirect, be made with the victim or forbidding entry upon, about, or near certain premises;

(4) An order directing that the accused provide support and maintenance for the person's dependents to the best of his or her ability;

(5) Restrictions on the use of alcoholic beverages and controlled substances;

(6) Curfews;

(7) Limitations on work hours and employment;

(8) An order directing the accused to submit to test of breath, blood, or urine from time to time;

(9) Travel restrictions;

(10) An order directing that electronic pretrial release and monitoring equipment be kept in good working condition;

(11) An order directing that the person refrain from violating the criminal laws of any state, county, or municipality;

(12) An order directing timely payment of all fees connected with the electronic pretrial release and monitoring program;

(13) Payroll deductions to fund electronic pretrial release and monitoring fees;

(14) Provisions to permit reasonable medical treatment;

(15) Provisions for procuring reasonable necessities, such as grocery shopping;

(16) Provisions for attendance in educational, rehabilitative, and treatment programs; and

(17) Such other terms and conditions as the court may deem just and proper.

(f) Under no circumstances shall electronic pretrial release and monitoring equipment be introduced internally or beneath the skin of any person.

(g) In the event that a court of competent jurisdiction finds probable cause, upon oath, affirmation, or sworn affidavit, that a defendant has violated the terms or conditions of his or her electronic pretrial release and monitoring program, other than terms regarding home confinement set forth in paragraph (1) of subsection (e) of this Code section, or finds that the defendant provided false or misleading information concerning his or her qualifications to participate in the electronic pretrial release and monitoring program, including, but not limited to, name, date of birth, address, or other personal identification information, then the defendant's ongoing participation in such program shall be terminated immediately and, upon arrest of the defendant for such violation by any law enforcement officer, the defendant shall be returned to confinement at the county jail or other facility from which the defendant was released.

(h)(1) As an additional condition of electronic pretrial release and monitoring, a defendant authorized to participate in such program by the court shall pay a reasonable, nonrefundable fee for program enrollment, equipment use, and monitoring to the provider of such program. If a bonding company, bonding agent, or probation service provider is the provider, the fees earned in the capacity of being such a provider shall be in addition to the fees allowed in Code Sections 17-6-30, 42-8-34, and 42-8-102.

(2) The fees connected with the electronic pretrial release and monitoring program shall be timely paid by a defendant as a condition of his or her ongoing participation in the electronic pretrial release and monitoring program in accordance with the terms for such programs as approved by the court. Failure to make timely payments shall constitute a violation of the terms of the electronic pretrial release and monitoring program and shall result in the defendant's immediate return to custody.

(3) Defendants who have an extraordinary medical condition requiring ongoing medical treatment or indigent persons, as defined by the court, and who are selected by the court following the indigency standards established by the court may have such electronic pretrial release and monitoring fees paid by the sheriff with the consent of the governing authority.

(i) No defendant released under an electronic pretrial release and monitoring program under this Code section shall be deemed to be an agent, employee, or involuntary servant of the county or the electronic pretrial release and monitoring provider while so released, working, or participating in training or going to and from the defendant's place of employment or training. Neither the electronic pretrial release and monitoring provider nor the sheriff shall be civilly liable for the criminal acts of a defendant released pursuant to this Code section.

(j) Any person or corporation approved by the chief judge of the court and the sheriff in their discretion who meets the following minimum requirements may be approved to provide electronic pretrial release and monitoring services:

(1) The provider shall comply with all applicable federal, state, and local laws and all rules and regulations established by the chief judge and the sheriff in counties where the provider provides electronic pretrial release and monitoring services;

(2) The provider shall provide the chief judge and the sheriff with the name of the provider, the name of an individual who shall serve as the contact person for the provider, and the telephone number of such contact person;

(3) The provider shall promptly, not later than three business days after such change, notify the chief judge and sheriff of any changes in its address, ownership, or qualifications under this Code section;

(4) The provider shall provide simultaneous access to all records regarding all monitoring information, GPS tracking, home confinement, and victim protection regarding each person placed on electronic pretrial release and monitoring; and

(5) The provider shall act as surety for the bond.

(k) The sheriff shall maintain a list of approved providers of electronic pretrial release and monitoring services. The sheriff, in his or her discretion, may temporarily or permanently remove any provider from the list of approved providers should the provider:

(1) Fail to comply with the requirements of this Code section;

(2) Fail to monitor properly any defendant that the provider was required to monitor;

(3) Charge an excessive fee for use and monitoring of electronic monitoring equipment; or

(4) Act or fail to act in such a manner that, in the discretion of the sheriff, constitutes good cause for removal.

Code Commission notes. — Pursuant to Code Section 28-9-5, in 2009, "condition" was substituted for "conditions" in paragraph (h)(3).

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2009, p. 691, § 1/HB 306, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "The General Assembly finds that a program of electronic pretrial release, monitoring, and home confinement incorporates modern technology to accomplish the following purposes, including, but not limited to:

"(1) Ensuring proper prioritization of local incarceration resources;

"(2) Improving child support collections by giving nonpayors an opportunity to maintain employment while under electronic surveillance;

"(3) Better protecting crime victims by global positioning satellite (GPS) tracking and monitoring of pretrial release offenders to better ensure ongoing protection of crime victims;

"(4) Permitting defendants with extraordinary health problems to seek appropriate medical care;

"(5) Assisting sheriffs in alleviating jail overcrowding by creating alternative methods of pretrial release and monitoring and home confinement;

"(6) Reducing the costs of pretrial detention to governing authorities of counties as the costs of self-paid, electronic pretrial release and monitoring are substantially less than pretrial incarceration; and

"(7) Creating instant alert capabilities to law enforcement in the event terms of pretrial release are violated."

Ga. L. 2015, p. 422, § 6-1/HB 310, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "This Act shall become effective July 1, 2015, and shall apply to sentences entered on or after such date."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Providers shielded from civil liability for criminal acts of those being monitored. — In a wrongful death and personal injury action after two alleged criminals left their home in violation of a court order and the electronic monitoring providers failed to notify law enforcement, the trial court erred in denying the providers' motion to dismiss because O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1.1(i) shielded the providers from civil liability for the criminal acts of the alleged criminals the providers were monitoring. SecureAlert, Inc. v. Boggs, 345 Ga. App. 812, 815 S.E.2d 156 (2018).

17-6-2. Acceptance of bail in misdemeanor cases; posting driver's license as collateral for bail.

(a)(1) In all cases wherein a licensed driver of this state has been arrested, incarcerated, and charged with a violation of state law and where said violation is a misdemeanor, the sheriff of the county wherein the violation occurred shall be authorized, unless otherwise ordered by a judicial officer, after the individual has been incarcerated for not less than five days, to accept that individual's driver's license as collateral for any bail which has been set in the case, up to and including the amount of $1,000.00, provided such license is not under suspension or has not expired or been revoked.

(2) The individual posting a license as collateral pursuant to this subsection shall execute an acknowledgment and agreement between the individual and the State of Georgia as bond wherein the individual agrees to appear in court to answer the charges made against the individual and acknowledges that failure to appear in court when the case is scheduled for hearing, trial, or plea shall result in a forfeiture of the individual's license through suspension by operation of law effective upon the date of the individual's scheduled appearance. The individual shall also be notified that failure to appear in court as required may result in criminal prosecution for bail jumping as provided in Code Section 16-10-51. After execution of the agreement, except as otherwise provided by law, the license shall be returned to the individual and the original agreement shall be delivered to the prosecuting attorney for filing with the accusation, citation, or dismissal. Whenever an individual has been charged with a violation of Code Section 40-6-391, relating to driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs, then the provisions of Code Section 40-5-67 shall apply.

(3) A failure to appear by the individual who has been charged with a misdemeanor offense and who posted that individual's license as bail pursuant to this subsection shall, by operation of law, cause that individual's license to be suspended by the Department of Driver Services effective immediately, and the clerk of the court within five days after that failure to appear shall forward a copy of the agreement to the Department of Driver Services which shall enter the suspension upon the individual's driver history record. The posting of a license as provided in this subsection shall also be considered as bail for the purposes of Code Section 16-10-51. Where the original court date has been continued by the judge, clerk, or other officer of the court and there has been actual notice given to the defendant in open court or in writing by a court official or officer of the court or by mailing such notice to the defendant's last known address, then the provisions of this paragraph shall apply to the new court appearance date.

(4) A license suspended pursuant to this subsection shall only be reinstated when the individual shall pay to the Department of Driver Services a restoration fee of $25.00 together with a certified notice from the clerk of the originating court that the case has either been disposed of or has been rescheduled and a deposit of sufficient collateral approved by the sheriff of the county wherein the charges were made in an amount to satisfy the original bail amount has been paid. The court wherein the charges are pending shall be authorized to require payment of costs by the defendant in an amount not to exceed $100.00 to reschedule the case.

(5) Upon the trial of any individual charged with the offense of driving with a suspended license where such license was suspended as provided in this subsection, a copy of the acknowledgment and agreement executed by the individual together with certification by the clerk of the court of the individual's failure to appear shall be prima-facie evidence of actual notice to the individual that the individual's license was suspended.

(b) In all other misdemeanor cases, sheriffs and constables shall accept bail in such reasonable amount as may be just and fair for any person or persons charged with a misdemeanor, provided that the sureties tendered and offered on the bond are approved by the sheriff in the county where the offense was committed.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Approval of surety in misdemeanor cases. — This section placed the approval of sureties on misdemeanor bonds in the sheriff's discretion. Jarvis v. J & J Bonding Co., 239 Ga. 213, 236 S.E.2d 370 (1977).

Liability of municipality for bail policy. — In Georgia, a municipality had power under O.C.G.A. § 36-35-3(a) and Ga. Unif. Mun. Ct. R. 18.1 and under the municipality's charter to set a bail policy for its municipal court, and its police also had authority under O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-2(b) and 42-4-1(b); therefore, the municipality could be held liable under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for constitutional violations relating to the municipality's bail policy. Walker v. City of Calhoun, 901 F.3d 1245 (11th Cir. 2018), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 1446, 2019 U.S. LEXIS 2446, 203 L. Ed. 2d 681 (U.S. 2019).

Mere failure or refusal of an officer to accept bail under this section did not authorize release without bail, when the detention was otherwise lawful. Paulk v. Sexton, 203 Ga. 82, 45 S.E.2d 768 (1947).

Sheriffs not authorized to demand additional cash of sureties. — If one is charged with a misdemeanor, that person is entitled as a matter of law to furnish bail in a reasonable amount, with the sureties on the bond to be approved by a sheriff, and there is no provision of law whereby a sheriff can require such sureties to deposit with the sheriff a cash bond or a deposit of money in addition to the bail required by law before the sheriff will accept the bail tendered. Money so deposited remains the property of the person depositing the money, and the sheriff holds the money as trustee for the depositor. Washburn v. Foster, 87 Ga. App. 132, 73 S.E.2d 240 (1952).

Sheriffs not authorized to accept cash in lieu of bail. — There is no authority of law for a sheriff or arresting officer to accept a cash bond or a deposit of money in lieu of bail from one charged with a criminal offense. When an arresting officer requires or accepts a cash bond or a deposit of money in lieu of bail, the money remains the property of the person depositing the money with such officer, and the officer holds the money in trust for the depositor. Washburn v. Foster, 87 Ga. App. 132, 73 S.E.2d 240 (1952) (decided before enactment of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-4).

Authority of arresting officer to accept bond from felon. — Arresting officer has no authority to accept bond from one arrested under warrant for felony, but should return the party arrested to the county in which the crime was alleged to have been committed, for examination before a judicial officer of that county and fixing of bail by such officer in case of commitment. Paulk v. Sexton, 203 Ga. 82, 45 S.E.2d 768 (1947).

Deputy sheriff had authority to issue cash bond for drunk driving arrestee. — When a person was arrested by a state patrol officer inside a municipality for driving under the influence, a deputy sheriff, even without authorization from the court, could accept a cash bond; the trial court, as a result, had the authority to order the cash bond forfeited. Wilson v. State, 167 Ga. App. 421, 306 S.E.2d 704 (1983).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Approval of sureties generally. — Former Code 1933, §§ 27-801, 27-901 and 27-902 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-1, 17-6-2, and 17-7-90) provide for the approval of sureties by sheriffs or judicial officers. Qualifications, such as solvency and reliability, may be inquired into before approval. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-83.

Scope of sheriff's discretion. — Language "provided that the sureties tendered and offered on the bond are approved by a sheriff of any county" vests in the sheriff the discretion to accept or reject any surety offered on bail bond in misdemeanor cases and, if in the sheriff's judgment the surety does not own sufficient property or if the property is otherwise encumbered by reason of the execution of other bail bonds, the sheriff is not required to accept the surety tendered, whether it be an individual or a limited partnership. 1957 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 197.

Residence of surety. — In those cases in which a sheriff is authorized to accept bail, and in which the sureties have been approved by the sheriff, the detaining sheriff must accept bail in reasonable amounts without regard to the residence of the approved sureties. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-168.

Construction with O.C.G.A. § 17-6-5, dealing with cash bonds. — While it was true that Ga. L. 1953, Jan. - Feb. Sess., p. 331, § 1 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-5) authorized the taking of cash bonds under certain circumstances, it was quite obvious that the preceding provision was in addition to and not in place of former Code 1933, § 27-902 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-2). 1957 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 65.

Authority to accept or reject sureties in felony cases. — Responsibility for approving or rejecting the surety on a criminal bail bond in a felony offense remains in the court having jurisdiction over the offense but, since it is a ministerial function, the responsibility may be delegated to a nonjudicial officer such as a sheriff. 1976 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U76-39, but see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-15 and 1977 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U77-29.

No authority to set bail in felony cases. — Sheriffs and constables may accept bail in misdemeanor cases, but there is no authority for such officers to set bail in felony cases. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-152.

Court to which appearance bond made. — Appearance bond received for a person charged with a misdemeanor should be made to a court that has jurisdiction to try the offense. 1969 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 69-79.

Authority of constable to accept bond. — Constable is authorized to accept bond in a reasonable amount in a misdemeanor case, provided it was approved by the sheriff. 1962 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 111.

County police officer has the same authority as the sheriff in those cases when the defendant is arrested under a warrant charging a misdemeanor, so long as the prisoner is in the officer's custody. If the county police officer turns the prisoner over to the sheriff without bail, it would thereafter be the responsibility of the sheriff to accept bail. 1962 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 63.

Bail in traffic cases. — While it was true that Ga. L. 1937-38, Ex. Sess., p. 558, § 10 (see O.C.G.A. § 40-13-28) does not specifically provide for the taking of an appearance bond, but merely for the taking of a bond in cases which are to be appealed, acting under former Code 1933, § 27-902 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-2) the sheriff or constable could accept bail in cases involving traffic violations which are made returnable to the court of ordinary (now probate court). 1948-49 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 393.

Bonds for traffic violations. — O.C.G.A. § 17-6-2 gives the sheriff complete authority to approve or reject bail bonds written by a bonding company for traffic citations. 1993 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U93-6.

Disposition of interest accrued on cash bond. — County may not pay to a bondsman the interest accrued on a cash bond during the time it is held as assurance of a defendant's appearance at trial; upon timely appearance by the defendant, the bondsman is entitled to no more than the amount of the bond. 1986 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U86-39.

No modification of judicial order specifying cash bond. — Sheriff does not have the authority to modify a judicial order and accept a property or surety bond after a magistrate has specified a cash bond. 1987 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U87-22.

(a) In the case of any person engaged in military service who is charged with a misdemeanor and whose bond has been fixed at not more than $400.00 plus costs, any sheriff shall be allowed to accept, in lieu of bail, a recognizance bond executed and signed by the commanding officer of the person or the officer's lawfully delegated subordinates. Any person so charged may be taken into custody on behalf of the military installation by his commanding officer or by persons designated by the commanding officer of the military installation under the following terms and conditions:

(1) Immediately following his release he will be returned by the military police or other designated authority directly to the military installation and delivered to the duty officer of the command to which he is attached;

(2) He then will be restrained as appropriate in each case. The restraint will be for a minimum of 12 hours in all cases involving consumption of alcoholic beverages. (3) He will not be transferred, granted leave, or discharged from the military service without 36 hours' notice to the sheriff or his deputy sheriff;

(4) He will be delivered to the sheriff or his deputy on demand; and

(5) These terms or conditions will be withdrawn only upon his posting the required bond or otherwise being released by the sheriff, his deputy, or the appropriate court.

(b) The recognizance bond shall be of the following type:

In consideration of the release of _____ (name of person charged) charged with _____ (name or description of offense) it is agreed that the aforementioned prisoner will be restrained at the _____ (appropriate military installation) in whatever degree considered to be appropriate by his commanding officer. This restraint will be for a minimum of 12 hours in all cases involving consumption of alcoholic beverages. It is further agreed that he will not be transferred, granted leave, or discharged from the _____ (appropriate service) without notice to the sheriff or his deputy and will be delivered to the sheriff or his deputy upon demand. These terms and conditions will be withdrawn only upon his posting of the required personal bond or upon the release by the sheriff, his deputy, or the appropriate court.

17-6-4. (For effective date, see note.) Authorization of posting of cash bonds generally; furnishing of receipt to person posting bond; recordation of receipt of bond on docket; disposal of unclaimed bonds.

(a) Any party, defendant, accused, or other person required or permitted by law to give or post bond (or bail) as surety or security for the happening of any event or act in criminal matters may discharge the requirement by depositing cash in the amount of the bond so required with the appropriate person, official, or other depository.

(b) Any official or other person receiving any such bond shall give a receipt therefor and shall cause the fact of the receipt to be entered and recorded on the docket of the case in which it was given. If bond is given in a matter not appearing as a separate court case on a docket, a docket shall be prepared, maintained, and kept of all such transactions and the name and address of the person giving or making the bond, the date of the receipt of the bond, the name of the person receiving the bond, the amount of the bond, and a description of the cause for giving the bond, together with any and all other information desirable concerning the bond, shall be a part of the record in that separate docket.

(c) (For effective date, see note.) In the event that any cash bail posted pursuant to this Code section or Code Section 17-6-5 is not later claimed by the surety on such bond after a period of two years from the earlier of either the date of the surety being released from liability pursuant to Code Section 17-6-31 or the date of disposition of the case by the prosecutor or the court, including any appeal of a verdict or sentence, then the cash shall be paid into the general fund of the county having trial venue of the case, as in the case of forfeited cash bonds, provided that the officer who is in possession of such cash bail shall first have notified the surety, by mailing notice to such surety at the last address given by such surety, that such funds shall be forfeited if they are not claimed within 90 days following the date of mailing of such notice. Any claim by a surety for refund of a cash bail shall include acceptable documentary proof of disposition of the case from the prosecuting official or appropriate court records or such other documentation as may be acceptable to the official holding such cash bail as proof that the case has been settled.

Delayed effective date. — This Code section, as set out above, becomes effective January 1, 2021. For version of this Code section in effect until January 1, 2021, see the 2020 amendment note.

The 2020 amendment, effective January 1, 2021, in the middle of the first sentence of subsection (c), substituted "two years from the earlier of either the date of the surety being released from liability pursuant to Code Section 17-6-31" for "seven years from the later of either the date on which the defendant was required to appear in court" and "is in possession of" for "accepted."

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Cash bond authorized for drunk driving arrestee. — If a person was arrested by a state patrol officer inside a municipality for driving under the influence, a deputy sheriff, even without authorization from the court, could accept a cash bond; the trial court, as a result, had the authority to order the cash bond forfeited. Wilson v. State, 167 Ga. App. 421, 306 S.E.2d 704 (1983).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Construction with O.C.G.A. § 17-6-2 as to misdemeanors generally. — While it was true that Ga. L. 1953, Jan.-Feb. Sess., p. 331, § 1 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-5) authorized the taking of cash bonds under certain circumstances, it was quite obvious that this provision was in addition to and not in place of former Code 1933, § 27-902 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-2). 1957 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 65.

17-6-6. Clerk of court or judge to provide cash receipt book; furnishing of copies of receipt; disposition of original receipt and bond.

Other laws to the contrary notwithstanding, when an order is passed as provided for in Code Section 17-6-5 authorizing an officer to accept cash bonds, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court, if there is one, or, if there is no clerk, the judge passing the order to furnish the officer or officers authorized under the order with a book of blank receipts, consecutively numbered in triplicate and readily distinguishable and identifiable. The receipts shall be completed by the officers when making an arrest and accepting a cash bond so as to show the name of the person arrested, date of arrest, nature of the offense, amount of the cash bond given, and the name of the arresting officer. The arresting officer or the person receiving the cash bond shall deliver a copy of the receipt to the person arrested at the time the cash bond is given and shall file the original receipt together with the cash bond with the clerk, or judge, as the case may be, of the court having jurisdiction of the offense not later than the next succeeding business day of such clerk or judge following the date of issuance of the receipt. The remaining copy of the receipt shall be mailed to the commissioner of public safety.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Discretion is not unlimited. — Trial court's discretion under O.C.G.A. § 17-6-6 is not unlimited, particularly when its exercise affronts the goals of deterring the state from violating the state's discovery obligations and correcting the prejudice to the defendants caused by such violations. Marshall v. State, 230 Ga. App. 116, 495 S.E.2d 585 (1998).

Defendant failed to raise noncompliance at trial. — Although O.C.G.A. § 17-6-6 provides remedies for failure to comply with any of the discovery provisions, since the defendant did not raise the state's noncompliance at trial, the defendant did not give the trial court the opportunity to exercise the court's discretion in formulating an appropriate remedy and could not complain for the first time on appeal. Cox v. State, 242 Ga. App. 334, 528 S.E.2d 871 (2000).

17-6-7. Liability of arresting officer for failure to account for cash receipts and bonds.

All receipts issued to arresting officers and all cash bonds received under Code Sections 17-6-5 and 17-6-6 shall be accounted for by the receiving officers to the court from which the receipts were issued and, in the event that any such officer fails to account for same, he shall be personally liable for any default and may be punished as for contempt by the court, in addition to any other penalties which are provided for by law in such cases.

17-6-8. Proceedings upon failure of person arrested to appear; forfeiture of bond not a bar to subsequent prosecution.

If any person arrested for a misdemeanor arising out of a violation of the laws of this state relating to:

(1) Traffic or the operation or licensing of motor vehicles or operators;

(2) The width, height, or length of vehicles and loads;

(3) Motor common carriers and motor contract carriers;

(4) Commercial vehicle or driver safety;

gives a cash bond for his or her appearance as provided in Code Section 17-6-5 and fails to appear on the date, time, and place specified in the citation or summons without legal excuse, the court may order said cash bond forfeited without the necessity of complying with the statutory procedure provided for in the forfeiture of statutory bail bonds. A judgment ordering the case disposed of and settled may be entered by the court and the proceeds shall be applied in the same manner as fines. If the court does not enter a judgment ordering the case disposed of and settled, the forfeiture of the cash bond shall not be a bar to subsequent prosecution of the person charged with the violation of such laws.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Forfeiture of cash bond not a bar to subsequent prosecution. — As the forfeiture of a cash bond for any person arrested for violation of the traffic laws of this state does not bar a subsequent prosecution for such violation, such forfeiture does not constitute a prior disposition so as to bar prosecution by reason of double jeopardy. Any law enforcement officer or official of a political subdivision of this state who is authorized to enforce Part 2 of Article 2 of Chapter 7 of Title 16 and who is authorized by the judge having jurisdiction of the offense to accept cash bonds may accept a cash bond for the personal appearance at trial of the person arrested in lieu of a statutory bond or recognizance. 17-6-10. Acceptance of cash bonds for violations of ordinances or other offenses against municipalities; issuance of receipt; designated officials; effect of failure to appear in court; applicability to municipalities having similar provisions.

(a) All mayors or chief governing officers or their designated official or officials of municipalities are authorized to accept a cash bond for the personal appearance in court of any person charged with a violation of an ordinance or other offense against the municipality. The officer assessing and accepting a cash bond shall issue a receipt for the bond to the person charged with the violation.

(b) When any mayor or chief governing officer of any municipality of this state designates any municipal official to accept cash bonds under subsection (a) of this Code section, the delegation of authority shall be in writing and filed in the records of the municipality.

(c) Any person charged with a violation of an ordinance or other offense against a municipality who gives a cash bond for his personal appearance in court at a designated time and place and who fails to appear at said time and place shall forfeit the cash bond upon the call of the case for trial. It shall not be necessary for the municipality to take any further action to forfeit the cash bond. Forfeiture of a cash bond shall not be a bar to a subsequent prosecution of the accused for the violation.

(d) This Code section shall not apply to municipalities having provisions in their charters with reference to the subject matter of this Code section.

17-6-11. Display of driver's license for violation of certain traffic related laws; notice of failure to appear; suspension of license; arrest; seizure of license.

(a)(1) When an individual is apprehended by an officer for the violation of the laws of this state or ordinances relating to the offenses listed in paragraph (2) of this subsection, he or she may display his or her driver's license and be issued a uniform traffic citation in lieu of being:

(A) Brought before the proper magistrate or other judicial officer;

(B) Incarcerated;

(C) Ordered to post a bond; or

(D) Ordered a recognizance for his or her appearance for trial.

(2) This subsection shall apply to any violation:

(A) Of Title 40 except any offense:

(i) For which a driver's license may be suspended for a first offense by the commissioner of driver services;

(ii) Covered under Code Section 40-5-54; or

(iii) Covered under Article 15 of Chapter 6 of Title 40;

(B) Involving the width, height, and length of vehicles and loads;

(C) Involving motor common carriers and motor contract carriers;

(D) Involving hazardous materials transportation; or

(E) Involving road taxes on motor carriers as provided in Article 2 of Chapter 9 of Title 48.

(3) The apprehending officer shall include the individual's driver's license number on the uniform traffic citation. The uniform traffic citation, duly served as provided in this Code section, shall give the judicial officer jurisdiction to dispose of the matter.

(4) Upon display of the driver's license, the apprehending officer shall release the individual so charged for his or her further appearance before the proper judicial officer as required by the uniform traffic citation.

(b)(1) When a uniform traffic citation is issued and if the accused fails to appear for court or otherwise dispose of his or her charges before his or her scheduled court appearance as stated on the uniform traffic citation, prior to the court issuing a bench warrant, the clerk of court shall notify the accused by first-class mail or by postcard at the address listed on the uniform traffic citation of his or her failure to appear. Such notice shall be dated and allow the accused 30 days from such date to dispose of his or her charges or waive arraignment and plead not guilty. If after the expiration of such 30 day period the accused fails to dispose of his or her charges or waive arraignment and plead not guilty, the clerk of court in which the charges are lodged shall, within five days of such date, forward to the Department of Driver Services the accused's driver's license number. The commissioner of driver services shall, upon receipt of such driver's license number, suspend such accused's driver's license and driving privilege until notified by the clerk of court that the charge against the accused has been finally adjudicated. Such accused's driver's license shall be reinstated when he or she submits proof of the final adjudication and pays to the Department of Driver Services a restoration fee of $50.00 or $25.00 when such reinstatement is processed by mail.

(2) This subsection shall not apply to any violation of Title 40:

(A) For which a driver's license may be suspended for a first offense by the commissioner of driver services;

(B) Covered under Code Section 40-5-54; or

(C) Covered under Article 15 of Chapter 6 of Title 40.

(b.1) It shall be the duty of a law enforcement officer or emergency medical technician responding to the scene of any motor vehicle accident or other accident involving a fatal injury to examine immediately the driver's license of the victim to determine the victim's wishes concerning organ donation. If the victim has indicated that he or she wishes to be an organ donor, it shall be the duty of such law enforcement officer or emergency medical technician to take appropriate action to ensure, if possible, that the victim's organs shall not be imperiled by delay in verification by the donor's next of kin.

(c) Nothing in this Code section bars any law enforcement officer from arresting or from seizing the driver's license of any individual possessing a fraudulent license or a suspended license or operating a motor vehicle while his or her license is suspended, outside the scope of a driving permit, or without a license.

(d) The commissioner of driver services shall be authorized to promulgate reasonable rules and regulations to carry out the purposes of this Code section and to establish agreements with other states whereby a valid license from that state may be accepted for purposes of this Code section.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Notice provisions comport with due process. — This section is not violative of the due process clause of either the federal or state Constitutions for failure to provide a second notice when the license is forwarded to the Department of Public Safety for suspension. Jones v. State, 241 Ga. 178, 243 S.E.2d 872 (1978).

Judge and court administrator protected from suit by judicial and quasi-judicial immunity. — When the appellee sued the appellants, a judge of the former recorder's court and the court administrator, the appellate court's opinion was reversed to the extent the opinion allowed the appellee's suit to move forward against the appellants as the appellants were protected from suit by judicial and quasi-judicial immunity because, at the time, traffic offenses were adjudicated in the recorder's court; the appellee was dealing with the recorder's court as part of the court's official function of adjudicating traffic offenses; the court was obligated to report to the Georgia Department of Driver Services the status of the traffic case; and the act of making the report was a function that was judicial in nature and was protected by judicial immunity. Withers v. Schroeder, 304 Ga. 394, 819 S.E.2d 49 (2018).

Court clerks protected from suit by judicial and quasi-judicial immunity. — Appellant's suit against clerks of a city municipal court was properly dismissed because the clerks' failure to perform their duties to withdraw a canceled arrest warrant from the state's criminal database, which led to the appellant's arrest and detention, were actions protected by quasi-judicial immunity as to the appellant's claims of wrongful arrest. Spann v. Davis, No. A20A0202, 2020 Ga. App. LEXIS 368 (June 22, 2020).

Suspended Florida license could not be surrendered in lieu of bail. — Defendant, who was arrested for driving with a suspended Florida driver's license, was not entitled to surrender that license in lieu of bail and thereby avoid impoundment of the defendant's vehicle. (a) When a person posts bail bond prior to a preliminary or commitment hearing and is later bound over to another court for trial, the original bail bond shall not terminate but shall be valid to provide for the person's appearance at the trial of the case unless the amount of the bail is set higher by lawful authority, in which case new bail bond shall be posted.

Subsection (a) of this Code section shall apply only to those instances wherein the person required to post a bail bond shall be bound over to a court or grand jury of the same county wherein the committing court exercised its jurisdiction. Subsection (a) of this Code section shall not apply to those instances where a person is bound over to two or more courts or grand juries.

(c) Nothing contained in subsection (a) of this Code section shall be construed to require an additional bail bond in the event the court to which the person has been committed requires a lesser bail bond than the bond originally posted.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Habeas corpus relief. — Although pretrial habeas corpus was a proper remedy after the defendant challenged a failure to set bail, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-6-14(a), the defendant's initial bond sufficed to provide for the defendant's appearance upon the trial of the original charges; however, because the defendant was indicted within 90 days of the defendant's re-arrest on new charges, the defendant was not entitled to habeas corpus relief under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50. 17-6-15. Necessity for commitment where bail tendered and accepted; opportunity for bail; receipt of bail after commitment and imprisonment; imprisonment of person who offers bond for amount of bail set; effect upon common-law authority of court.

(a) After arrest, if bail is tendered and accepted, no regular commitment need be entered, but a simple memorandum of the fact of bail being taken shall be sufficient.

(b)(1) A reasonable opportunity shall be allowed the accused person to give bail; and, even after commitment and imprisonment, the committing court may order the accused person brought before it to receive bail. No person shall be imprisoned under a felony commitment when bail has been fixed, if the person tenders and offers to give bond in the amount fixed, with sureties acceptable to the sheriff of the county in which the alleged offense occurred; provided, however, the sheriff shall publish and make available written rules and regulations defining acceptable sureties and prescribing under what conditions sureties may be accepted. If the sheriff determines that a professional bonding company is an acceptable surety, the rules and regulations shall require, but shall not be limited to, the following:

(A) Complete documentation showing the composition of the company to be an individual, a trust, or a group of individuals, whether or not formed as a partnership or other legal entity, or a corporation or a combination of individuals, trusts, and corporations;

(B) Complete documentation for all employees, agents, or individuals authorized to sign or act on behalf of the bonding company;

(C) Complete documentation showing that the company holds a valid business license in the jurisdiction where bonds will be written;

(D) Fingerprints and background checks of every individual who acts as a professional bondsperson as defined in Code Section 17-6-50 for the professional bonding company seeking approval;

(E) Establishment of a cash escrow account or other form of collateral as follows:

(i) For any professional bonding company that is new to the county or that has operated continuously in the county for less than 18 months, in an amount and upon terms and conditions as determined and approved by the sheriff;

(ii) Once a professional bonding company has operated continuously for 18 months or longer in the county, then any such cash escrow account or other form of collateral shall not exceed 10 percent of the current outstanding bail bond liability of the professional bonding company; and

(iii) No professional bonding company shall purchase an insurance policy in lieu of establishing a cash escrow account or posting other collateral; provided, however, that any professional bonding company which was using an insurance policy as collateral as of December 31, 2013, may continue to do so at the discretion of the sheriff.

(F) Establishment of application, approval, and reporting procedures for the professional bonding company deemed appropriate by the sheriff which satisfy all rules and regulations required by the laws of this state and the rules and regulations established by the sheriff;

(G) Applicable fees to be paid by the applicant to cover the cost of copying the rules and regulations and processing and investigating all applications and all other costs relating thereto; or

(H) Additional criteria and requirements for approving and regulating bonding companies to be determined at the discretion of the sheriff.

(2) This Code section shall not be construed to require a sheriff to accept a professional bonding company or bondsperson as a surety.

(3) This Code section shall not be construed to prevent the posting of real property bonds and the sheriff may not prohibit the posting of property bonds. Additional requirements for the use of real property may be determined at the discretion of the sheriff. The sheriff shall not prohibit a nonresident of the county from posting a real property bond if such real property is located in the county in which it is offered as bond and if such property has sufficient unencumbered equity to satisfy the sheriff's posted rules and regulations as to acceptable sureties.

(c) This Code section shall not abrogate or repeal the common-law authority of the judge having jurisdiction.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Factors considered in setting bail. — Many factors are to be considered in fixing bail, some of which are the ability of the defendant to give bail, the seriousness of the offense, penalty, character and reputation of the accused, health, probability of the defendant appearing to serve sentence, forfeiture of other bonds, and whether a fugitive. Goodine v. Griffin, 309 F. Supp. 590 (S.D. Ga. 1970).

Principal factor is probability that accused will appear. — In setting the amount of bail, the principal factor considered, to the determination of which most other factors are directed, is the probability of the appearance of the accused, or of the accused's flight to avoid punishment. Goodine v. Griffin, 309 F. Supp. 590 (S.D. Ga. 1970).

Authority to accept sureties in felony cases. — This section placed the authority to accept sureties in felony cases in the office of the sheriff and not in the superior court. Jarvis v. J & J Bonding Co., 239 Ga. 213, 236 S.E.2d 370 (1977).

Sovereign immunity. — Use of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-15 to determine the acceptability of a surety involves discretionary function and is therefore protected by sovereign immunity. Washington v. Jefferson County, 221 Ga. App. 81, 470 S.E.2d 714 (1996).

Discretion of sheriff in approval of sureties. — This section placed the approval of sureties on misdemeanor bonds in the sheriff's discretion. Jarvis v. J & J Bonding Co., 239 Ga. 213, 236 S.E.2d 370 (1977).

Applicants for a certificate to operate as a bail bond company failed to state a procedural due process violation under O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-15 and 17-6-50 because Georgia law gave the sheriffs broad discretion to determine who was an acceptable surety to write bonds in the sheriffs' respective counties and the provisions did not require a sheriff to accept any specific applicant. A.A.A. Always Open Bail Bonds, Inc. v. Dekalb County, 129 Fed. Appx. 522 (11th Cir. 2005) (Unpublished).

Discretion of trial judge. — Amount of bail to be assessed in each criminal case is left to the sound discretion of the trial judge and in the absence of clear abuse of such discretionary power, the judge's action will not be controlled. Goodine v. Griffin, 309 F. Supp. 590 (S.D. Ga. 1970).

Acceptance of bond by sheriff. — While the face of the bond bore the signature of the sheriff of Clayton County rather than that of the sheriff of Floyd County, the sheriff of Floyd County testified at the forfeiture hearing that the sheriff relied upon the bond to release the defendant from custody and that a second bond was just "extra security." The sheriff's testimony made it clear that the sheriff did accept and approve the first bond. Osborne Bonding Co. v. Harris, 183 Ga. App. 764, 360 S.E.2d 32, cert. denied, 183 Ga. App. 906, 360 S.E.2d 32 (1987).

Accepting bond on Sunday. — To take a bond on Sunday, admitting a prisoner to bail is lawful. Weldon v. Colquitt, 62 Ga. 449, 35 Am. R. 128 (1879).

Authority of arresting officer to accept bond from felon. — Arresting officer has no authority to accept bond from one arrested under a warrant for a felony, but should return the party arrested to the county in which the crime was alleged to have been committed for examination before a judicial officer of that county and the fixing of bail by such officer in case of commitment. Paulk v. Sexton, 203 Ga. 82, 45 S.E.2d 768 (1947).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Authority of sheriff to approve sureties. — Effect of this section was to provide the sheriff with the statutory authority to approve or reject the surety on a criminal bail bond in a felony case. That section eliminates the need for that authority to be judicially delegated. 1977 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U77-29.

Disposition of interest accrued on cash bond. — County may not pay to a bondsman the interest accrued on a cash bond during the time the bond is held as assurance of a defendant's appearance at trial; upon timely appearance by the defendant, the bondsman is entitled to no more than the amount of the bond. 1986 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U86-39.

17-6-17. Bond or recognizance to be conditioned on appearance of person accused of crime at arraignment; proceedings upon failure of accused to appear.

In addition to all other requirements prescribed for appearance bonds or recognizances, the appearance bond or recognizance given by a person accused of the commission of a crime shall be conditioned upon the person presenting himself before the court at the time fixed for his arraignment. Upon failure of a person charged with a penal offense to appear before the court at the time fixed for his arraignment, the prosecuting attorney may proceed to forfeit the bond or recognizance.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Alteration of the indictment does not bar forfeiture. — Alteration of the indictment, with the consent and by the express authority of the defendant in the indictment or presentment, will not relieve the defendant's surety of a forfeiture if the surety does not produce the body of the surety's principal as the surety contracted to do. Green v. Russell, 176 Ga. 354, 168 S.E. 65, answer conformed to, 46 Ga. App. 510, 168 S.E. 68 (1933).

Defects in the indictment do not bar forfeiture. — Surety on a criminal bond cannot, in answer to scire facias brought for the purpose of forfeiting that instrument, prevent forfeiture if the principal in bond is absent merely because of defects in the indictment. provided, however, that a surety may charge and receive a minimum of $50.00 per bonded charge or offense as compensation, regardless of whether such compensation exceeds 15 percent of the face amount of any bond set.

Violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-30 gives the injured party a civil cause of action. — See Borison v. Christian, 257 Ga. App. 257, 570 S.E.2d 696 (2002).

Civil cause of action for recovery of amount paid in excess of statutory maximum. — After two bail bondspersons violated O.C.G.A. § 17-6-30 by accepting compensation from a family in an amount exceeding the then existing statutory maximum of ten percent as payment for posting bail bonds for a family member, the family had a civil cause of action against the bondspersons and was entitled to recover the amount of compensation which was in excess of the statutory maximum. 17-6-31. Surrender of principal by surety; forfeiture of bond; death of principal.

(a) When the court is not in session, a surety on a bond may surrender the surety's principal to the sheriff or to the responsible law enforcement officer of the jurisdiction in which the case is pending in order to be released from liability.

(b) When the court is in session, a surety on a bond may surrender the surety's principal in open court.

(c) The principal shall also be considered surrendered by plea of guilty or nolo contendere to the court or if the principal is present in person when the jury or judge, if tried without a jury, finds the principal guilty or if the judge dead dockets the case prior to entry of judgment and, upon such plea or finding of guilty or dead docketing, the surety shall be released from liability.

(d)(1) Furthermore, the surety shall be released from liability if, prior to entry of judgment, there is:

(A) A deferred sentence;

(B) A presentence investigation;

(C) A court ordered pretrial intervention program;

(D) A court ordered educational and rehabilitation program;

(E) A fine;

(F) A dead docket; or

(G) Death of the principal.

(2) Furthermore, the surety may be released from liability at the discretion of the court if:

(A) The principal used a false name when he or she was bound over and committed to jail or a correctional institution and was subsequently released from such facility unless the surety knew or should have known that the principal used a false name; and

(B) The surety shows to the satisfaction of the court that he or she acted with due diligence and used all practical means to secure the attendance of the principal before the court.

(e) If the prosecuting attorney does not try the charges against a defendant within a period of two years in the case of felonies and one year in the case of misdemeanors after the date of posting bond, then judgment rendered after such period may not be enforced against the surety on the bond and the surety shall thereafter be relieved of liability on the bond. This subsection shall not apply where the prosecuting attorney's failure to try the charges is due to the fault of the principal.

(f) No judgment shall be rendered on any appearance bond if it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that the surety was prevented from returning the principal to the jurisdiction because such principal was on active military duty.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Constitutionality. — Former Code 1933, §§ 27-904 and 27-906 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-31 and 17-6-71) fail to describe the procedure by which the surety may be relieved as therein provided for after final judgment, are not on this account void for uncertainty and indefiniteness as the statutes name the court in which the relief must be had as being the same court rendering the final judgment, and make it mandatory upon such court to relieve the surety, thus requiring the court to act in such manner as a court may properly act to effectually grant such relief. To the extent these sections are silent, former Code 1933, § 3-105 (see O.C.G.A. § 9-2-3) may be resorted to. Fields v. Arnall, 199 Ga. 491, 34 S.E.2d 692 (1945).

This section did not offend Ga. Const. 1945, Art. III, Sec. VII, Para. VIII (see Ga. Const. 1983, Art. III, Sec. V, Para. III) which inhibited the passage of legislation containing more than one subject matter or including matter not referred to in the caption. State v. Resolute Ins. Co., 221 Ga. 815, 147 S.E.2d 433 (1966).

More than one subject matter in bail legislation. — Georgia Laws 1943, p. 282, while amending former Code 1933, §§ 27-904 and 27-906 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-31 and 17-6-71), which deal with the subject of bail in criminal cases, by providing for service of the forfeiture proceeding and for relief of the surety after final judgment, does not contain more than one subject matter in violation of Ga. Const. 1877, Art. III, Sec. VII, Para. VIII (see Ga. Const., 1983, Art. III, Sec. V, Para. III). Fields v. Arnall, 199 Ga. 491, 34 S.E.2d 692 (1945).

O.C.G.A. § 17-6-31(d)(2)(A) and (d)(2)(B) are written in the conjunctive and both subparagraphs therefore must be true for that paragraph to apply; i.e., the principal must have given a false name when bound over and then released, and the surety must show due diligence. Raburn Bonding Co. v. State, 244 Ga. App. 386, 535 S.E.2d 763 (2000).

"Fault." — Since "fault," as used in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-31(e), regarding a surety's liability on a bond, is not a term of art, but is a word of general use; thus, the word is to be given the word's ordinary and everyday meaning. A.A. Prof'l Bail v. State of Ga., 265 Ga. App. 42, 592 S.E.2d 866 (2004).

Since no trial was scheduled for the defendant for more than one year after the date bond was posted and when the only "fault" that could have been attributed to the defendant was filing a conflict letter for the scheduled arraignment, this was insufficient to satisfy the "fault" requirement in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-31(e), and a surety's motion to set aside a bond forfeiture should have been granted. A.A. Prof'l Bail v. State of Ga., 279 Ga. App. 113, 630 S.E.2d 620 (2006).

Surrender privilege exists independent of bond conditions. — O.C.G.A. § 17-6-31 does not constitute a comprehensive regulation of bail-bonding procedures, but merely establishes the procedure whereby the surety on the bond may accomplish a "surrender" of the principal. Moreover, the privilege of "surrender" exists independent of compliance with the condition of the bond. City of Macon v. Davis, 251 Ga. 332, 305 S.E.2d 116 (1983).

City ordinance regulating release on criminal release bond valid. — City ordinance which seeks to hold the surety liable on a criminal appearance bond until the fine imposed is collected does not conflict with Georgia case law, is authorized by O.C.G.A. § 36-32-4, and does not conflict with O.C.G.A. § 17-6-31. City of Macon v. Davis, 251 Ga. 332, 305 S.E.2d 116 (1983).

Bonding company may arrest or recapture principal. Garner v. Mears, 97 Ga. App. 506, 103 S.E.2d 610 (1958).

Bonding company liable for torts committed while recapturing principal — If, in the course of such procedure the bail's employee so authorized should commit an unlawful assault, illegal entry, or other like tort, this would not take the act of the employee outside the scope of employment so as to relieve the bonding company in an action against the company for damages resulting therefrom. Garner v. Mears, 97 Ga. App. 506, 103 S.E.2d 610 (1958).

Deputy sheriff may receive surrender of the principal. Ward v. Colquitt, 62 Ga. 267 (1879).

Arrest by unauthorized persons. — Son of bail bond surety, if the son is not the surety's agent, cannot empower a third person to arrest the principal. Coleman v. State, 121 Ga. 594, 49 S.E. 716 (1905).

Privilege of surrender exists independently of compliance with the condition of the bond and even before the time for compliance. American Sur. Co. v. State, 50 Ga. App. 777, 179 S.E. 407 (1934).

Intent to surrender principal must be expressed and understood. — Producing or presenting a principal in court is not all that is required to discharge the obligation and relieve securities from their liability under a criminal bond. In order for a surrender of the principal in open court to be effective, the attention of the court must be called to the presence of the defendant principal, and the intention to surrender must be definitely expressed and understood. Perkins v. Terrell, 1 Ga. App. 250, 58 S.E. 133 (1907); American Sur. Co. v. State, 50 Ga. App. 777, 179 S.E. 407 (1934).

Duty to produce principal for lesser included offenses. — Bail for a prisoner to answer one offense includes the duty to produce the prisoner for a lesser offense contained in the greater. Wells v. Terrell, 121 Ga. 368, 49 S.E. 319 (1904).

No discharge on habeas corpus when certiorari overruled. — Accused surrendered by principal to sheriff, after overruling of certiorari, has no right to discharge on habeas corpus since ruling is a final judgment subject to review. Franco v. Lowry, 164 Ga. 419, 138 S.E. 897 (1927).

Relief of surety after forfeiture upon surrender of principal and payment of costs. — This section made it mandatory upon the court to relieve the surety from liability after final judgment has been entered when the surety has surrendered the principal to the court and paid all the costs in the forfeiture proceeding. Fields v. Arnall, 199 Ga. 491, 34 S.E.2d 692 (1945); Troup Bonding Co. v. State, 121 Ga. App. 25, 172 S.E.2d 476 (1970).

Surety not discharged by pretrial diversion program that was not "court ordered". — Bondsman was not released from liability on the bondsman's bond for an accused shoplifter under O.C.G.A. § 17-6-31(d)(1)(C) because of the shoplifter's entry into a pretrial diversion program because the statute applied only to "a court ordered" program, and in this case, the trial court had no involvement in the program. The enactment of O.C.G.A. § 15-18-80, allowing prosecutors to create pretrial diversion programs, did not implicitly amend § 17-6-31(d)(1)(C) or eliminate court-ordered programs. AA-Prof'l Bail Bonding v. Deal, 332 Ga. App. 857, 775 S.E.2d 217 (2015).

Forfeiture judgment not vacated upon surrender of principal. — While this section made it mandatory to relieve the surety from liability after final judgment when the surety had surrendered the principal and paid all the costs in the forfeiture proceeding, the final judgment was not vacated and set aside upon surrender of the principal. Fields v. Arnall, 199 Ga. 491, 34 S.E.2d 692 (1945); O.K. Bonding Co. v. State, 151 Ga. App. 711, 261 S.E.2d 448 (1979).

Failure of surety to act with due diligence. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in issuing a judgment of forfeiture against the surety upon consideration of evidence showing that the surety failed to exercise due diligence in locating the principal after finding that the principal had used an alias. Delta Bail Bonds v. State, 245 Ga. App. 491, 538 S.E.2d 146 (2000).

Surety acted with due diligence. — Bond forfeiture was properly set aside under O.C.G.A. § 17-6-31(d)(2) because the surety acted with due diligence in investigating the principal's identity since the surety reasonably relied on the county jail to alert the surety as to aliases, the surety verified the bond application information, and the surety had no access to other databases regarding aliases. State v. Anytime Bail Bonding, Inc., 301 Ga. App. 832, 690 S.E.2d 193 (2009).

Relieving surety from liability on bond. — Last provision of this section referred to a final judgment on the forfeiture of an appearance bond, and does not mean that the sureties can be relieved from liability on a bond after a final disposition of the criminal case against the principal upon the production of the principal after the criminal case is disposed of. Crow v. State, 90 Ga. App. 340, 82 S.E.2d 722 (1954).

Release of surety was error. — Trial court erred in releasing the surety, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-6-31(d)(2), when the court improperly admitted two unauthenticated documents and expert opinion testimony as to the true name of the principal since this determination did not require the drawing of a conclusion beyond the ken of the average layman; thus, the surety failed to present any competent evidence of the principal's true name and failed to show that the principal was incarcerated under a false name. State of Ga. v. A 24 Hour Bail Bonding, 280 Ga. App. 463, 634 S.E.2d 99 (2006).

Rearrest for higher offense stemming from same transaction discharges surety. — Surety is discharged when the principal is rearrested under indictment for a higher grade of offense growing out of the same transaction for which the principal was originally arrested. Benson v. Harris, 19 Ga. App. 328, 91 S.E. 491 (1917).

Principal rearrested for separate and distinct offense. — Surety is not discharged when the principal is rearrested for a separate and distinct offense unless the principal's custody by the state prevents the surety from surrendering the principal at the appointed time. Cooper v. Brown, 10 Ga. App. 730, 73 S.E. 1101 (1912); Benson v. Harris, 19 Ga. App. 328, 91 S.E. 491 (1917).

Discharge of surety. — Surety is discharged when the surety before final judgment at the next term produces the principal. Boswell v. Colquitt, 73 Ga. 63 (1884).

Surety is discharged even if bail or surety's agent must recapture the principal. Clark v. Gordon, 82 Ga. 613, 9 S.E. 333 (1889).

Surety is discharged when principal pays costs of forfeiture and produces a new bond which is accepted. Fleming v. Smith, 10 Ga. App. 701, 73 S.E. 1074 (1912).

Bond forfeiture improper. — When a criminal defendant was charged in municipal court with misdemeanor traffic offenses, demanded a jury trial, requiring transfer of the defendant's case to state court, and filed pre-trial motions, all resulting in a failure to try the defendant on the charges within one year of the defendant's bond, the surety on the defendant's bond was not liable when the defendant did not appear because the defendant's exercise of the defendant's rights to a jury trial and to file pre-trial motions was not "fault" under the provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-31(e); thus, the trial court abused its discretion when it denied the surety's motion to set aside its bond forfeiture order. A.A. Prof'l Bail v. State of Ga., 265 Ga. App. 42, 592 S.E.2d 866 (2004).

Discharge of surety except as to costs. — If, pending appeal of forfeiture, the principal is tried and acquitted, the surety is discharged except as to costs. Williams v. McDaniel, 77 Ga. 4 (1886).

Surety not discharged by postponement of trial. Paris v. State, 25 Ga. App. 707, 104 S.E. 510 (1920).

Failure of the district attorney to apply for requisition papers does not discharge surety. Paris v. State, 25 Ga. App. 707, 104 S.E. 510 (1920).

Surety not discharged by tender of additional bail when unapproved and unaccepted. Pittman v. Dorsey, 25 Ga. App. 596, 103 S.E. 854 (1920).

When surety brings the principal into court and arranges a special date for trial and is surety on a separate bond for principal's appearance at such trial, surety is not discharged. Bird v. Terrell, 128 Ga. 386, 57 S.E. 777 (1907).

What constitutes discharge for purposes of exonerating surety. — Bare verbal permission given by the court to the principal after entering a plea of guilty, to depart and return later in the day to receive sentence, is not a legal discharge, and will not exonerate the surety from the obligation under the recognizance. American Sur. Co. v. State, 50 Ga. App. 777, 179 S.E. 407 (1934).

Principal on active military duty. — When the bondsman was prevented from performing because the principal returned to duty with the Army in Germany, the bondsman performance was excused; no judgment should have been entered on the bond in the first place and no gratuity was involved in remitting the bond because the contract was unenforceable. Raburn Bonding Co. v. State, 244 Ga. App. 386, 535 S.E.2d 763 (2000).

Forfeiture by alien. — As an alien who suffered a bond forfeiture for failing to appear at the alien's arraignment on child cruelty charges was not an individual on active military duty, the alien could not rely on the holding in Raburn Bonding Co. v. State of Ga., 244 Ga. App. 386; 535 S.E.2d 763 (2000) as a basis for an argument that the forfeiture of the alien's bond should not have been allowed. Gomez-Ramos v. State, 297 Ga. App. 113, 676 S.E.2d 382 (2009).

Mistake of fact causing surrender of the principal will not affect the question of the surety's discharge. Wiggins v. Tyson, 112 Ga. 744, 38 S.E. 86 (1901).

When the surety gives assistance to police officials which contributes to the arrest of the fugitive defendant and initiates an action to surrender the defendant to the superior court, the surety should be relieved of the penalty on forfeiture of the bond. Troup Bonding Co. v. State, 121 Ga. App. 25, 172 S.E.2d 476 (1970).

When the principal pleads guilty, and fails thereafter to appear to abide sentence, in the absence of a surrender of the principal by the surety, or the principal's discharge by the court, the surety is liable upon the recognizance. American Sur. Co. v. State, 50 Ga. App. 777, 179 S.E. 407 (1934).

Surrender of principal following payment for nonappearance. — Surety had no standing either in law or equity to reclaim any portion of the funds paid over to satisfy a judgment entered against the surety for nonappearance of the principal, even though the principal was subsequently arrested and brought to trial. American Druggists' Ins. Co. v. Harris, 177 Ga. App. 481, 339 S.E.2d 759 (1986).

Motion to vacate a judgment on the ground that the bond is insufficient to require the defendant's appearance is maintainable without prepayment of costs. Hardwick v. Shahan, 30 Ga. App. 526, 118 S.E. 575 (1923).

Continuance properly denied. — Court did not abuse the court's discretion in failing to grant a bondsman a continuance to secure the defendant's appearance, although the bondsman asserted that the bondsman had been unable to produce the defendant in court due to the actions of certain law enforcement officials, when the only evidence offered in support of this assertion consisted of the bondsman's testimony that "we were held off for over thirty days going into Florida to keep from messing up ongoing investigations some other people had ... ." OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Bondsman's powers of arrest. — If the accused refuses to surrender, the bondsman can seize and hold the accused in order to make delivery. The bondsman's rights include broad powers of pursuit into another state, arrest, and detention. No process is needed as the bondsman's powers arise, not from the powers of the state, but from the relationship of principal and bondsman. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-78.

No refund when principal surrendered after forfeiture. — This section provided for the relief of a bondsman from liability prior to the time that the bondsman pays the forfeiture to the county. After payment to the county of a final judgment on an appearance bond forfeiture, the bondsman was not entitled to a refund of the forfeiture even though the bondsman later surrendered the principal to county authorities. 1976 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U76-28.

Release of principal who is serving sentence on another charge. — District attorney lacks authority to grant release to a surety on a bail bond when the principal is serving a sentence on another charge. 1969 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 69-432.

Professional Bondsmen

Cross references. — Penalty for participation in bail bond business by elected state official, § 45-11-8.

17-6-50. Persons deemed professional bondsmen; criminal background investigation information to be provided to clerk of court.

(a) Bondsmen or persons who hold themselves out as signers or sureties of bonds for compensation are declared to be professional bondsmen.

(b) A professional bondsperson is one who holds himself or herself out as a signer or surety of bonds for compensation who must meet the following qualifications:

(1) Is 18 years of age or over;

(2) Is a resident of the State of Georgia for at least one year before making application to write bonds;

(3) Is a person of good moral character and has not been convicted of a felony or any crime involving moral turpitude; and

(4) Is approved by the sheriff and remains in good standing with respect to all applicable federal, state, and local laws and all rules and regulations established by the sheriff in the county where the bonding business is conducted.

(c) The sheriff of the county in which the bonding business is conducting business or is seeking approval to conduct business shall initiate a criminal background investigation to ensure that a professional bondsman has not been convicted of a felony or a crime involving moral turpitude in this state or any other jurisdiction. The sheriff shall require the professional bondsman to furnish two full sets of fingerprints which the sheriff shall submit to the Georgia Crime Information Center. The center shall submit a full set of fingerprints to the Federal Bureau of Investigation for a national criminal history record check.

(d) It shall be the duty of each professional bondsman approved by the sheriff in accordance with this part to provide the clerk of each court before which one or more of such professional bondsman's principals are required to appear with the business name, complete address, telephone number, and e-mail address of the chief operating officer or his or her designee of such professional bondsman for the purpose of receiving any notices that may be sent pursuant to Code Section 17-6-71. Each professional bondsman shall have the duty to keep such information current and accurate. It shall be the duty of each clerk of court to keep, maintain, and update such information as provided by a professional bondsman.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Construction. — Because the two requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-50(b)(3) are stated in the conjunctive, the mere fact that a bondsman was never convicted of crimes for which the bondsman was arrested was not dispositive, and the lack of prior convictions did not necessarily equate to good moral character. Pryor Org., Inc. v. Stewart, 274 Ga. 487, 554 S.E.2d 132 (2001).

"Good moral conduct." — Term "good moral conduct" in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-50(b)(3), referring to the qualifications of a professional bondsman, is sufficiently definite to apprise an individual purporting to serve as a professional bondsperson that he or she cannot engage in unauthorized acts of law enforcement. Pryor Org., Inc. v. Stewart, 274 Ga. 487, 554 S.E.2d 132 (2001).

Approval of sureties. — Applicants for a certificate to operate as a bail bond company failed to state a procedural due process violation under O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-15 and 17-6-50 because Georgia law gave the sheriffs broad discretion to determine who was an acceptable surety to write bonds in their respective counties and the provisions did not require a sheriff to accept any specific applicant. A.A.A. Always Open Bail Bonds, Inc. v. Dekalb County, 129 Fed. Appx. 522 (11th Cir. 2005) (Unpublished).

Standing to challenge requirements of statute. — Applicant to become a professional bondsperson whose prior felony convictions were not removed by an order restoring the applicant's civil and political rights, issued by the Board of Pardons and Paroles, lacked standing to assert that the requirement of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-50 that a professional bondsperson have no felony convictions conflicts with the Board's constitutional authority. Harrison v. Wigington, 269 Ga. 388, 497 S.E.2d 568 (1998).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Section applies to limitation on public officials. — O.C.G.A. § 45-11-8, prohibiting elected officials from engaging in the bail bond business, pertains to the definition found in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-50. 1980 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 80-85.

Restoration of civil and political rights does not negate a conviction for purposes of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-50(b)(3), nor does it negate the separate necessity for finding that the applicant is of good moral character. 1997 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U97-10.

Approval of sureties. — Former Code 1933, §§ 27-901, 27-902, and 27-801 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-1, 17-6-2, and 17-7-90) provided for the approval of sureties by sheriffs or judicial officers. Qualifications, such as solvency and reliability, may be inquired into before approval. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-83.

(b) The fee for continuing education programs for professional bondsmen shall not exceed $250.00 annually.

17-6-52. Soliciting business or loitering around jails or courts to solicit business; giving of advice by law enforcement officers as to services of professional bondsmen.

Professional bondsmen, their agents, or employees shall not solicit business as bondsmen or loiter about or around jails, places where prisoners are confined, or the courts for the purpose of engaging in or soliciting business as such bondsmen. No state or municipal law enforcement officer or keeper or employee of a penal institution may suggest to or give advice to, in any manner whatsoever, any prisoner regarding the services of a professional bondsman to write a criminal bond for the appearance of a prisoner in any court at any time.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Constitutionality generally. — This section was not unconstitutional because the statute was in conflict with Ga. Const. 1976, Art. I, Sec. II, Para. III (see Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II) or Ga. Const. 1976, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XXV (see Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XXVIII) or with the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions; nor is the statute unconstitutional because the statute's provisions are arbitrary and unreasonable. Jackson v. Beavers, 156 Ga. 71, 118 S.E. 751 (1923).

Variance between title and subject matter of legislation. — Georgia Laws 1921, p. 243, from which Ga. L. 1921, p. 243, § 3 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-52) was codified was not unconstitutional because the law violated Ga. Const. 1976, Art. III, Sec. VII, Para. IV (see Ga. Const. 1983, Art. III, Sec. V, Para. III). If the body of the Act contained any matters different from what was expressed in the title, those matters can be rejected, as the remainder of the Act set forth a complete scheme, which was capable of enforcement. Jackson v. Beavers, 156 Ga. 71, 118 S.E. 751 (1923).

Construction. — O.C.G.A. § 17-6-52, which prohibits professional bondsmen from loitering around jails or courts to solicit business, is a criminal statute and must be strictly construed in favor of a bondsman. The statute's underlying purpose is to regulate the business of professional bondsmen, which affords a peculiar opportunity for fraud and imposition upon the persons whom bondsmen serve. Pryor Org., Inc. v. Stewart, 274 Ga. 487, 554 S.E.2d 132 (2001).

Free market solicitation by bondsman not prohibited. — Construing O.C.G.A. § 17-6-52 strictly, the statute is not intended to have such a far-reaching application as to prohibit a bondsman's free-market solicitation of the general public by means of a commercial filmed on location at a jail or court facility. Pryor Org., Inc. v. Stewart, 274 Ga. 487, 554 S.E.2d 132 (2001).

Clarity of language as to agency and soliciting business. — This section was not void for lack of clearness and definiteness in that the statute failed to state what acts and things would constitute agency on the part of their employees, and to define the meaning of soliciting business by bondsmen. Jackson v. Beavers, 156 Ga. 71, 118 S.E. 751 (1923).

17-6-54. No further compensation after becoming surety; when sum received to be returned to defendant; right to surrender defendant and to keep sum paid when defendant forfeits.

(a) No professional bondsman or his or her agents or employees who receive compensation for becoming the surety on a criminal bond shall thereafter receive any other sum in the case. If the surety surrenders a defendant into the custody of the court, the sheriff, or another law enforcement officer in the jurisdiction where the bond was made before final disposition of the case, the surety is required to return to the principal the compensation received for signing the bond as surety if such surrender of the defendant is for reasons other than:

(1) The defendant's arrest for a crime other than a traffic violation or misdemeanor;

(2) The defendant's cosigner attests in writing the desire to be released from the bond;

(3) The defendant fails to provide to the court and the surety the defendant's change of address;

(4) The defendant fails to pay any fee due to the surety after being notified by certified mail or statutory overnight delivery that the same is past due;

(5) The defendant fails to notify the court and the surety upon leaving the jurisdiction of the court; or

(6) The defendant provides false information to the surety.

(b) In the event of a forfeiture on the bond by the defendant, the surety shall have the right to surrender into custody the defendant who is the principal on the bond without returning any compensation paid by the defendant for the signing of the bond.

17-6-56. Bail recovery agents; requirements; registration.

(a) As used in this Code section and Code Sections 17-6-57 and 17-6-58, the term "bail recovery agent" means any person who performs services or takes action for the purpose of apprehending the principal on a bail bond granted in this state or capturing a fugitive who has escaped from bail in this state for gratuity, benefit, or compensation.

(b) A bail recovery agent must be a United States citizen, 25 years of age or older, and must obtain a license pursuant to Code Section 16-11-129.

(c) Any sheriff of a county shall require any professional bondsman who is a resident of or doing business in the sheriff's county to register his or her bail recovery agents in that county. The professional bondsman must submit to the sheriff, in a form and manner to be determined by the sheriff, a list of all bail recovery agents whose services may be used by such bondsman.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Vicarious liability for failure to register. — When a bond recovery agent was registered as an agent in Fulton County in 2000 but had not renewed that registration for 2001 when the agent apprehended in that county a principal on a bond issued by a professional bondsman who employed the agent, the failure of the county to maintain a system for the registration of individual agents precluded a successful prosecution of the agent for violating O.C.G.A. § 17-6-58, and the agent could not be held vicariously liable for the bondsman's alleged failure to register the agent in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-56(c). Additionally, O.C.G.A. § 17-6-58(a) did not provide the agent with fair notice that the agent could be held criminally responsible for acting as a bail recovery agent in Fulton County if the agent failed to renew the agent's registration in that county. Perkins v. State, 277 Ga. 323, 588 S.E.2d 719 (2003).

17-6-56.1. Continuing education programs for bail recovery agents; fee; annual requirement; certificate of completion.

(a) The Georgia Association of Professional Bondsmen shall approve continuing education programs offered by professional associations, educational institutions, government agencies, and others as deemed appropriate for bail recovery agents to attend.

(b) The fee for continuing education programs for bail recovery agents shall not exceed $125.00 annually.

(c) Bail recovery agents shall be required to obtain eight hours of continuing education annually.

(d) On or before January 31 of each year, each bail recovery agent shall submit a certificate of completion of eight hours of approved continuing education to the individual or department which is responsible for issuing bail bonds for each jurisdiction in which he or she is doing business.

17-6-57. Bail recovery agents; notification to local police; out-of-state agents; identification card.

(a) Any bail recovery agent who enters any local police jurisdiction in pursuit of and for the purpose of apprehending the principal on a bail bond or capturing a fugitive or engaging in surveillance of such principal or fugitive shall, prior to taking any action in his or her capacity as a bail recovery agent in that local police jurisdiction, notify by facsimile transmission or telephone the sheriff and police chief of the local police jurisdiction in which the surveillance, apprehension, or capture is to take place unless it is to take place in public.

(b) An out-of-state bail recovery agent shall submit proof to the sheriff or police chief that he or she is qualified to be a bail recovery agent under the requirements of his or her home state. An out-of-state bail recovery agent shall deliver a certified copy of the bail bond or of the forfeiture or failure to appear to the sheriff or chief of police. Such out-of-state bail recovery agent, if not qualified in his or her home state or if his or her home state does not require bail recovery agents to be qualified, shall employ a Georgia bail recovery agent who is lawfully registered pursuant to this part.

(c) Each professional bondsman shall issue a uniform identification card to each bail recovery agent registered by the professional bondsman which identification card shall include the bail recovery agent's name, height, weight, address, photograph, and signature. The identification card shall also include the signature of the professional bondsman who has registered the bail recovery agent as required in subsection (c) of Code Section 17-6-56. A bail recovery agent shall be required to carry such identification card while acting in the capacity as a bail recovery agent.

17-6-58. Penalty for violation; liability.

(a) Any bail recovery agent who fails to register with the local sheriff or who is otherwise unqualified to act as a bail recovery agent but who nonetheless attempts to apprehend or capture a principal on a bail bond or a fugitive or who succeeds in apprehending or capturing such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor upon conviction for the first violation and shall be guilty of a felony upon conviction for the second and all subsequent violations punishable by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years.

(b) Any bondsman or bonding company owner, surety, or agent who hires a bail recovery agent who is not qualified to act as a bail recovery agent pursuant to Code Sections 17-6-56 and 17-6-57 shall be guilty of a misdemeanor upon conviction for the first violation and shall be guilty of a felony upon conviction for the second and all subsequent violations punishable by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years, or a fine of not more than $10,000.00, or both.

(c) No bail recovery agent shall wear, carry, or display any uniform, badge, shield, card, or other item with any printing, insignia, or emblem that purports to indicate that such bail recovery agent is an employee, officer, or agent of any state or federal government or any political subdivision of any state or federal government. A violation of this subsection shall be punished upon conviction as a felony punishable by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years, or a fine of not more than $10,000.00, or both.

(d) A bail recovery agent who enters the wrong property, causes damage to said property, or causes injury to anyone thereon is liable for all damages.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Fair notice required. — When a bond recovery agent was registered as an agent in Fulton County in 2000 but had not renewed that registration for 2001 when the agent apprehended in that county a principal on a bond issued by a professional bondsman who employed the agent, the failure of the county to maintain a system for the registration of individual agents precluded a successful prosecution of the agent for violating O.C.G.A. § 17-6-58, and the agent could not be held vicariously liable for the bondsman's alleged failure to register the agent in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-56(c). ARTICLE 3

PROCEEDINGS FOR FORFEITURE OF BONDS OR RECOGNIZANCES

17-6-70. When forfeiture occurs.

(a) A bond forfeiture occurs at the end of the court day upon the failure of appearance of a principal of any bond or recognizance given for the appearance of that person.

(b) An appearance bond shall not be forfeited unless the clerk of the court gave the surety at least 72 hours' written notice, exclusive of Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays, before the time of the required appearance of the principal. Notice shall not be necessary if the time for appearance is within 72 hours from the time of arrest, provided the time for appearance is stated on the bond, or where the principal is given actual notice in open court.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Enforcement of criminal bonds or recognizances. — Criminal bonds or recognizances must be enforced according to the procedure prescribed by statute; i.e., by entering a rule nisi, issuing a scire facias, and entering a judgment absolute, and not by an action on the debt. Garner v. Chambers, 75 Ga. App. 756, 44 S.E.2d 507 (1947).

Trial court's denial of a surety's motion to set aside a judgment of forfeiture absolute was properly denied since: (1) the defendant and the surety were ordered to appear before the trial court and show cause why the bond should not be forfeited; (2) neither the defendant nor the surety appeared; (3) the surety did not receive notice of the judgment until five months after the hearing; (4) the trial court followed O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-70 and 17-6-71 to the letter; and (5) even if O.C.G.A. § 15-6-21(c) obligated the trial court to serve notice of the judgment absolute, the surety failed to exercise any diligence whatsoever, and any harm the surety suffered was self-imposed. Reliable Bonding Co. v. State, 262 Ga. App. 280, 585 S.E.2d 192 (2003).

Rule nisi commences forfeiture proceeding. — Real beginning of a forfeiture proceeding is the issuance of the rule nisi and its signature by the judge. Perkins v. Terrell, 1 Ga. App. 250, 58 S.E. 133 (1907).

Voluntary bond may be forfeited by scire facias. Smith v. Spencer, 63 Ga. 702 (1879).

Neither trial nor waiver thereof is a requisite to forfeiture. — It is not requisite to the forfeiture of a bail that there shall have been a committing trial or an express waiver thereof by the obligor. Bird v. Terrell, 128 Ga. 386, 57 S.E. 777 (1907).

No need to allege that case called in order on the docket. — It is not necessary that it be alleged in the scire facias that the case was called in its order on the docket, or that the state had announced ready for trial. Collins v. Smith, 7 Ga. App. 653, 67 S.E. 847 (1910).

Record must show that the principal was called and failed to appear. Park v. State, 4 Ga. 329 (1848).

It must appear that there was an opportunity to produce the principal. Wellmaker v. Terrell, 3 Ga. App. 791, 60 S.E. 464 (1908).

Bonding company was given proper notice when a copy of the trial calendar was mailed to the company ten days prior to the defendant's scheduled trial date. Taylor v. State, 194 Ga. App. 245, 390 S.E.2d 601 (1990).

Record must show a judgment of forfeiture before a bail can be made liable. Spicer v. State, 9 Ga. 49 (1850).

When forfeiture not premature. — When a criminal recognizance is forfeited at one term, and a scire facias is issued and made returnable to a later term and is duly served before that term, and when at the term to which it is returnable the case against the principal is called, and upon the principal's failure to appear, forfeiture absolute is taken, such forfeiture is not premature. Robinson v. Brown, 146 Ga. 257, 91 S.E. 31 (1916).

Triggering dates for the applicable statutory notice and hearing provisions in bond forfeiture proceedings are not limited to calculation from the date of a principal's initial time of required appearance and failure to appear; the statute allows initiation of the notice and hearing procedures after any time of required appearance and failure to appear thereat. Griffin v. State, 194 Ga. App. 624, 391 S.E.2d 675 (1990).

Commencing of forfeiture proceedings after traverse jurors discharged. — When, after one panel of the traverse jurors has been discharged for the term, and all cases, including criminal cases, have been continued, the solicitor general (now district attorney) cannot proceed to forfeit a recognizance and issue scire facias returnable to the next term, and at that term have final judgment of forfeiture against the surety, although the principal does not appear at either term. Lamb v. State, 73 Ga. 587 (1884).

When and where scire facias returnable. — Scire facias required by law to be issued upon the forfeiture of a criminal bond or recognizance must be made returnable to the term of court next following the term at which the bond or recognizance was forfeited. Garner v. Chambers, 75 Ga. App. 756, 44 S.E.2d 507 (1947).

It is no defense that someone without authority has informed the obligor that the obligor has been discharged. Duffey v. Harris, 19 Ga. App. 646, 91 S.E. 1006 (1917).

Plea of duress is not a defense. Spicer v. State, 9 Ga. 49 (1850).

Attack on indictment against principal. — It avails one nothing to attack the indictment returned against the principal, unless the indictment appears to be void. Williams v. Candler, 119 Ga. 179, 45 S.E. 989 (1903).

Blood relationship between principal and district attorney as a defense. — Fact that the solicitor general (now district attorney) who presents the indictment of the principal to the grand jury is a blood relation of the principal, and that the solicitor general's (district attorney's) successor who takes the forfeiture nisi is a relation by marriage, presents no defense when both are out of office when the case is heard. Salter v. State, 125 Ga. 760, 54 S.E. 685 (1906).

Defense that the district attorney failed to announce ready for trial for the state has no merit when a case is called in its regular order. Collins v. Smith, 7 Ga. App. 653, 67 S.E. 847 (1910); Duffey v. Harris, 19 Ga. App. 646, 91 S.E. 1006 (1917).

Continuance did not render original notice invalid. — Final judgment of forfeiture on a criminal appearance bond posted by the surety was proper under O.C.G.A. § 17-6-70(a) because the surety received notice of the execution hearing within the statutory time period under O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71(a) and the execution hearing took place within the required window. That the state sought and obtained a continuance from the originally-scheduled date for the execution hearing did not magically render the original notice invalid; because the original notice was valid, that notice was also not later invalidated by a subsequent notice of a new hearing date. Powell v. State, 313 Ga. App. 535, 722 S.E.2d 158 (2012).

17-6-71. Execution hearing on failure of principal to appear.

(a) The judge shall, at the end of the court day, upon the failure of the principal to appear, forfeit the bond, issue a bench warrant for the principal's arrest, and order an execution hearing not sooner than 120 days but not later than 150 days after such failure to appear. Notice of the execution hearing shall be served by the clerk of the court in which the bond forfeiture occurred within ten days of such failure to appear by certified mail or by electronic means as provided in Code Section 17-6-50 to the surety at the address listed on the bond or by personal service to the surety within ten days of such failure to appear at its home office or to its designated registered agent. Service shall be considered complete upon the mailing of such certified notice. Such ten-day notice shall be adhered to strictly. If notice of the execution hearing is not served as specified in this subsection, the surety shall be relieved of liability on the appearance bond.

(b) If at the execution hearing it is determined that judgment should be entered, the judge shall so order and a writ of fieri facias shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the court where such judgment is entered. The provisions of this subsection shall apply to all bail bonds, whether returnable to superior court, state court, probate court, magistrate court, or municipal court.

General Consideration

More than one subject matter in bail legislation. — Ga. L. 1943, p. 282, while amending former Code 1933, §§ 27-904 and 27-906 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-31 and 17-6-71), which dealt with the subject of bail in criminal cases, by providing for service of the forfeiture proceeding and for relief of the surety after final judgment, did not contain more than one subject matter in violation of the Georgia Constitution (see Ga. Const. 1983, Art. III, Sec. V, Para. III). Fields v. Arnall, 199 Ga. 491, 34 S.E.2d 692 (1945).

Procedure for relief of surety not void for uncertainty. — Former Code 1933, §§ 27-904 and 27-906 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-31 and 17-6-71) although failing to describe the procedure by which the surety may be relieved as therein provided for after final judgment, are not on this account void for uncertainty and indefiniteness as the statutes name the court in which the relief must be had as being the same court rendering the final judgment, and make it mandatory upon such court to relieve the surety, thus requiring the court to act in such manner as a court may properly act to effectually grant such relief, and to the extent that these sections are silent, the provisions of former Code 1933, § 3-105 (see O.C.G.A. § 9-2-3) may be resorted to. Fields v. Arnall, 199 Ga. 491, 34 S.E.2d 692 (1945).

Enforcement of criminal bonds or recognizances. — Criminal bonds or recognizances must be enforced according to the procedure prescribed by statute; i.e., by entering a rule nisi, issuing a scire facias, and entering a judgment absolute, and not by an action on the debt. Garner v. Chambers, 75 Ga. App. 756, 44 S.E.2d 507 (1947).

Trial court's denial of a surety's motion to set aside a judgment of forfeiture absolute was properly denied since: (1) the defendant and the surety were ordered to appear before the trial court and show cause why the bond should not be forfeited; (2) neither the defendant nor the surety appeared; (3) the surety did not receive notice of the judgment until five months after the hearing; (4) the trial court followed O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-70 and 17-6-71 to the letter; and (5) even if O.C.G.A. § 15-6-21(c) obligated the trial court to serve notice of the judgment absolute, the surety failed to exercise any diligence whatsoever, and any harm the surety suffered was self-imposed. Reliable Bonding Co. v. State, 262 Ga. App. 280, 585 S.E.2d 192 (2003).

Bonds to which statute applicable. — Whether the defendant was admitted to bail under former Code 1933, § 70-308 (see O.C.G.A. § 5-5-46), was pending decision on defendant's motion for new trial, or under former Code 1933, § 6-1005 (see O.C.G.A. § 5-6-45) was pending decision on defendant's appeal, the forfeiture procedures of former Code 1933, § 27-906 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71) applied to the bond. State v. Slaughter, 246 Ga. 174, 269 S.E.2d 446 (1980).

Procedure for forfeiture of bond granted. — Forfeiture of an appeal or supersedeas bond granted under former Code 1933, § 6-1005 (see O.C.G.A. § 5-6-45) was accomplished pursuant to former Code 1933, § 27-906 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71) by issuing a rule nisi and a writ of scire facias. State v. Slaughter, 246 Ga. 174, 269 S.E.2d 446 (1980).

Nature of proceeding. — Proceeding by a scire facias to forfeit a criminal recognizance is a civil case, distinctly separate from the criminal indictment, and ancillary thereto for one purpose only, the securing of the defendant's presence. Perkins v. Terrell, 1 Ga. App. 250, 58 S.E. 133 (1907).

Proceeding brought for forfeiture of a bond is a summary civil action accomplished pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71. Farmer v. State, 199 Ga. App. 576, 405 S.E.2d 569 (1991).

Judgment by motion is a mere nullity. — Suit by scire facias or otherwise is necessary for entering a judgment on a recognizance bond; a judgment by motion in such a case is a mere nullity. Robinson v. Gordon, 85 Ga. 559, 11 S.E. 844 (1890); Braxton v. Candler, 112 Ga. 459, 37 S.E. 710 (1900).

Judgment by motion can be entered at the return term following the issuance and service of the scire facias upon the principal and surety when neither files an answer nor shows a sufficient cause to the contrary. Coffin v. Dorsey, 27

Ga. App. 131, 107 S.E. 564 (1921).

While the forfeiture proceeding is a civil case, this does not mean that a separate civil action has to be filed and that the trial court cannot summarily render the court's decision. State v. Slaughter, 246 Ga. 174, 269 S.E.2d 446 (1980).

Surety's agreement that liability be determined under statute. — When the surety enters into a security bond in a criminal case, the surety impliedly agrees that the surety's liability may be determined under this section without the state's initiation of a separate action. State v. Slaughter, 246 Ga. 174, 269 S.E.2d 446 (1980).

Securities become quasi-parties to the proceedings, and subject themselves to the jurisdiction of the court, so that summary judgment may be rendered on the securities' bonds. State v. Slaughter, 246 Ga. 174, 269 S.E.2d 446 (1980).

Issuance of scire facias generally. — Scire facias is to be issued from the court of the county in which the indictment issues, rather than that in which the bail resides. Cooper v. State, 17 Ga. 437 (1855).

County clerk (now the clerk of the court) issues the scire facias on the recognizance, returnable to the next term of court. If issued too late to be returned to the next term, a new scire facias should be issued returnable to the succeeding term. In such case, no new forfeiture of the bond need be entered. Wright v. State, 51 Ga. 524 (1874); Rowland v. Towns, 120 Ga. 74, 47 S.E. 581 (1904); Bird v. Terrell, 128 Ga. 386, 57 S.E. 777 (1907).

It is proper to direct the scire facias to all and singular the sheriffs of this state. It may thus be directed to a sheriff of another county than that in which the indictment is found. Fryer v. State, 142 Ga. 81, 82 S.E. 497 (1914).

Service of scire facias against the principal is not a prerequisite to a judgment against the principal's bail. Fryer v. State, 142 Ga. 81, 82 S.E. 497 (1914).

What is insufficient service of scire facias. — Mere knowledge by the bondsman that the matter will be heard at a certain term, or the writing of letters to the bail bondsman by the clerk or other officials, will not suffice for service of scire facias. Accredited Sur. & Cas. Co. v. Busbee, 137 Ga. App. 808, 224 S.E.2d 852 (1976).

Scire facias upon a criminal recognizance is amendable at the trial term, so as to make it conform in the description to the bond upon which it issued. Myrick v. State, 13 Ga. 190 (1853).

Amendment of rule nisi by county court to acquire jurisdiction. — See Warren v. Slaton, 14 Ga. App. 734, 82 S.E. 307 (1914).

Scire facias as issued may not be amended to make scire facias returnable at a different term. Warren v. Slaton, 14 Ga. App. 734, 82 S.E. 307 (1914).

When and where scire facias returnable. — Scire facias required by law to be issued upon the forfeiture of a criminal bond or recognizance must be made returnable to the term of court next following the term at which the bond or recognizance was forfeited. Garner v. Chambers, 75 Ga. App. 756, 44 S.E.2d 507 (1947).

Response to forfeiture and issuance of scire facias. — When a criminal recognizance has been duly forfeited and a scire facias has been issued and served, the principal has until the state case against the principal has been called at the next term to appear and answer the charge, and the surety has until that time to produce the principal to answer the charge against the principal. If the principal fails to appear, or the surety fails to produce the principal and shows no sufficient excuse or reason for not doing so, it is proper for the court to enter against them a judgment absolute upon the scire facias. Coffin v. Dorsey, 27 Ga. App. 131, 107 S.E. 564 (1921).

When jury trial required. — Jury trial is not required when a bond is forfeited, unless the trial court agrees that there are genuine issues of material fact to be resolved. State v. Slaughter, 246 Ga. 174, 269 S.E.2d 446 (1980).

When judgment may be rendered. — Judgment may not be rendered before the time is up for the surety to produce the principal. Russell v. State, 45 Ga. 9 (1872); Boswell v. Colquitt, 73 Ga. 63 (1884).

Judgment may be rendered at the term to which the scire facias is returnable, if no sufficient reason is shown to the contrary. Bird v. Terrell, 128 Ga. 386, 57 S.E. 777 (1907).

There may be a judgment of dismissal and for costs only, but this does not invalidate the appearance bond of the defendant or relieve defendant's sureties. Perkins v. Terrell, 1 Ga. App. 250, 58 S.E. 133 (1907).

Amount of the bond need not be specified in the judgment. Spicer v. State, 9 Ga. 49 (1850).

Relief of surety upon surrender of principal and payment of costs. — Former Code 1933, §§ 27-904 and 27-906 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-31 and 17-6-71) were mandatory upon the court to relieve the surety from liability after final judgment had been entered, when the surety had surrendered the principal to the court and paid all the costs in the forfeiture proceeding. Fields v. Arnall, 199 Ga. 491, 34 S.E.2d 692 (1945).

Forfeiture judgment not set aside upon surrender of principal and payment of costs. — Former Code 1933, §§ 27-904 and 27-906 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-31 and 17-6-71), while making it mandatory upon the court, after rendering final judgment of forfeiture of a criminal bond, to relieve the surety from liability thereunder upon the surety surrendering the principal into court and paying all costs, did not authorize in such a case the setting aside of such final judgment, and motion praying only that such judgment be set aside because the principal had been surrendered into court and costs paid, was properly dismissed on demurrer. Fields v. Arnall, 199 Ga. 491, 34 S.E.2d 692 (1945).

Surety not relieved by arrest and detention by another state. — While ordinarily, if an act of the state prevents the appearance of the principal for trial, the surety is relieved of the liability under the bond, such rule does not apply as to an arrest and detention by another state. Walls v. State, 111 Ga. App. 337, 141 S.E.2d 606 (1965).

Fact that the principal in a bail bond, given for appearance in the courts of this state for trial of an offense committed in this state, is unable to appear because the principal is confined in jail in another state for a violation of the laws of that state, is not a defense to a scire facias issued against the principal and the principal's surety pursuant to a forfeiture of the bond. Walls v. State, 111 Ga. App. 337, 141 S.E.2d 606 (1965).

Appeal from denial of surety is motion to dismiss and judgment for state. — When a surety orally objected during a bond forfeiture hearing to reinitiated bond forfeiture proceedings under O.C.G.A. § 17-6-70, and the trial court issued judgment rule absolutes in the state's favor and denied the surety's motion to dismiss, the matter was properly treated as a direct appeal. Griffin v. State, 194 Ga. App. 624, 391 S.E.2d 675 (1990).

Appellate jurisdiction from forfeiture order was proper. — Contrary to the state's contention, a direct appeal was authorized from an order forfeiting a surety's criminal appearance bond because the trial court entered a final judgment of forfeiture pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71(b) after conducting an execution hearing; thus, appellate jurisdiction was proper. Anytime Bail Bonding, Inc. v. State, 299 Ga. App. 695, 683 S.E.2d 358 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0045, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 154 (Ga. 2010).

Timing

Strict compliance with ten day notice period was required. — When the defendant failed to appear for a hearing, O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71(a) directed the trial court to forfeit the defendant's bond, issue a bench warrant, order an execution hearing, and notify the surety of the execution hearing within ten days; because notice was not sent to the surety until 11 days passed, the forfeiture case should have been dismissed. Anytime Bail Bonding, Inc. v. State of Georgia, 350 Ga. App. 288, 828 S.E.2d 662 (2019).

Forfeiture allowed in event of less than strict compliance. — Trial court did not err in forfeiting the bond for the principal's failure to appear for arraignment even though the state served the surety 12 days after the principal's failure to appear; O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71 does not bar forfeiture in the event of less than strict compliance. Classic City Bonding Co. v. State, 256 Ga. App. 577, 568 S.E.2d 834 (2002).

Triggering dates for the applicable statutory notice and hearing provisions in bond forfeiture proceedings are not limited to calculation from the date of a principal's initial time of required appearance and failure to appear; the statute allows initiation of the notice and hearing procedures after any time of required appearance and failure to appear thereat. Griffin v. State, 194 Ga. App. 624, 391 S.E.2d 675 (1990).

Expiration date of bond. — It would be unrealistic to limit a bond to a single, specified date and not to require that the bond be continued in effect until the appeal is finally decided. State v. Slaughter, 246 Ga. 174, 269 S.E.2d 446 (1980).

Time for order and notice of bond forfeiture. — Trial court is not required to sign a forfeiture order on the same day as the defendant's failure to appear as a condition to issuing a judgment absolute. The "end of the court day" language in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71(a) is directory and not a limitation of the court's authority, particularly when the surety is not harmed. Easy Out Bonding v. State, 224 Ga. App. 706, 481 S.E.2d 834 (1997); Anytime Bonding Co. v. State, 228 Ga. App. 232, 491 S.E.2d 399 (1997).

Although the language of the first sentence of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71(a) requires a trial court to enter an order of forfeiture of bond on the same court day that the defendant failed to appear, this language has been held to be directory, and the holding that the language is directory was not superseded by a 2009 amendment to the statute. Don Johnson Bonding Co. v. State of Ga., 342 Ga. App. 387, 803 S.E.2d 774 (2017).

Delay in execution hearings. — Surety must show harm as well as error before the surety will be relieved of liability based on failure to conduct an execution hearing within the time prescribed by O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71. A surety's failure to keep track of the surety's indemnitors was not caused by delayed execution hearings, but was the result of the surety's erroneous assumption that the surety was relieved of liability under the bonds -- by operation of law -- 150 days after the principals' initial failure to appear in court. United States Bonds v. State, 224 Ga. App. 758, 481 S.E.2d 887 (1997); Osborne Bonding & Sur. Co. v. State, 228 Ga. App. 383, 491 S.E.2d 837 (1997).

Surety showed no harm when instead of setting a hearing after the principal failed to appear for trial, the trial court placed the case on a bench warrant calendar, then scheduled a hearing and gave the surety notice of the hearing after the principal failed to appear at the calendar call. Accordingly, it was proper to order forfeiture of the bond. Troup Bonding Co. v. State of Ga., 292 Ga. App. 5, 663 S.E.2d 734 (2008).

Continuance did not render original notice invalid. — Final judgment of forfeiture on a criminal appearance bond posted by the surety was proper because the surety received notice of the execution hearing within the statutory time period under O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71(a) and the execution hearing took place within the required window. That the state sought and obtained a continuance from the originally scheduled date for the execution hearing did not magically render the original notice invalid; because the original notice was valid, it was also not later invalidated by a subsequent notice of a new hearing date. Powell v. State, 313 Ga. App. 535, 722 S.E.2d 158 (2012).

Notice

Notice. — Unlike O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71(a), which requires that a notice of the hearing be sent to the surety, § 17-6-71(b) does not expressly require that a notice of judgment be sent to the surety. Reliable Bonding Co. v. State, 262 Ga. App. 280, 585 S.E.2d 192 (2003).

Notice sufficient for final judgment of forfeiture. — Trial court did not err when the court entered a final judgment of forfeiture because the first occasion for the satisfaction of the notice requirement arose when the defendant failed for a second time to appear at a pretrial hearing after the hearing was rescheduled due to the fact that notice was not given to the surety. Furthermore, because notice was given to the surety within ten days of the second hearing, there was strict compliance with the statutory notice requirement under O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71(a). Northeast Atlanta Bonding Co. v. State, 308 Ga. App. 573, 707 S.E.2d 921 (2011).

Substantial compliance with notice requirement. — Trial court properly denied a surety's motion to dismiss the state's motion for bond forfeiture regarding a principal who failed to appear as the state substantially complied with the notice requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71(a) even though the surety did not submit the surety's motion until 15 days after the failure to appear and did not serve the surety with notice of the motion until 22 days from the date of the principal's failure to appear. Further, the surety failed to show any harm from the alleged notice violation. Northeast Atlanta Sur. Co. v. Perdue, 294 Ga. App. 32, 668 S.E.2d 508 (2008).

Lack of notice to surety. — If the record shows on the record's face noncompliance with statutory service and notice requirements, the proceedings and resultant judgment must be set aside. Osborne Bonding Co. v. State, 163 Ga. App. 648, 295 S.E.2d 577 (1982) (construing section prior to 1982 amendment).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Bond forfeitures reduced to judgment. — In the absence of any specific statutory authority, bond forfeitures which have been reduced to judgment by a rule absolute may not be settled or satisfied by a compromise agreement. 1989 Op. Att'y Gen. U89-14.

17-6-72. Conditions not warranting forfeiture of bond for failure to appear; remission of forfeiture.

(a) No judgment shall be rendered on a forfeiture of any appearance bond if it is shown to the satisfaction of the court by the written statement of a licensed physician that the principal on the bond was prevented from attending court due to a mental or physical disability or the principal on the bond was receiving inpatient treatment as involuntary treatment, as such terms are defined in Code Section 37-3-1.

(b) No judgment shall be rendered on a forfeiture of any appearance bond if it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that the principal on the bond was prevented from attending because he or she was detained by reason of arrest, sentence, or confinement in a penal institution or jail in the State of Georgia, or so detained in another jurisdiction, or because he or she was involuntarily confined or detained pursuant to court order in a mental institution in the State of Georgia or in another jurisdiction. An official written notice of the holding institution in which the principal is being detained or confined shall be considered proof of the principal's detention or confinement. Such notice may be sent from the holding institution by mail or e-mail or delivered by hand or by facsimile machine. Upon the presentation of such written notice to the clerk of the proper court, the prosecuting attorney, and the sheriff or other law enforcement officer having jurisdiction over the case, along with a letter of intent to pay all costs of returning the principal to the jurisdiction of the court, such notice and letter shall serve as the surety's request for a detainer or hold to be placed on the principal. Should there be a failure to place a detainer or hold within ten business days of the surety's service of a detainer or hold request, and after such presentation of such notice and letter of intent to pay costs, the surety shall then be relieved of the liability for the appearance bond without further order of the court.

(c) No judgment shall be rendered on a forfeiture of any appearance bond if it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that prior to the entry of the judgment on the forfeiture the principal on the bond is in the custody of the sheriff or other responsible law enforcement agency. An official written notice of the holding institution in which the principal is being detained or confined shall be considered proof of the principal's detention or confinement. Such notice may be sent from the holding institution by mail or e-mail or delivered by hand or by facsimile machine. Upon presentation of such written notice to the clerk of the proper court, the prosecuting attorney, and the sheriff or other law enforcement officer having jurisdiction over the case along with a letter of intent to pay all costs of returning the principal to the jurisdiction of the court, such notice and letter shall serve as the surety's request for a detainer or hold to be placed against the principal. Should there be a failure to place a detainer or hold within ten business days of the surety's service of a detainer or hold request, and after presentation of such notice and letter of intent to pay costs, the surety shall then be relieved of the liability for the appearance bond without further order of the court.

(c.1) No judgment shall be rendered on a forfeiture of any appearance bond if it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that the principal on the bond was prevented from attending because he or she was deported or removed from the United States by federal authorities. Official documentation from a federal official or agency shall be considered proof of the principal's deportation or removal. Such documentation may be delivered by mail or e-mail or delivered by hand or by facsimile machine.

(d) In cases in which subsection (e) of this Code section is not applicable, on application filed within 120 days from the payment of judgment, the court shall order remission under the following conditions:

(1) Provided the bond amount has been paid within 120 days after judgment and the delay has not prevented prosecution of the principal and upon application to the court with prior notice to the prosecuting attorney of such application, said court shall direct remission of 95 percent of the bond amount remitted to the surety if the principal is produced or otherwise appears before the court that has jurisdiction of the bond within such 120 day period. Should the surety, within two years of the principal's failure to appear, locate the principal in the custody of the sheriff in the jurisdiction where the bond was made or in another jurisdiction causing the return of the principal to the jurisdiction where the bond was made, apprehend, surrender, or produce the principal, if the apprehension or surrender of the principal is substantially procured or caused by the surety, or if the location of the principal by the surety causes the adjudication of the principal in the jurisdiction in which the bond was made, the surety shall be entitled to a refund of 50 percent of the bond amount. The application for 50 percent remission shall be filed no later than 30 days following the expiration of the two-year period following the date of judgment; or

(2) Remission shall be granted upon condition of the payment of court costs and of the expenses of returning the principal to the jurisdiction by the surety.

(e)(1) If, within 120 days from payment of the judgment, the surety surrenders the principal to the sheriff or responsible law enforcement officer, or said surrender has been denied by the sheriff or responsible law enforcement officer, or the surety locates the principal in custody in another jurisdiction, the surety shall only be required to pay costs and 5 percent of the face amount of the bond, which amount includes all surcharges. If it is shown to the satisfaction of the court, by the presentation of competent evidence from the sheriff or the holding institution, that said surrender has been made or denied or that the principal is in custody in another jurisdiction or that said surrender has been made and that 5 percent of the face amount of the bond and all costs have been tendered to the sheriff, the court shall direct that the judgment be marked satisfied and that the writ of fieri facias be canceled.

(2)(A) The court shall direct that the judgment be marked satisfied and that the writ of fieri facias be canceled, if within 120 days from payment of the judgment, the surety:

(i) Tenders an amount equal to 5 percent of the face amount of the bond and all costs to the sheriff; and

(ii) Provides, in writing, the court and the prosecuting attorney for the court that has jurisdiction of the bond with competent evidence giving probable cause to believe that the principal is located in another jurisdiction within the United States and states that it will provide for the reasonable remuneration for the rendition of the principal, as estimated by the sheriff; and

(B) The prosecuting attorney for the court that has jurisdiction of the bond:

(i) Declines, in writing, to authorize or facilitate extradition; or

(ii) Within ten business days of the notice provided pursuant to division (2)(A)(ii) of this subsection, fails to enter the appropriate extradition approval code into the computerized files maintained by the Federal Bureau of Investigation National Crime Information Center thereby indicating an unwillingness to extradite the principal.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Constitutionality. — O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72 does not violate the anti-gratuities clause of the Georgia Constitution since by apprehending absconded criminals and delivering the criminals to the state bail bonding companies perform a valuable service for the state inasmuch as the companies relieve law enforcement officers from the duty, thereby permitting officers to direct their energies to other areas of law enforcement. AAA Bail Bonding Co. v. State, 259 Ga. 411, 383 S.E.2d 125 (1989).

The 1987 and 1989 versions of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72(f) violated the right to due process under the state and federal constitutions to the extent the statute required the surety to pay the judgment in full before being permitted to present arguments in support of remission. State v. Johnson, 261 Ga. 363, 404 S.E.2d 563 (1991).

Purpose. — Intention of the General Assembly in enacting Ga. L. 1965, p. 266, §§ 1-3 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72) was to supply a remedy for the exigency of former Code 1933, § 27-906 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-71). Stitt v. Busbee, 136 Ga. App. 44, 220 S.E.2d 59 (1975).

Time for filing. — O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72 sets a limited time period for filing and measures the time from the surety's payment of judgment on the bond rather than from the apprehension of the principal. This is required even when the principal is found and returned at some time beyond that period. State v. Hightower, 199 Ga. App. 770, 406 S.E.2d 117 (1991).

Surety was not entitled to any remission of the bond payment because the surety did not apply for remission within 90 days of paying the judgment as the surety could have done inasmuch as the principal had been apprehended with the surety's help 34 days after payment. State v. Hightower, 199 Ga. App. 770, 406 S.E.2d 117 (1991).

Forfeiture exception in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72(b). — Deportation of an illegal alien to Mexico with an inability to return to the United States is not the functional equivalent of a "sentence" and resulting "detention" as contemplated by O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72(b). Vargas v. State, 243 Ga. App. 725, 534 S.E.2d 173 (2000).

Construction of § 17-6-72(d)(1). — Because the purpose of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72(d)(1) was remedial and had to therefore be construed in favor of the surety in interpreting the statute and avoiding a meaningless result, the trial court properly allowed a surety a remission of 50 percent of the bond amount since the surety filed the surety's application for the remission at any time within 30 days following the expiration of the two-year period following the date of judgment. State of Ga. v. Free At Last Bail Bonds, 285 Ga. App. 734, 647 S.E.2d 402 (2007).

Location of principal in another jurisdiction. — Surety met the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72(d)(1) by locating the principal in custody under an alias in another jurisdiction and placing a "hold" or detainer on the principal. Osborne Bonding & Sur. Co. v. State, 224 Ga. App. 459, 480 S.E.2d 900 (1997).

Remission of forfeiture. — Surety who advised both the county where the bond was issued and the county where the principal was arrested of the principal's status and identity substantially procured or caused the principal's apprehension and return under the terms of the 1992 version of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72. Osborne Bonding & Sur. Co. v. State, 224 Ga. App. 590, 481 S.E.2d 578 (1997).

Since a surety on four criminal bonds did not pay the judgments on its forfeited bonds, O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72(d)(3), allowing reduction, rather than § 17-6-72(d)(1), allowing remission, controlled. Because the individuals were all arrested by county authorities without any involvement of the surety, the surety failed to show that the surety was entitled to a remission of the bonds. Confidential Bonding Co. v. State of Ga., 279 Ga. App. 794, 632 S.E.2d 684 (2006).

Under the plain and ordinary language of O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72(d)(1), a bondsman who failed to assist in the arrest of the principal of its bond was not entitled to a 50 percent remission of the bond, and the district attorney's consent to the bonds-man's motion had no legal effect as such was not accepted by the trial court. Joe Ray Bonding Co. v. State of Ga., 284 Ga. App. 687, 644 S.E.2d 501 (2007).

Consent to reduction. — State's participation in a proposed consent order to allow reduction of the payment on a forfeited bond did not conclusively establish that one of the statutory conditions for reduction was met and the court was authorized to require that such fact be established by the surety through the prescribed evidence. Osborne Bonding & Sur. Co. ex rel. Castaneda v. State, 225 Ga. App. 896, 485 S.E.2d 235 (1997).

Judgment of forfeiture not set aside. — Surety, which did not receive notice of the entry of a judgment of forfeiture in time to obtain remission of the forfeited sum, under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-72(d)(10), was not entitled to have the judgment set aside as the surety received notice of the hearing at which the forfeiture was considered and chose not to appear or determine whether a judgment was entered following the hearing. Reliable Bonding Co. v. State, 262 Ga. App. 280, 585 S.E.2d 192 (2003).

Forfeiture exceptions did not apply. — Bond forfeiture exceptions found in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72(b), (c) did not apply to an alien's bond forfeiture because the alien's failure to appear at an arraignment was because the alien had been deported, not because the alien was in a penal institution or jail because of an arrest or sentence, was confined to a mental institution because of a court order, or was in the custody of a sheriff or other responsible law enforcement agency. Gomez-Ramos v. State, 297 Ga. App. 113, 676 S.E.2d 382 (2009).

Criminal history calculation. — Sentence imposed for defendant's 2008 bank robbery was vacated and the case was remanded for resentencing because the defendant's bond forfeiture should not factor into the calculation of the defendant's criminal history under U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 4A1.2(a) (2008) if the defendant's failure to attend the February 2008 arraignment was involuntary under O.C.G.A. § 17-6-72(b), and the district court, assuming that all Georgia bond forfeitures should be considered convictions for purposes of calculating criminal history under the sentencing guidelines pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 40-13-58, did not determine whether the defendant's failure to attend the arraignment was willful or involuntary. United States v. Daniel, 358 Fed. Appx. 79 (11th Cir. 2009) (Unpublished).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Forfeiture date depends on wording of bond. — Date of forfeiture of the appearance bond depends entirely upon the wording of each particular bond. In the event the bond indicates an appearance at a term of court, forfeiture does not occur until the end of that particular term of court. However, if the bond is returnable on a specific date, then the 60-day provision commences to run from that date. 1965-66 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 66-30.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Bond without surety's address is valid. — Although the language of the statute requires that the surety's address be included on the bond, that language is directory, and a bond which does not include the surety's address is enforceable against the surety. Jam Bonding Co. v. State, 184 Ga. App. 246, 361 S.E.2d 238 (1987).

Purpose of the address requirement is to facilitate identifying and locating the surety, and the absence of the address does not in and of itself affect the validity of the bond contract. Jam Bonding Co. v. State, 184 Ga. App. 246, 361 S.E.2d 238 (1987).

ARTICLE 4

BONDS FOR GOOD BEHAVIOR AND TO KEEP THE PEACE

PART 1

BONDS FOR GOOD BEHAVIOR

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Proceedings under bond provisions are criminal or quasi-criminal in nature, and the statute's provisions therefore must be construed in favor of the individual against whom the statutes are applied. Dukes v. Dukes, 119 Ga. App. 842, 168 S.E.2d 902 (1969).

17-6-90. Issuance of notice to appear for show cause hearing; requirement of bond; hearing; payment of court costs by affiant; issuance of order of arrest.

(a) Any judicial officer authorized to hold a court of inquiry may, upon the application of others under oath or upon his or her own motion, issue a notice to appear for a show cause hearing to any person whose conduct in the county is sufficient to justify the belief that the safety of any one or more persons in the county or the peace or property of the same is in danger of being injured or disturbed thereby. Such show cause hearing shall be held within seven days of such application or motion. Upon sufficient cause being shown, the court may require from the person a bond with sureties for such person's good behavior with reasonable conditions to ensure the safety of persons or property in the county or the preservation of the peace of the county for a period of up to six months.

(b) All bonds posted under this Code section shall be returnable in the court which required the bond and shall be amendable in the court's discretion.

(c) If it is determined at a hearing that there was not sufficient cause for a hearing to have been held, the affiant who caused the bond to be imposed shall pay all court costs.

(d) At the time of or at any time after the filing of an application as provided in subsection (a) of this Code section, the judicial officer may, in his or her sound discretion, issue an order of arrest for the person or persons named in the application if the sworn allegations regarding the conduct of such person or persons is sufficient to justify the belief that there is imminent danger of injury to any person in the county, damage to any property in the county, or disturbance of the peace of the county. Upon the arrest of such person, a hearing as provided in subsection (a) of this Code section shall be held within 24 hours; otherwise, such person shall be released on bond with sureties and reasonable conditions for his or her good behavior until a hearing can be held.

(e) As used in this Code section, the term "county" means the county in which the judicial officer is authorized to hold a court of inquiry.

L. 1978, p. 1924, § 1; Ga. L. 1986, p. 1151, § 1; Ga. L. 2007, p. 493, § 1/SB 106; Ga. L. 2013, p. 584, § 3/HB 146.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Former Code 1933, §§ 76-101 and 76-201 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-90 and 17-6-110) were penal statutes. Rhodes v. Pearce, 189 Ga. 623, 7 S.E.2d 251 (1940); Foster v. Withrow, 201 Ga. 260, 39 S.E.2d 466 (1946).

Strict construction. — Former Code 1933, §§ 76-101 and 76-201 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-90 and 17-6-110) were to be strictly construed in favor of the individual against whom the statutes are sought to be applied. Rhodes v. Pearce, 189 Ga. 623, 7 S.E.2d 251 (1940).

Standing to challenge statute. — Plain language of Georgia's good behavior bond statute, O.C.G.A. § 17-6-90(a), controls two things: (1) the timing and circumstances under which a judicial officer may issue a notice to appear for a show cause hearing; and (2) what action that judicial officer may take following the show cause hearing, including what conditions may be placed on a peace bond. Parker v. Leeuwenburg, 300 Ga. 789, 797 S.E.2d 908 (2017).

In a declaratory judgment action facially challenging Georgia's good behavior bond statute, O.C.G.A. § 17-6-90, the trial court judgment granting summary judgment to the appellees was vacated because § 17-6-90(a) did not regulate the appellants' conduct and, in the absence of current peace bonding proceedings or even an allegation that a judicial officer in the county would exercise such discretion, the appellants failed to show nothing more than a hypothetical concern regarding § 17-6-90(a) and, therefore, lacked standing to challenge it. Parker v. Leeuwenburg, 300 Ga. 789, 797 S.E.2d 908 (2017).

Power of superior court judge to issue peace warrant for the arrest and jailing of a person. — Judge of the superior court did not have power under former Code 1933, § 76-101 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-90) to issue a peace warrant for arrest and commitment to jail of a person upon grounds of that section; but the judge has such power under former Code 1933, § 76-201 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-110). Rhodes v. Pearce, 189 Ga. 623, 7 S.E.2d 251 (1940).

Jurisdiction of justices of the peace. — Jurisdiction to issue peace warrants and to hear and determine the cases arising thereunder was expressly conferred upon justices of the peace by former Code 1933, §§ 76-101 and 76-201 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-90 and 17-6-110). Young v. Fain, 121 Ga. 737, 49 S.E. 731 (1905).

Certiorari does not lie to these proceedings before a justice of the peace. Stephens v. Wallis, 75 Ga. 726 (1885).

Bar to investigation of case behind merits. — Lawful process issued by a court of competent jurisdiction is a bar to any investigation of the merits of the case behind such process. Young v. Fain, 121 Ga. 737, 49 S.E. 731 (1905).

Magistrate has no authority to insert in the warrant directions to levy on property for costs. Stephens v. Wallis, 75 Ga. 726 (1885).

Cited in Britt v. Whitehall Income Fund, 891 F. Supp. 1578 (M.D. Ga. 1993).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Return to county of issuance. — Peace warrant proceedings must be returned to the superior court of the county in which the warrant was issued. 1974 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U74-7.

Collection of costs in peace warrant proceeding. — Collection of costs in a peace warrant proceeding which was never returned to the superior court for disposition would be a violation of former Code 1933, §§ 89-9909 and 89-9910 (see O.C.G.A. § 45-11-5) and a misdemeanor. 1974 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U74-7.

Purpose of provision for return to state court. — Former Code 1933, §§ 76-101 and 76-201 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-90 and 17-6-110) vested jurisdiction for the return of good behavior or peace bonds in the state court in counties in which such a court was established. That change in jurisdiction, not procedure, was the purpose of Ga. L. 1978, p. 1924. 1978 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U78-50.

Probate court jurisdiction. — Because a probate court may hold a court of inquiry pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-20, the court may also issue warrants and require bond pursuant to either O.C.G.A. § 17-6-90 or O.C.G.A. § 17-6-110. 1995 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U95-1.

17-6-91. Extension of bond by court; right of sureties to surrender principal.

A bond for good behavior posted pursuant to Code Section 17-6-90 may be extended for a period of six months by the court which required the bond. The sureties on the bond shall have the privilege of surrendering their principal as in other cases of bail.

History. — Orig. Code 1863, § 4629; Code 1868, § 4653; Code 1873, § 4751; Code 1882, § 4751; Penal Code 1895, § 1237; Penal Code 1910, § 1319; Code 1933, § 76-103; Code 1981, § 17-6-93; Ga. L. 1986, p. 1151, § 2; Code 1981, § 17-6-91, as redesignated by Ga. L. 2013, p. 584, § 3/HB 146.

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2013, p. 584, § 3/HB 146, repealed former Code Section 17-6-91, pertaining to the right of a person to require a bond against a spouse, effective July 1, 2013. The former Code section was based on Orig. Code, 1863, § 4634; Code 1868, § 4658; Code 1873, § 4756; Code 1882, § 4756; Penal Code 1895, § 1242; Penal Code 1910, § 1324; Code 1933, § 76-104.

17-6-92. Violation of bond; contempt of court.

Upon oral or written complaint by the injured party or upon motion by the prosecuting attorney, the court may, in its discretion, issue a rule for contempt against a party who violates the bond posted pursuant to Code Section 17-6-90. Upon hearing the rule, if the court finds that there has been a violation of the bond, the court may impose a sentence for contempt of court. If it should appear to the court from the evidence and the court finds that the violation of the bond was provoked or brought about by the conduct of the prosecuting witness, the witness, after notice and the opportunity for a hearing, may be ruled for contempt of court and sentenced as provided by law.

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2013, p. 584, § 3/HB 146, repealed former Code Section 17-6-92, pertaining to institution of action for breach of bond and disposition of recovery, effective July 1, 2013. The former Code section was based on Orig. Code 1863, § 4628; Code 1868, § 4652; Code 1873, § 4750; Code 1882, § 4750; Penal Code 1895, § 1236; Penal Code 1910, § 1318; Code 1933, § 76-102; Ga. 17-6-93. Redesignated.

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2013, p. 584, § 3/HB 146, effective July 1, 2013, redesignated former Code Section 17-6-93 as present Code Section 17-6-91.

17-6-94. Redesignated.

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2013, p. 584, § 3/HB 146, effective July 1, 2013, redesignated former Code Section 17-6-94 as present Code Section 17-6-92.

Part 2

Bonds to Keep the Peace

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Nature of peace bond proceedings. — In the strictest sense, proceedings requiring a peace bond are neither criminal nor civil proceedings, although the proceedings are more in the nature of criminal than civil proceedings. Foster v.

Withrow, 201 Ga. 260, 39 S.E.2d 466 (1946).

Primary purpose of the peace warrant proceeding is not to award the person seeking the warrant's protection money damages for injuries which the person may receive, but to prevent violence and keep the peace. Foster v. Withrow, 201 Ga. 260, 39 S.E.2d 466 (1946).

Cited in Mulling v. Wilson, 245 Ga. 773, 267 S.E.2d 212 (1980).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Return and final disposition of peace warrant. — While a peace warrant may be issued by a judicial officer authorized to hold a court of inquiry, the warrant is returnable to the superior court, and can be finally disposed of only by the superior court, not by the magistrate. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-121.

Duration of bondsman's liability. — Bondsman is not relieved of the bondsman's obligations under a peace bond after a breach of the bond's terms, even though the bondsman's returns the accused to the court, and such accused is committed to jail. The bondsman remains liable for any breach of the bond as long as the bond is in effect. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-121.

17-6-110. Issuance of warrant; requirement of bond; hearing; payment of costs by affiant.

(a) Upon the information of any person, under oath, that he is in fear of bodily harm to himself or his family, or of violent injury to his property, from another person, any judicial officer authorized to hold a court of inquiry may issue his warrant requiring the arrest of such other person. If, after the return of the warrant and upon hearing the evidence of both parties, the court is satisfied that probable cause for such fear exists, the court may require the accused to give bond, with good security, to keep the peace as against the person, family, or property of the affiant. If the accused fails to give bond, the court shall commit him to jail. Any person against whom a warrant issues must, within 24 hours, be brought for a hearing before the court which issued the warrant or be released on bond by the sheriff.

(b) Nothing in this Code section shall prohibit the sheriff from releasing the person at any time prior to the hearing after posting bond. The amount of the bond shall be set by the sheriff but in no event shall the amount set by the sheriff exceed $1,000.00. Such bond shall contain the same conditions as a bond required after a hearing by the court of inquiry, except that, in counties in which a state court is established, all bonds posted under this Code section shall be returnable in the state court rather than in the superior court. Within five days after being released on bond by the sheriff, the person shall be entitled to a hearing before the court of inquiry.

(c) If it is determined at the hearing that there was not sufficient cause for the warrant to have been issued, the affiant who caused the warrant to be issued shall pay all court costs.

(d) A judicial officer shall not be required to issue the warrant provided for in this Code section until the person requesting the issuance of the warrant deposits with the judicial officer a sum, not to exceed $12.00, to be applied against the total cost in the proceedings. At the termination of the proceedings, any part of the deposit remaining because of dismissal or because the costs are assessed against another party shall be refunded to the depositor. If the person requesting the issuance of the warrant is unable to pay any deposit, fee, or other cost which would normally be required in the court and subscribes an affidavit to the effect that because of his indigence he is unable to pay these costs, the person shall be relieved from paying the costs and his rights shall be the same as if he had paid the costs.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Former Code 1933, §§ 76-101 and 76-201 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-90 and 17-6-110) were penal statutes. Rhodes v. Pearce, 189 Ga. 623, 7 S.E.2d 251 (1940); Foster v. Withrow, 201 Ga. 260, 39 S.E.2d 466 (1946).

Strict construction. — Former Code 1933, §§ 76-101 and 76-201 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-90 and 17-6-110) were to be strictly construed in favor of the individual against whom the statutes are sought to be applied. Rhodes v. Pearce, 189 Ga. 623, 7 S.E.2d 251 (1940).

Jurisdiction of justices of the peace. — Jurisdiction to issue peace warrants was expressly conferred upon justices of peace by former Code 1933, §§ 76-101 and 76-201 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-90 and 17-6-110). Young v. Fain, 121 Ga. 737, 49 S.E. 731 (1905).

What constitutes a breach of the peace. — To call a person a liar and raise a stick to strike the man, if in anger, is a menace of violence and is calculated to excite, alarm, or provoke a breach of the peace, and constitutes a breach of a bond to keep the peace. Rumsey v. Bullard, 5 Ga. App. 802, 63 S.E. 921 (1909).

Husband is competent to institute peace warrant proceedings against his wife. Foster v. Withrow, 201 Ga. 260, 39 S.E.2d 466 (1946).

Peace officer not to act as negotiator. — In all cases when information reaches the peace officer, the officer should resort at once to the officer's authority, and not assume the role of a negotiator. Mitchell v. State, 71 Ga. 128 (1883).

What constitutes substantial compliance with section. — When a judge issues a peace warrant, not on information under oath of a person apprehensive of injury to the person, or family, or property by another, to appear before the judge at a stated time and place but in the discretion of the arresting officer to be allowed to go on the person's own recognizance, such warrant is not in compliance with former Code 1933, § 76-201 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-110). But if after arrest and release on the person's own recognizance the person arrested appears before the judge and is afforded a hearing at which evidence under oath is introduced to show danger of such injury to the person, family, or property of the person named in the warrant, this will be a substantial compliance with that section, affording the judge jurisdiction to order the giving of a bond to keep the peace, and on failure thereof to be committed to jail. Rhodes v. Pearce, 189 Ga. 623, 7 S.E.2d 251 (1940).

Power of superior court judge to issue peace warrant. — Judge of the superior court did not have power under former Code 1933, § 76-101 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-90) to issue a peace warrant for arrest and commitment to jail of a person upon grounds therein stated; but the judge had such power under former Code 1933, § 76-201. Rhodes v. Pearce, 189 Ga. 623, 7 S.E.2d 251 (1940).

Presumption that bond is properly executed. — When a bond to keep the peace is executed in the terms prescribed by law, in order to sustain an action for the breach thereof, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that all of the steps prescribed by law for obtaining such a bond were in fact taken, there being a presumption that the bond was executed as the result of adherence to the statutory provisions. Jones v. Talmadge, 72 Ga. App. 50, 32 S.E.2d 926 (1945).

Sheriff's authority to accept peace bond. — County sheriff has no authority to accept a peace bond as the sheriff does a bond in a misdemeanor case, in the absence of an order of the committing officer rendered after judicial inquiry or after the accused has waived the accused's right to a preliminary hearing. Dukes v. Dukes, 119 Ga. App. 842, 168 S.E.2d 902 (1969).

When bond must be returned. — It is essential to the validity of a peace bond or good behavior bond that the proceedings be returned to the next term of the superior court after the bond is given, and failure to make the return on time vitiates the obligation. Newberry v. State, 238 Ga. 134, 231 S.E.2d 739 (1977).

Peace bond or bond for good behavior must be returned to the next term of the superior court, when the bond expires by the bond's own limitation, unless the bond is continued upon good cause shown. Newberry v. State, 238 Ga. 134, 231 S.E.2d 739 (1977).

Hearing required absent waiver. — In the absence of waiver, the law requires that the accused be given a preliminary hearing before exacting from the accused a peace bond. Dukes v. Dukes, 119 Ga. App. 842, 168 S.E.2d 902 (1969).

Amount of judgment on bond in case of breach. — In an action against the obligor and the obligor's sureties in a peace bond given in proceedings under this section, for a breach of the statute, judgment for the full amount of the penalty stipulated in the bond will be awarded against the defendant and the defendant's sureties in case of a recovery. Shirley v. Terrell, 134 Ga. 61, 67 S.E. 436 (1910).

When costs may be collected. — It is not lawful to collect any costs in a peace warrant case until after the warrant is returned to and passed upon by the superior court. Levar v. State, 103 Ga. 42, 29 S.E. 467 (1897).

Certiorari does not lie to these proceedings. Stephens v. Wallis, 75 Ga. 726 (1885).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Duties of superior court. — Superior court must take hold of and finally dispose of all peace warrant cases, and determine upon whom the costs of the warrant shall fall. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 56.

Probate court jurisdiction. — Because a probate court may hold a court of inquiry pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-20, the probate court may also issue warrants and require bond pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-6-90 or O.C.G.A. § 17-6-110. 1995 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U95-1.

Any person posting a bond may waive the hearing provided by this section. 1974 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U74-103.

Purpose of provisions for return of bond to state court. — Former Code 1933, §§ 76-101 and 76-201 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-6-90 and 17-6-110) vested jurisdiction for the return of good behavior or peace bonds in the state court in counties in which such a court was established. That change in jurisdiction, not procedure, was the purpose of Ga. L. 1978, p.

1924. 1978 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U78-50.

Bond limit on sheriff. — Bond limit of $1,000.00 is imposed on the sheriff and does not affect the justice of the peace. 1974 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U74-103.

Assessment of costs against depositor. — Depositor should be charged for costs only to the extent that costs are assessed against the depositor and should not be required to pay costs charged against another party. The extent of the refund is determined by who is required to pay the costs. 1969 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 69-20.

Deposit held in trust by issuing officer. — The $12.00 deposit is held in trust by the officer who issues the warrant pending the outcome of the case, at which time the deposit's return or disposition will be governed by the cost liability of the parties. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-181.

When collection of costs permitted. — It is not lawful to collect any costs in a peace warrant case until after the warrant shall have been returned to and passed upon by the superior court. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 56.

17-6-112. Actions constituting violations of bond; right of action for breach of bond generally; imposition of additional penalty for contempt of court; finding of prosecuting witness in contempt.

(a) Actual violence, a threat of violence, or any other act intended and calculated to excite alarm or to provoke a breach of the peace shall be a violation of the bond posted pursuant to Code Section 17-6-110. For every such act, the party at whose instance the bond was required shall have a right of action.

(b) In counties having a population of not less than 200,000 nor more than 250,000 according to the United States decennial census of 1950 or any future such census in which there is located a municipal court, upon oral or written complaint by the injured party, the court may in its discretion issue a rule for contempt against the offending defendant. Upon hearing the rule, if the court finds that there has been a violation of the bond, the court may, in addition to the remedy provided in subsection (a) of this Code section, impose a sentence for contempt of court. If it should appear to the court from the evidence and the court finds that the breach of the peace was provoked or brought about by the conduct of the prosecuting witness, the witness may be ruled for contempt of court and sentenced as provided by law.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Action on peace bond generally. — Plaintiff's cause of action on a peace bond was predicated upon the breach of the bond's condition, and if the bond was in force and effect at the time of the breach, an action will lie until barred by the statute of limitations, even though no extension of the bond was made by the superior court pursuant to this section, after the breach of the bond and before the action was instituted. Jones v. Talmadge, 72 Ga. App. 50, 32 S.E.2d 926 (1945).

When return to be made. — It is essential to the validity of a peace bond or good behavior bond that the proceedings be returned to the next term of the supe-

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

There is no federal constitutional right to a preliminary hearing. Pitts v. Hopper, 402 F. Supp. 119 (N.D. Ga. 1974), aff'd, 520 F.2d 941 (5th Cir. 1975).

Preliminary hearing is not a required step in a felony prosecution and once an indictment is obtained there is no judicial oversight or review of the decision to prosecute because of any failure to hold a commitment hearing. Bridges v. State, 154 Ga. App. 811, 270 S.E.2d 60 (1980); Clarke v. State, 158 Ga. App. 749, 282 S.E.2d 1 (1981).

Denial of commitment hearing basis for overturning conviction. — Court of Appeals will not overturn a conviction on direct appeal or on collateral attack because a commitment hearing was denied the appellant. Bridges v. State, 154 Ga. App. 811, 270 S.E.2d 60 (1980).

In no event will a conviction be overturned on direct appeal or on collateral attack because a commitment hearing was denied appellant. Clarke v. State, 158 Ga. App. 749, 282 S.E.2d 1 (1981).

After indictment and subsequent conviction, lack of a commitment hearing will not be construed as reversible error. Clarke v. State, 158 Ga. App. 749, 282 S.E.2d 1 (1981).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Bail of person arrested by campus police officer. — Person arrested by a campus police officer for violation of a state criminal law should be incarcerated in the county jail, as the sheriff, by virtue of that office, is the county jailer. Whether the accused is to be admitted to bail and the amount of the bail are matters which are addressed to the commitment court. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 70-69.

17-7-20. Persons who may hold courts of inquiry; procedure where offense committed in county which is member of regional jail authority.

Any judge of a superior or state court, judge of the probate court, magistrate, or officer of a municipality who has the criminal jurisdiction of a magistrate may hold a court of inquiry to examine into an accusation against a person legally arrested and brought before him or her. The time and place of the inquiry shall be determined by such judicial officer. Should the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed be a member of a regional jail authority created under Article 5 of Chapter 4 of Title 42, the "Regional Jail Authorities Act," the judge may order the court of inquiry to be conducted alternatively in the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed or in facilities available at the regional jail or by audio-visual communication between the two locations and between the accused, the court, the attorneys, and the witnesses.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Function of the preliminary commitment hearing is to authorize the keeping in custody of one accused with probable cause of committing a crime, pending determination by the grand jury from evidence presented to the grand jury that the accused should stand trial for the offense. Blake v. State, 109 Ga. App. 636, 137 S.E.2d 49, cert. denied, 379 U.S. 924, 85 S. Ct. 281, 13 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1964).

Term "accusation" in a recognizance includes the term "warrant." Cox v. Dorsey, 152 Ga. 532, 110 S.E. 236 (1922).

Justices of the peace are vested with county-wide jurisdiction in issuing search warrants. State v. Varner, 248 Ga. 347, 283 S.E.2d 268 (1981) (decided prior to the 1983 amendment).

Powers of magistrates. — Magistrate of one county has no authority to hold a court of inquiry against a person charged with committing a crime in another county. Burrow v. Southern Ry., 139 Ga. 733, 78 S.E. 125 (1913).

Probate court judge authorized to hold court of inquiry. — Defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized pursuant to a warrant issued by a probate court judge was properly denied because the probate court judge was authorized to hold a court of inquiry under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-20 and, therefore, was authorized to issue a search warrant under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-21(a). O.C.G.A. § 40-13-21(b), assuming that statute required the state court to issue a warrant, pertained to the jurisdiction of probate courts in misdemeanor traffic cases and did not apply in this felony case. Joyner v. State, 347 Ga. App. 159, 817 S.E.2d 822 (2018).

Authority to issue search warrant does not vanish within restricted area. — O.C.G.A. § 17-5-22 (when considered with O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-20 and 17-5-21) means that the authority of a judicial officer to issue a search warrant to be executed within the area of the officer's jurisdiction does not vanish when the officer physically steps into an area where the officer's authority is restricted within the county in which the officer serves. State v. Varner, 248 Ga. 347, 283 S.E.2d 268 (1981).

There is no requirement that a superior court judge conduct the preliminary hearing. Burson v. State, 183 Ga. App. 647, 359 S.E.2d 731, cert. denied, 183 Ga. App. 905, 359 S.E.2d 731 (1987).

Failure to grant a preliminary hearing is not reversible error. Sims v. State, 148 Ga. App. 733, 252 S.E.2d 910 (1979).

Effect of failure to hold commitment hearing. — Failure to conduct a commitment hearing prior to a defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment cannot constitute harmful error, nor would reversal of the judgment be warranted even if no commitment hearing had ever been held, because a preliminary hearing is not a required step in a felony prosecution once an indictment is obtained. Forehand v. State, 138 Ga. App. 468, 226 S.E.2d 297 (1976).

Preliminary hearing is not a required step in a felony prosecution, and once an indictment is obtained there is no judicial oversight or review of the decision to prosecute because of any failure to hold a commitment hearing. Sims v. State, 148

Ga. App. 733, 252 S.E.2d 910 (1979); Albert v. State, 152 Ga. App. 708, 263 S.E.2d 685 (1979).

No conviction on direct appeal or on collateral attack will be overturned because a commitment hearing is denied an appellant. Sims v. State, 148 Ga. App. 733, 252 S.E.2d 910 (1979).

Preliminary commitment hearing is not inherently a critical stage of criminal proceedings in this state. Blake v. State, 109 Ga. App. 636, 137 S.E.2d 49, cert. denied, 379 U.S. 924, 85 S. Ct. 281, 13 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1964).

Lack of counsel at hearing. — Failure to make counsel available to the defendant at a preliminary commitment hearing, when the defendant enters a plea of guilty that is not introduced in evidence at the defendant's trial, is not a denial of due process of law under U.S. Const., amend. 14. Blake v. State, 109 Ga. App. 636, 137 S.E.2d 49, cert. denied, 379 U.S. 924, 85 S. Ct. 281, 13 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1964).

Arresting officer has no authority to accept bond from one arrested under warrant for felony, but should return the party arrested to the county in which the crime was alleged to have been committed for examination before a judicial officer of that county and the fixing of bail by such officer in case of commitment. Paulk v. Sexton, 203 Ga. 82, 45 S.E.2d 768 (1947).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Training and certification of probate judges. — Probate judges who hold courts of inquiry pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-20 need not obtain training and certification from the Georgia Justice Courts Training Council. 1982 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 82-69.

Probate court jurisdiction to set bail. — Because a probate court may hold a court of inquiry pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-20, the probate court may also set bail for any criminal offense not included in O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1(a). 1995 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U95-1.

Probate court jurisdiction to issue warrants and require bond. — Because a probate court may hold a court of inquiry pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-20, a probate court may also issue warrants and require bond pursuant to either O.C.G.A. § 17-6-90 or O.C.G.A. § 17-6-110. 1995 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U95-1.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Procedure when violations of state law and municipal ordinance are both charged. — When a motorist is charged with a state offense and with violation of a municipal ordinance, both charges based on a single act, and the motorist appears before a municipal court judge, that judge is a judicial officer of the municipality of which the judge is a public servant, and it is within the judge's power to determine whether the act alleged to have been committed by the motorist constitutes a state offense for which the judge should be bound over to the grand jury, in the judge's capacity as committing magistrate of this state, or whether such act constituted a violation of an ordinance of the city, in the capacity as judge of the municipal court. The single act cannot be both. When the municipal court judge finds that there is probable cause to believe that the state offense of involuntary manslaughter has been committed and binds the motorist over to the grand jury, the judge loses jurisdiction of the case. Trowbridge v. Dominy, 92 Ga. App. 177, 88 S.E.2d 161 (1955).

Municipal judge does not lose absolute judicial immunity, for purposes of a federal civil rights action, by directing the entry of criminal charges against a witness appearing before the judge in a pending case, based upon evidence before the judge. Harris v. Deveaux, 780 F.2d 911 (11th Cir. 1986).

Waiver of investigation established probable cause. — Waiver of a preliminary hearing by the defendant in a criminal prosecution for shoplifting was tantamount to a finding by the magistrate that there was a sufficient cause to believe the defendant guilty, thereby giving rise to a prima facie establishment of probable cause for defendant's arrest and prosecution, voiding the defendant's suit for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment. Garmon v. Warehouse Groceries Food Ctr., Inc., 207 Ga. App. 89, 427 S.E.2d 308 (1993).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Limits on authority. — Mayors and recorders have only commitment jurisdiction as to violations of state statutes, such as that prohibiting possession of liquor on which taxes have not been paid. Mayors and recorders have no jurisdiction to levy fines or otherwise punish such violations. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-124.

17-7-23. Duties of court of inquiry; preclusion of certain courts from trying charges involving Code Section 16-11-126.

(a) The duty of a court of inquiry is simply to determine whether there is sufficient reason to suspect the guilt of the accused and to require him to appear and answer before the court competent to try him. Whenever such probable cause exists, it is the duty of the court to commit.

(b) Any court, other than a superior court or a state court, to which any charge of a violation of Code Section 16-11-126 is referred for the determination required by this Code section shall thereafter have and exercise only the jurisdiction of a court of inquiry with respect to the charge and with respect to any other criminal violation arising from the transaction on which the charge was based and shall not thereafter be competent to try the accused for the charge or for any other criminal violation arising from the transaction on which the charge was based, irrespective of the jurisdiction that the court otherwise would have under any other law.

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2010, p. 963, § 3-1/SB 308, not codified by the General Assembly, provides, in part, that the amendment of this Code section shall apply to all offenses committed on and after June 4, 2010, and shall not affect any prosecutions for acts occurring before June 4, 2010, and shall not act as an abatement of any such prosecution.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Section creates no right to discovery. — There is no general right to discovery in a criminal case, and nothing in O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-23 and 17-7-28 creates one, or authorizes the defendant to go on a "fishing expedition" for evidence concededly beyond the scope of the real purpose of the commitment hearing. Pruitt v. State, 258 Ga. 583, 373 S.E.2d 192 (1988), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1093, 110 S. Ct. 1170, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1072 (1990).

Purpose of a commitment hearing. — Purpose of a commitment hearing is to authorize the keeping in custody of one accused with probable cause of committing a crime until the grand jury determines whether the accused should stand trial. Blake v. State, 109 Ga. App. 636, 137 S.E.2d 49, cert. denied, 379 U.S. 924, 85 S. Ct. 281, 13 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1964); Phillips v. Stynchcombe, 231 Ga. 430, 202 S.E.2d 26 (1973); Hunt v. Hopper, 232 Ga. 53, 205 S.E.2d 303 (1974); State v. Houston, 234 Ga. 721, 218 S.E.2d 13 (1975).

Purpose of a commitment hearing is simply to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that the accused is guilty of the crime charged, and if so, to bind the accused over for indictment by the grand jury. Jackson v. State, 225 Ga. 39, 165 S.E.2d 711 (1969), cert. denied, 399 U.S. 934, 90 S. Ct. 2248, 26 L. Ed. 2d 805 (1970); Douglas v. State, 132 Ga. App. 694, 209 S.E.2d 114 (1974); State v. State, 255 Ga. 616, 340 S.E.2d 891 (1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1101, 107 S. Ct. 1328, 94 L. Ed. 2d 180 (1987); overruled on other grounds, Manzano v. State, 282 Ga. 557, 651 S.E.2d 661 (2007); Moore v. Kemp, 809 F.2d 702 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1054, 107 S. Ct. 2192, 95 L. Ed. 2d 847 (1987), 489 U.S. 1091, 109 S. Ct. 1560, 103 L. Ed. 2d 863, aff'd, 972 F.2d 319 (11th Cir. 1989).

Guilt or innocence not determined. — Decision of the committing court settles nothing as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. State, 237 Ga. 112, 227 S.E.2d 20 (1976).

Right to hearing is statutory, not constitutional. — Incarcerated state defendant has a statutory but not a constitutional right to a preliminary commitment hearing. Jackson v. Smith, 435 F.2d 1284 (5th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 402 U.S. 947, 91 S. Ct. 1639, 29 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1971).

Accused has no constitutional right to a preliminary hearing. Hunt v. Hopper, 232 Ga. 53, 205 S.E.2d 303 (1974).

Defendant's right to know charges. — Defendant is not entitled to be informed of the charges against the defendant prior to trial other than by indictment. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. State, 137 Ga. App. 760, 224 S.E.2d 866, aff'd, 237 Ga. 112, 227 S.E.2d 20 (1976).

Commitment hearing is a critical stage of the criminal proceedings and the defendant is entitled to counsel. State v. Houston, 234 Ga. 721, 218 S.E.2d 13 (1975).

Absence of a commitment hearing does not divest the criminal court of jurisdiction. Johnson v. State, 126 Ga. App. 757, 191 S.E.2d 614 (1972).

Hearing not requisite to trial for a felony. — Holding of a commitment hearing is not a requisite to a trial for commission of a felony. Holmes v. State, 224 Ga. 553, 163 S.E.2d 803 (1968); Smith v. Brown, 228 Ga. 584, 187 S.E.2d 142 (1972); Burston v. Caldwell, 288 Ga. 795, 187 S.E.2d 900 (1972); Johnson v. State, 126 Ga. App. 757, 191 S.E.2d 614 (1972); Brand v. Wofford, 230 Ga. 750, 199 S.E.2d 231 (1973); Douglas v. State, 132 Ga. App. 694, 209 S.E.2d 114 (1974); State v. Middlebrooks, 236 Ga. 52, 222 S.E.2d 343 (1976); First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. State, 137 Ga. App. 760, 224 S.E.2d 866, aff'd, 237 Ga. 112, 227 S.E.2d 20 (1976).

Return of indictment eliminates need for hearing. — Once an indictment has been returned, the necessity for a committal hearing has been eliminated. Douglas v. State, 132 Ga. App. 694, 209 S.E.2d 114 (1974).

Effect of issuance of indictment prior to hearing. — Defendant is not deprived of any constitutional right if the grand jury issues an indictment against the defendant prior to the holding of a preliminary hearing. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. State, 137 Ga. App. 760, 224 S.E.2d 866, aff'd, 237 Ga. 112, 227 S.E.2d 20 (1976).

Failure to hold a preliminary commitment hearing prior to an indictment of the defendant did not require that the indictment be quashed even though the defendant had been induced to make bond upon a magistrate's promise to hold such a hearing. State v. Ruff, 176 Ga. App. 303, 335 S.E.2d 687 (1985).

When a prosecutor requested a continuance of the defendant's preliminary hearing to accommodate the prosecutor's trial schedule but an indictment was returned before a rescheduled hearing could be conducted, a plea in abatement was not warranted. Chisholm v. State, 231 Ga. App. 835, 500 S.E.2d 14 (1998).

State's burden at a commitment hearing is simply to show probable cause to believe the accused guilty and, if so, to bind the accused over to the grand jury for indictment, rather than to show guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, as at trial. Neal v. State, 160 Ga. App. 498, 287 S.E.2d 399 (1981), overruled on other grounds, Bangs v. State, 198 Ga. App. 404, 401 S.E.2d 599 (1991).

Silence of accused at commitment hearing carries no inference as to guilt. — Individual accused of criminal misconduct might often determine as a matter of tactics or strategy that the presentation of a defense at a commitment hearing would serve little or no constructive purpose. Indeed, it might impose a disadvantage upon the accused to prematurely disclose the accused's defenses. In such cases, silence of the accused and the decision of the accused to present no evidence can carry no reasonable inference as to the accused's guilt. Neal v. State, 160 Ga. App. 498, 287 S.E.2d 399 (1981), overruled on other grounds, Bangs v. State, 198 Ga. App. 404, 401 S.E.2d 599 (1991).

Person not imprisoned until after indictment has no right to a preliminary hearing. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. State, 137 Ga. App. 760, 224 S.E.2d 866, aff'd, 237 Ga. 112, 227 S.E.2d 20 (1976).

Effect of indictment on judicial oversight or review of decision to prosecute. — Once an indictment is obtained, there is no judicial oversight or review of the decision to prosecute because of any failure to hold a commitment hearing. State v. Middlebrooks, 236 Ga. 52, 222 S.E.2d 343 (1976); First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. State, 137 Ga. App. 760, 224 S.E.2d 866, aff'd, 237 Ga. 112, 227 S.E.2d 20 (1976).

Return of indictment deprives committal court of jurisdiction. — Committal court has no jurisdiction to determine whether or not there is probable cause for indictment, after the indictment has already been returned. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. State, 137 Ga. App. 760, 224 S.E.2d 866, aff'd, 237 Ga. 112, 227 S.E.2d 20 (1976).

Trial court has no authority to quash an indictment on the issue of lack of probable cause, that issue having already been decided by the committing court. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. State, 237 Ga. 112, 227 S.E.2d 20 (1976).

Effect of illegal detention or arrest. — Illegal detention without a valid probable cause hearing does not preclude indictment by the grand jury. Illegal arrest or detention does not void a subsequent conviction. State v. Houston, 234 Ga. 721, 218 S.E.2d 13 (1975).

Reversal for lack of hearing. — After a conviction, the lack of a commitment hearing is not considered to be reversible error. State v. Middlebrooks, 236 Ga. 52, 222 S.E.2d 343 (1976); Collins v. State, 154 Ga. App. 651, 269 S.E.2d 509 (1980).

Supreme Court will not overturn a conviction either on direct appeal or on collateral attack because a commitment hearing was denied the appellant. State v. Middlebrooks, 236 Ga. 52, 222 S.E.2d 343 (1976).

Probable cause for trial. — In defendant's weapons case there was probable cause to bind the defendant over for trial when a law enforcement officer's statement that the defendant had been convicted of racketeering was sufficient to show probable cause on the element of possession of guns by a felon. As to the defendant's possession of the guns, all 29 were found in the house occupied by the defendant, including two in the defendant's bedroom. State v. Graddy, 262 Ga. App. 98, 585 S.E.2d 147 (2003), aff'd, 277 Ga. 765, 596 S.E.2d 109 (2004).

Lack of hearing rendered harmless by indictment, trial, and conviction. — Since the purpose of the commitment hearing is to determine whether there is probable cause to hold the accused for trial the subsequent indictment, trial, and conviction of the accused render omission of the hearing harmless. Thrash v. Caldwell, 229 Ga. 585, 193 S.E.2d 605 (1972); Allen v. Caldwell, 231 Ga. 442, 202 S.E.2d 35 (1973); Douglas v. State, 132 Ga. App. 694, 209 S.E.2d 114 (1974); First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. State, 137 Ga. App. 760, 224 S.E.2d 866, aff'd, 237 Ga. 112, 227 S.E.2d 20 (1976).

Denial of hearing not grounds for habeas corpus. — Claim of denial of a preliminary hearing or commitment hearing is not a valid ground of a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. Allen v. Caldwell, 231 Ga. 442, 202 S.E.2d 35 (1973).

Failure to provide counsel at hearing. — Failure to provide counsel at a probable cause hearing may not be raised after conviction by petitioners for writ of habeas corpus. State v. Houston, 234 Ga. 721, 218 S.E.2d 13 (1975).

Arresting officer has no authority to accept bond from one arrested under warrant for felony, but should return the party arrested to the county in which the crime was alleged to have been committed for examination before a judicial officer of that county and the fixing of bail by such officer in case of commitment. Paulk v. Sexton, 203 Ga. 82, 45 S.E.2d 768 (1947).

Hearsay evidence. — District attorney's declaratory judgment claim, which sought an order requiring magistrate judges to admit and consider hearsay evidence at preliminary hearings to determine whether to bind over a defendant for grand jury indictment, was proper as involving a justiciable controversy under O.C.G.A. § 9-4-2 because the magistrate court established a standard practice requiring the production of direct evidence in addition to hearsay evidence to support a bindover determination at a preliminary hearing; the result was uncertainty and insecurity in the district attorney as to the district attorney's office's burden of proof and production at future preliminary hearings. Bethel v. Fleming, 310 Ga. App. 717, 713 S.E.2d 900 (2011).

Admission of hearsay evidence in preliminary hearings. — Trial court did not err in ruling that hearsay evidence had to be admitted as legal evidence at preliminary hearings because magistrate judges were required to admit and weigh hearsay evidence in preliminary hearings; the public's interest in justice and safety is implicated when criminal charges are preliminarily dismissed against persons who were arrested pursuant to a showing of probable cause sufficient to obtain an arrest warrant. Bethel v. Fleming, 310 Ga. App. 717, 713 S.E.2d 900 (2011).

A reasonable time shall be given to the defendant and prosecutor for the preparation of the case. In no event shall the defendant be forced to attend the hearing without the aid of counsel if there is a reasonable probability of his securing counsel without too great delay. Where the hearing is postponed to a future day at the instance of either party or the court, it shall not be necessary to commit the defendant to jail pending the hearing; but he shall have the right to give bail for appearance at the hearing before the court of inquiry if the offense is bailable under the authority of the court.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Right to employ retained counsel. — Due process requirements guarantee to a defendant unable to employ counsel the right to have counsel appointed by the court, but no less do the requirements entitle an accused who is able to employ counsel a reasonable opportunity to obtain representation of the accused's choice, and the accused is not compelled to accept court appointed defenders instead of an attorney in whom the accused reposes greater confidence merely to speed the accused's trial by a day or two. Foote v. State, 136 Ga. App. 301, 220 S.E.2d 786 (1975).

Denial of right to counsel of own choice. — Improper denial of the defendant's right to be represented by counsel of the defendant's own choosing is violative of Ga. Const. 1976, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI (see Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV) and this section, and abrogates the right of procedural due process. Johnson v. State, 139 Ga. App. 829, 229 S.E.2d 772 (1976).

Inquiry into defendant's representation by counsel. — While a defendant may not be actually denied the privilege of counsel at the defendant's commitment hearing if it is made to appear that the defendant is able to procure one in a reasonable time, no affirmative duty rests on the judicial officer presiding at a commitment hearing to inquire into the defendant's representation by counsel, as upon a judge presiding over the actual trial of the defendant. The failure of the judicial officer to inform the defendant that the defendant has a right to secure counsel does not disclose that the defendant has been denied counsel as guaranteed by the Constitution. Harris v. Norris, 188 Ga. 610, 4 S.E.2d 840 (1939).

Discretion of court as to motions for postponement. — When it affirmatively appears that the possible time for investigation and preparation of the defense is short, and the defendant has not been dilatory in obtaining counsel, the discretion of the court on motions for postponement should be liberally exercised in favor of a fair trial. Foote v. State, 136 Ga. App. 301, 220 S.E.2d 786 (1975).

Judge's refusal of the request of a defendant for postponement, which in effect deprives the defendant of an opportunity to use normal facilities and resources to procure counsel of the defendant's own choice violated this section. Walker v. State, 194 Ga. 727, 22 S.E.2d 462 (1942).

Preliminary hearing without counsel as grounds for reversal. — When a preliminary hearing is held in the absence of the defendant's counsel, the reviewing court must reverse if the court determines that the lack of counsel might have contributed to the conviction. Mitchell v. State, 173 Ga. App. 560, 327 S.E.2d 537 (1985).

When power to be exercised. — This power which existed in the courts at common law, being harsh and oppressive, should never be resorted to except in extreme cases. It is a matter, however, resting in the sound discretion of the court. Crosby v. Potts, 8 Ga. App. 463, 69 S.E. 582 (1910).

General Consideration

Section creates no right to discovery. — There is no general right to discovery in a criminal case, and nothing in O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-23 and 17-7-28 creates one, or authorizes the defendant to go on a "fishing expedition" for evidence concededly beyond the scope of the real purpose of the commitment hearing. Pruitt v. State, 258 Ga. 583, 373 S.E.2d 192 (1988), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1093, 110 S. Ct. 1170, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1072 (1990).

This section was for the benefit of the state as well as the defendant; and while the duty there imposed upon a justice of the peace was clearly mandatory, it can have no reasonable relation to the legality of the commitment. Harris v. Norris, 188 Ga. 610, 4 S.E.2d 840 (1939).

Defendant's right to testify. — Trial court did not err by allowing the defendant to testify at trial because, although the defendant contended that the defendant was not sufficiently competent to knowingly waive the right to remain silent, the record showed that experts found the defendant competent to stand trial prior to the proceedings; the trial court engaged in a full and extensive colloquy with the defendant about the right to remain silent before the defendant took the stand at trial; and the defendant rejected counsel's strong recommendation that the defendant should not testify; thus, the defendant knowingly waived the right against self-incrimination and exercised the right to testify at trial after being fully informed of the consequences. Owens v. State, 298 Ga. 813, 783 S.E.2d 611 (2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 143, 196 L. Ed. 2d 110 (U.S. 2016).

Limits on examination of defendant. — Magistrate has no right to examine a defendant for the purpose of obtaining from the defendant contradictory statements. Cicero v. State, 54 Ga. 156 (1875).

Right to confrontation did not attach at preliminary hearing. — Because a preliminary hearing was ordinarily a much less searching exploration into the merits of a case than a trial, simply because the hearing's function was the more limited one of determining whether probable cause exists to hold the accused for trial, an accused did not have a constitutional right to confrontation as the right to confrontation applies only to trials. Gresham v. Edwards, 281 Ga. 881, 644 S.E.2d 122 (2007).

Hearsay evidence admissible in preliminary hearings. — Trial court did not err in ruling that hearsay evidence had to be admitted as legal evidence at preliminary hearings because magistrate judges were required to admit and weigh hearsay evidence in preliminary hearings; the public's interest in justice and safety is implicated when criminal charges are preliminarily dismissed against persons who were arrested pursuant to a showing of probable cause sufficient to obtain an arrest warrant. Bethel v. Fleming, 310 Ga. App. 717, 713 S.E.2d 900 (2011).

Use at trial of accused's statements at hearing. — There can be no doubt that a statement made by the accused upon the accused's commitment hearing is admissible against the accused upon the accused's trial in chief. Gresham v. State, 84 Ga. App. 403, 66 S.E.2d 255 (1951).

Instruction as to weight to be given defendant's testimony. — It is not error for the trial judge to fail to instruct the jury as to what weight is to be given the defendant's testimony because the defendant's testimony should be given the same weight and credit as any other witness. Jester v. State, 131 Ga. App. 269, 205 S.E.2d 444 (1974).

Application of abolition of unsworn statements to crimes committed before abolition. — Although a crime is alleged to have been committed prior to July 1, 1973, the effective date of Ga. L. 1973, p. 292, § 1, the law abolishing unsworn statements, the abolition can be applied to a defendant without violating the prohibition against ex post facto laws. Walker v. State, 132 Ga. App. 274, 208 S.E.2d 5 (1974).

This section was not relevant to a hearing on a revocation of a probationary sentence since such a hearing was not a criminal trial. Sellers v. State, 107 Ga. App. 516, 130 S.E.2d 790 (1963).

District attorney request for declaratory judgment on admissibility of hearsay evidence. — Supreme Court of Georgia reversed the judgment of the lower courts granting a district attorney a declaratory judgment because the district attorney did not have the right to bring a declaratory judgment action to obtain review of the probable cause decisions of magistrate judges at preliminary hearings or to challenge the admissibility of hearsay evidence at such hearings. Leitch v. Fleming, 291 Ga. 669, 732 S.E.2d 401 (2012).

App. 72, 299 S.E.2d 405 (1983).

Defendant's Right to Present Evidence

Defendant's testimony under oath generally. — When a defendant testifies under oath as any other witness, the testimony must be considered as sworn testimony and not merely a statement. Pittman v. State, 133 Ga. App. 902, 212 S.E.2d 505 (1975).

Cross-examination of defendant. — Defendant is permitted to be cross-examined as any other witness except as to general bad character or prior convictions. Such cross-examination may be thorough and sifting. Leonard v. State, 146 Ga. App. 439, 246 S.E.2d 450 (1978).

Failure to allow accused to call witnesses and present evidence. — Error is committed by the denial of the right of accused to call witnesses and present evidence at a preliminary hearing. However, such an error does not in and of itself afford grounds for relief if the defendant is subsequently indicted by a grand jury. Baldwin v. Sapp, 238 Ga. 597, 234 S.E.2d 513 (1977).

Failure to allow accused to examine potential state witnesses. — Imperfect commitment hearing, that is, one in which the appellant is not allowed to examine persons who are potential witnesses for the state on the trial, subpoenaed by the appellant for the purpose of discovery, does not authorize the trial judge to quash the indictment or grant the appellant a new trial. Day v. State, 237 Ga. 538, 228 S.E.2d 913 (1976).

Evidence of Bad Character and Prior Convictions

Test for admission of evidence of other, wholly distinct crimes. — On a prosecution for a particular crime, evidence which in any manner shows or tends to show that the accused has committed another crime wholly distinct, independent, and separate from that for which the accused is on trial, even though it is a crime of the same sort, is irrelevant and inadmissible, unless there be shown some logical connection between the two from which it can be said that proof of the one tends to establish the other. Rakestraw v. State, 155 Ga. App. 563, 271 S.E.2d 696 (1980).

Before evidence of independent crimes is admissible, two conditions must be satisfied. First, there must be evidence that the defendant was in fact the perpetrator of the independent crime. Second, there must be sufficient similarity or connection between the independent crime and the offense charged that proof of the former tends to prove the latter. Rakestraw v. State, 155 Ga. App. 563, 271 S.E.2d 696 (1980).

Once the identity of the accused as a perpetrator of an offense separate and distinct from the one for which the accused is on trial has been proven, testimony concerning the independent crime may be admitted for the purpose of showing identity, motive, plan, scheme, bent of mind, and course of conduct. Rakestraw v. State, 155 Ga. App. 563, 271 S.E.2d 696 (1980).

Evidence of other offenses of the defendant is admissible only if some logical connection can be shown between the offenses and the crime charged from which it can be said that proof of one tends to establish the other, other than by merely showing the bad character of the accused. Carroll v. State, 155 Ga. App. 514, 271 S.E.2d 650 (1980).

If the evidence of other transactions tends to illustrate the transaction in issue, or to establish some necessary ingredient of the particular offense under investigation, the evidence is admissible. Rakestraw v. State, 155 Ga. App. 563, 271 S.E.2d 696 (1980).

Crimes for which defendant not arrested or charged. — Fact that the defendant was not arrested and charged with the commission of independent crimes does not render evidence of the commission of such crimes inadmissible for showing common motive, plan, or scheme. Woodard v. State, 155 Ga. App. 533, 271 S.E.2d 671 (1980).

Similar burglaries held admissible. — See Rakestraw v. State, 155 Ga. App. 563, 271 S.E.2d 696 (1980).

Similar schemes for theft by deception held admissible. — See Wilson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 560, 271 S.E.2d 694 (1980).

Evidence implying previous arrest or conviction for other crimes held admissible. — See Woodard v. State, 155 Ga. App. 533, 271 S.E.2d 671 (1980).

Prosecutorial Comment on Failure to Testify

When prohibition against comment applies. — Statutory prohibitions upon comment on the defendant's failure to testify are applicable only when the defendant fails to testify. Gosha v. State, 239 Ga. 37, 235 S.E.2d 527 (1977).

Prosecutorial comment when defendant testifies. — If the defendant testifies in defendant's own behalf, there is no violation of U.S. Const., amend. 5 when the district attorney comments upon the defendant's failure, when the defendant testified, to explain or deny the testimony of particular witnesses. Gosha v. State, 239 Ga. 37, 235 S.E.2d 527 (1977).

Prosecutorial comment places cost on assertion of U.S. Const., amend. 5. — Self-incrimination clause of U.S. Const., amend. 5 forbids comment by the prosecution on the defendant's silence. Comment by the prosecutor cuts down on the privilege against self-incrimination by making the privilege's assertion costly. Gosha v. State, 239 Ga. 37, 235 S.E.2d 527 (1977).

Comment on failure to rebut state's proof. — While a prosecutor may not comment on a defendant's failure to testify, it is not error, nor is it improper, for the prosecutor to reflect upon the failure of the defense to present any evidence to rebut proof adduced by the state. Battle v. State, 155 Ga. App. 541, 271 S.E.2d 679 (1980).

Comment upon a defendant's failure to produce a witness is not error. Battle v. State, 155 Ga. App. 541, 271 S.E.2d 679 (1980).

Comment on trial witness' failure to testify at hearing. — Fact that the defendant is not permitted to present any evidence at the hearing does not require the grant of a mistrial when a trial witness is questioned about coming to the preliminary hearing and testifying, since inquiry into a trial witness' failure to disclose before trial the facts to which the witness testified is a legitimate subject of cross-examination. Such questioning indicates harmful error only when examination as to prior silence is directed toward a defendant. Day v. State, 237 Ga. 538, 228 S.E.2d 913 (1976).

Instruction regarding failure to testify. — Upon a proper and timely request, a defendant in a criminal proceeding is entitled to a jury instruction that defendant's failure to testify raises no presumption against the defendant. Wells v. State, 151 Ga. App. 416, 260 S.E.2d 374 (1979), overruled on other grounds, Copeland v. State, 160 Ga. App. 786, 287 S.E.2d 120 (1982).

Any person who is arrested for a crime and who is refused bail shall, within 90 days after the date of confinement, be entitled to have the charge against him or her heard by a grand jury having jurisdiction over the accused person; provided, however, that if the person is arrested for a crime for which the death penalty is being sought, the superior court may, upon motion of the district attorney for an extension and after a hearing and good cause shown, grant one extension to the 90 day period not to exceed 90 additional days; and, provided, further, that if such extension is granted by the court, the person shall not be entitled to have the charge against him or her heard by the grand jury until the expiration of such extended period. In the event no grand jury considers the charges against the accused person within the 90 day period of confinement or within the extended period of confinement where such an extension is granted by the court, the accused shall have bail set upon application to the court.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Construction of "refused bail." — Rules of statutory construction prohibit the phrase "refused bail" from being considered in isolation and, consequently, to limit application of the mandate of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50 to the circumstance in which a criminal defendant has made a request of the court for bond and bond has been refused. The language of the final sentence of the statute, "in the event no grand jury considers the charges against the accused person within the 90 day period of confinement . . . the accused shall have bail set upon application to the court," does not make a distinction between those detainees who are "refused bail" and those who are "without bail"; instead it states an entitlement to bail for the accused person who has not been indicted within 90 days of incarceration. State v. English, 276 Ga. 343, 578 S.E.2d 413 (2003).

Validity of detainer. — Defendant's motion for bond was properly denied because a purported detainer did not meet the requirements in O.C.G.A. § 42-6-2, did not constitute arrest and confinement of the defendant, did not require the presentment of the charges to a grand jury within 90 days, and did not entitle the defendant to automatic bail under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50. Denson v. State, 317 Ga. App. 456, 731 S.E.2d 130 (2012).

Applicability and construction with O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1. — Section was applicable to the first 90 days of confinement, and that section was applicable to all crimes after 90 days of confinement. After 90 days without bail and without indictment, the mandate of that section was that bail must be set by the trial judge. Burke v. State, 234 Ga. 512, 216 S.E.2d 812 (1975) (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-1).

Applicability and construction with O.C.G.A. § 17-6-14. — Although pretrial habeas corpus was a proper remedy after the defendant challenged a failure to set bail, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-6-14(a), the defendant's initial bond sufficed to provide for the defendant's appearance upon the trial of the original charges; however, because the defendant was indicted within 90 days of the defendant's re-arrest on new charges, the defendant was not entitled to habeas corpus relief under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50. Rainwater v. Langley, 277 Ga. 127, 587 S.E.2d 18 (2003).

Failure to set bail after 90 days of confinement without indictment does not require a reversal of the convictions on the indictments returned after the 90-day period. The proper procedure is to make application to the proper appellate court for bail pursuant to this section. Burke v. State, 234 Ga. 512, 216 S.E.2d 812 (1975).

When the defendant spent 90 days incarcerated without having charges against the defendant presented to the grand jury, the defendant was entitled to have bond set. Rawls v. Hunter, 267 Ga. 109, 475 S.E.2d 609 (1996).

Hospitalization as "confinement". — Because the defendant was under arrest, physically restrained, and under guard while in a hospital, the defendant was in "confinement," as the term was used in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50; therefore, because the defendant was held for 90 days without grand jury action, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for bail on the charges for which the defendant was arrested. Tatis v. State, 289 Ga. 811, 716 S.E.2d 203 (2011).

When the defendant was incarcerated for 94 days before filing for bond. — Even though the defendant did not petition for bond within 90 days of arrest and incarceration, the fact that the defendant remained in jail for 94 days prior to filing for bond was tantamount to the defendant being refused bail; thus, the trial court erred in denying the defendant bail. State v. English, 276 Ga. 343, 578 S.E.2d 413 (2003).

Bail set only on charge in arrest warrant, not subsequent indictment. — Pretrial petition for a writ of habeas corpus filed by a jail inmate was properly denied as both the trial court and the habeas court correctly held that the inmate was entitled to have bail set on only the charge set forth in the arrest warrant, and not the other six charges handed down in the grand jury's subsequently issued indictment. Bryant v. Vowell, 282 Ga. 437, 651 S.E.2d 77 (2007).

The superior court shall, upon motion for an extension of time and after a hearing and good cause shown, grant one extension to the original 180 day period, not to exceed 90 additional days.

(b) If the grand jury does not return a true bill against the detained child within the time limitations set forth in subsection (a) of this Code section, the detained child's case shall be transferred to the juvenile court and shall proceed thereafter as provided in Chapter 11 of Title 15.

(c) The provisions of this Code section shall not apply to any case in which the prosecuting attorney files notice with the court that the detained child is a codefendant to a case in which an adult is charged with committing the same offense and the state has filed a notice of its intention to seek the death penalty.

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 2013, p. 294, § 5-1/HB 242, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: "This Act shall become effective on January 1, 2014, and shall apply to all offenses which occur and juvenile proceedings commenced on and after such date. Any offense occurring before January 1, 2014, shall be governed by the statute in effect at the time of such offense and shall be considered a prior adjudication for the purpose of imposing a disposition that provides for a different penalty for subsequent adjudications, of whatever class, pursuant to this Act. The enactment of this Act shall not affect any prosecutions for acts occurring before January 1, 2014, and shall not act as an abatement of any such prosecutions."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

State failed to meet time limit for presenting case. — Superior court erred in denying the defendant juvenile's motion to transfer the case to the juvenile court because the state failed to meet the time limit for presenting the case to the grand jury, and under the plain language of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50.1(b), it was mandatory that the case be transferred back to the juvenile court; because the case should have been transferred, the superior court lacked jurisdiction to accept the defendant's guilty plea to aggravated assault, which was made only after the defendant's request for a certificate of immediate review was denied. Hill v. State, 309 Ga. App. 531, 710 S.E.2d 667 (2011).

Dismissal of indictment was affirmed because the appellate court found that absent an extension, charges against a juvenile had to be presented to a grand jury within 180 days of the juvenile's detention or the superior court lost jurisdiction. O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50.1 dealt specifically with juvenile dispositions and applied to this case. State v. Armendariz, 316 Ga. App. 394, 729 S.E.2d 538 (2012).

O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50.1 plainly adopts the date of detention, not the date of transfer, as the point from which the time is calculated, and the statute explicitly applies whether the child is initially subject to the jurisdiction of the superior court through committing an enumerated offense, O.C.G.A. § 15-11-28, or via a transfer to superior court after a petition and hearing. Hill v. State, 309 Ga. App. 531, 710 S.E.2d 667 (2011).

180-day time limit ran only while juvenile was detained. — Superior court erred in granting a juvenile's motion to transfer the juvenile's murder case to the juvenile court under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50.1 because the juvenile was released on bond; the 180-day period of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50.1(a) only ran during the time the juvenile was detained; therefore, Edwards v. State, 323 Ga. App. 864 (2013), was overruled. State v. Coleman, 306 Ga. 529, 832 S.E.2d 389 (2019).

Superior court loss of jurisdiction after 180 days. — Because a grand jury did not indict a juvenile within 180 days after the juvenile's detention as required by O.C.G.A. § 15-11-28(b)(2)(A)(vii) and no extension of time had been granted as of that date, the grand jury lost authority over the case by operation of law. The trial court's order granting the state's request for an out-of-time extension was void. Nunnally v. State, 311 Ga. App. 558, 716 S.E.2d 608 (2011).

Juvenile court erred in granting the state's motion to transfer the defendant juvenile's case back to the superior court pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 15-11-30.2 because the superior court had properly transferred the case to the juvenile court since the defendant was not indicted within 180 days of detention as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50.1; the time limits set forth in § 17-7-50.1 are plainly stated and mandatory and clearly express the legislative intent that when a juvenile is detained and the superior court is exercising jurisdiction under either O.C.G.A. § 15-11-28(b) or O.C.G.A. § 15-11-30.2, the state must obtain an indictment within the specified time or the superior court loses the jurisdiction conferred by those provisions. In the Interest of C.B., 313 Ga. App. 778, 723 S.E.2d 21 (2012).

Same 180-day time limitation applies to both O.C.G.A. §§ 15-11-28(b) and 15-11-30.2, and that 180 days begins to run on the day the juvenile is detained whenever the superior court is exercising jurisdiction under either section; it necessarily follows that anytime the superior court loses jurisdiction which was conferred by § 15-11-28(b) because the state failed to obtain an indictment within 180 days of the date the juvenile was detained, the time will also have expired within which the state could procure an indictment if the superior court were proceeding under O.C.G.A. § 15-11-30.2 and, thus, a transfer back to the superior court under those circumstances is pointless since an indictment returned by the grand jury would be void. In the Interest of C.B., 313 Ga. App. 778, 723 S.E.2d 21 (2012).

Although O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50.1 allows the state to request one automatic 90-day extension, this extension cannot be granted after the expiration of the 180 days; the legislature intended to set time limitations for the state to act in those situations in which the juvenile is detained and the superior court is exercising jurisdiction over the matter pursuant to either O.C.G.A. § 15-11-28(b) or O.C.G.A. § 15-11-30.2. In the Interest of C.B., 313 Ga. App. 778, 723 S.E.2d 21 (2012).

Waivers. — Lower appellate court erred when the court affirmed the transfer of the defendant from the superior court to the juvenile court because the court misunderstood O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50.1 when the court concluded that the statute did not permit a detained child to waive presentation within 180 days of the date of detention as the defendant filed an express waiver. State v. Baxter, 300 Ga. 268, 794 S.E.2d 49 (2016).

O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50.1(a) does not say that a charge shall be presented within 180 days but instead, the statute provides that the detained child shall be entitled to have the charge presented within 180 days. State v. Baxter, 300 Ga. 268, 794 S.E.2d 49 (2016).

Superior court had jurisdiction. — Given that the defendant failed to perfect the record by including in the record on appeal the transfer order which was the subject of the complaint, the appellate court assumed that the trial court's finding that a valid transfer order had been filed into the record before the superior court considered the state's motion for extension of time was correct and, thus, the trial court had jurisdiction to grant the state an extension of time to indict the defendant and, further, to accept the defendant's guilty plea. Walker v. State, 330 Ga. App. 872, 769 S.E.2d 602 (2015).

Transfer not dismissal appropriate. — State was not entitled to appeal an order transferring the defendant's case from superior court to juvenile court because the transfer order was entered under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-50.1(b), the provision directed that the juvenile's entire case be transferred to juvenile court, not dismissed, if the 180-day charging deadline was not met. State v. Johnson, 292 Ga. 409, 738 S.E.2d 86 (2013).

17-7-51. Special presentments treated as indictments; entry upon minutes; prosecutions upon special presentments.

All special presentments by the grand jury charging defendants with violations of the penal laws shall be treated as indictments. It shall not be necessary for the clerk of the court to enter the special presentments in full upon the minutes, but only the statement of the case and finding of the grand jury as in cases of indictments. It shall not be necessary for the district attorney to frame bills of indictment on the special presentments, but he may arraign defendants upon the special presentments and put them on trial in like manner as if the presentments were bills of indictment.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Applicability to accusations in city courts. — Former Code 1933, § 27-701 and 27-702 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-53, 17-7-54 and 17-7-70) have no applicability to accusations in city courts when, under special legislation establishing the various city courts, it was provided that the accusation must be founded upon the affidavit of the prosecutor, and the affidavit was made a substitute for the formal finding of the grand jury as to the misdemeanors triable in the city courts in question. The affidavit which was the basis for the issuance of a warrant to arrest is not to be confused with the affidavit which forms the basis of the accusation in many of the city courts. Brown v. State, 82 Ga. App. 673, 62 S.E.2d 732 (1950).

Distinction between indictment and special presentment. — Mere technical distinction between indictments and special presentments exists in that the indictments are presented by the prosecutor. Barlow v. State, 127 Ga. 58, 56 S.E. 131 (1906).

In this state the difference between an indictment and a special presentment has been abolished with respect to the requirements of law in regard to trials under them, a mere technical distinction remaining that in an indictment the accusation is presented by a prosecutor, and in a special presentment it is preferred by the grand jury without a prosecutor. Carmichael v. State, 228 Ga. 834, 188 S.E.2d 495 (1972).

Presentments and indictments as to misconduct in public office. — Though in absence of specific statutory authority the grand jury had no right to return a report charging or casting reflections of misconduct in office upon public officials or impugning their character, except by presentment or indictment, the grand jury's presentment may be widely published under former Code 1933, § 59-317 (see O.C.G.A. § 15-12-80), and was treated as an indictment by former Code 1933, § 27-703. Sweeney v. Balkcom, 358 F.2d 415 (5th Cir. 1966).

17-7-52. Procedure for indictment or special presentment of peace officer for crime in performance of duties; notification; rights of officer.

(a) Before a bill of indictment or special presentment against a present or former peace officer charging the officer with a crime which is alleged to have occurred while he or she was in the performance of his or her duties is presented to a grand jury, the officer shall be given a copy of the proposed bill of indictment or special presentment and notified in writing of the contemplated action by the prosecuting attorney. Such notice and a copy of the proposed bill of indictment or special presentment shall be provided to such officer not less than 20 days prior to the date upon which a grand jury will begin hearing evidence, and such notice shall inform such officer:

(1) That the grand jury is investigating such officer's conduct to determine if there is probable cause to conclude that he or she has violated one or more laws of this state;

(2) Of the date upon which the grand jury will begin hearing testimony on the proposed bill of indictment or special presentment and the location of the hearing;

(3) That he or she may request, but cannot be compelled, to testify as a witness before the grand jury regarding his or her conduct; and

(4) That, if such officer requests to testify before the grand jury, he or she will be permitted to do so at the conclusion of the presentation of the state's case-in-chief and that he or she may be questioned by the prosecuting attorney or members of the grand jury as are any other witnesses.

(b) If the officer requests to appear as a witness, he or she shall notify the prosecuting attorney any time prior to the date the grand jury will begin hearing testimony in such investigation. The prosecuting attorney shall, after consulting with the grand jury, inform the officer in writing of the date and time when he or she shall be present in order to testify and of the procedure that the grand jury will follow pursuant to subsection (c) of this Code section. The prosecuting attorney shall further advise the grand jury that an officer has the right to appear and testify or not to appear and testify and that, if the officer chooses not to testify, the grand jury shall not consider that in any way in making its decision.

(c) Prior to the introduction of any evidence or the first witness being sworn, the prosecuting attorney shall advise the grand jury of the laws applicable to the conduct of such proceedings, all relevant sections of the Code relating to the crime or crimes alleged in the bill of indictment, and any Code section that excuses or justifies such conduct. In particular, the grand jury shall be advised of Code Sections 16-3-20, 16-3-21, 16-3-23.1, and 17-4-20.

(d) If the officer requests to testify before the grand jury and appears at the date and time specified, the case shall proceed as in any other criminal case heard by a grand jury, except that the officer shall be permitted to testify at the conclusion of the presentation of the state's case-in-chief and that he or she shall only be present in the grand jury room while he or she is testifying. Such officer may be questioned by the prosecuting attorney or members of the grand jury as are any other witnesses. After the officer has been sworn as a witness and prior to any testimony by the officer, the prosecuting attorney shall advise the officer substantially of the following:

(1) The officer's appearance before the grand jury is voluntary, and he or she cannot be compelled to appear as a witness;

(2) By agreeing to be sworn as a witness on the bill of indictment or special presentment that will be laid before the grand jury, he or she will be asked to testify and answer questions and may be asked to produce records, documents, or other physical evidence;

(3) The officer may refuse to answer any question or to produce records, documents, and other physical evidence if a truthful answer to the question or producing such records, documents, or other physical evidence would tend to incriminate the officer or would tend to bring infamy, disgrace, or public contempt upon the officer;

(4) Any testimony given by the officer may be used against him or her by the grand jury or in a subsequent legal proceeding; and

(5) If the officer is represented by an attorney, the attorney shall have the right to be present in the grand jury room while the officer is testifying, and the officer will be permitted reasonable opportunity to consult with his or her attorney outside the grand jury room.

(e) After being sworn as a witness but prior to being asked any questions by the prosecuting attorney or the grand jurors, the officer may make such sworn statement as he or she shall desire. The officer's attorney shall not propound questions to the officer nor object to questions propounded to the officer on evidentiary grounds.

(f) At the conclusion of the officer's testimony, if any, the prosecuting attorney may present rebuttal evidence and advise the grand jury on matters of law.

(g) At any time during the presentation of evidence or during deliberations, the grand jury may amend the bill of indictment or special presentment or instruct the prosecuting attorney to cause a new bill of indictment or special presentment to be created as in any other case. When a bill of indictment or special presentment is amended or newly created, the accused peace officer and his or her attorney shall be provided a copy of it.

(h) No individual other than the jurors, and any interpreter needed to assist a hearing impaired or speech impaired juror, shall be present while the grand jury is deliberating or voting.

(i)(1) As used in this subsection, the term "nonserious traffic offense" means any offense in violation of Title 40 which is not prohibited by Article 15 of Chapter 6 of Title 40.

(2) The requirements of this Code section shall apply to all prosecutions, whether for felonies or misdemeanors, other than nonserious traffic offenses, and no such prosecution shall proceed either in state or superior court without a grand jury indictment or special presentment.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Intent. — This section is intended to afford to police officers the same procedural protection afforded to other public officials as to accusations arising from the performance or nonperformance of their official duties. Mize v. State, 152 Ga. App. 190, 262 S.E.2d 492 (1979).

Purpose — O.C.G.A. § 45-11-4 furthers the legitimate state interest of protecting certain government officials, vested with the authority to exercise discretion, against possible frivolous indictments pursued by persons aggrieved by the exercise of that discretion because the legislative rationale is that if these officials do not have such protection, the officials' reputation and performance of the officials' duties could be compromised while the officials are defending baseless charges; by enacting O.C.G.A. § 17-7-52, the General Assembly intended to afford peace officers the enhanced protections given to other public officials regarding accusations arising from the performance or nonperformance of the officials' official duties, and thus, the legitimate purpose of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-52, in conjunction with § 45-11-4, is to protect peace officers from harassing or frivolous charges before the grand jury. State v. Smith, 286 Ga. 409, 688 S.E.2d 348 (2010).

Similar provisions. — Former Code 1933, §§ 89-9907 through 89-9910 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 45-11-4 and 45-15-11), which were similar to Ga. L. 1975, p. 607, § 1 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-7-52), but involve public officials, were narrowly drawn and relate only to misconduct in public office. Mize v. State, 152 Ga. App. 190, 262 S.E.2d 492 (1979).

Defendant no longer a police officer. — Protections afforded by O.C.G.A. § 17-7-52 did not apply to one who was no longer a police officer when a prosecution against the officer was commenced. Dudley v. State, 242 Ga. App. 53, 527 S.E.2d 912 (2000).

Presence before grand jury. — When a police officer raped a woman in the officer's custody, the officer was properly denied the protection of being permitted to be present and to make a sworn statement when the case was presented to the grand jury since the performance of official duties does not include rape. Gober v. State, 203 Ga. App. 5, 416 S.E.2d 292, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 906, 416 S.E.2d 292 (1992).

When the defendant quashed the defendant's indictment due to the state's failure to allow defendant to appear before the grand jury as was the defendant's right as a police officer under O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-52 and 45-11-4, the state did not appeal as was the state's right under O.C.G.A. § 5-7-1(a)(1), the state instead obtained an accusation against the defendant, and the trial court quashed the accusation due to the state's failure to allow the defendant to appear before the grand jury, the state could not argue, in opposing the defendant's motion to quash the accusation, that the defendant was not performing the defendant's official duties at the time of the alleged criminal conduct; because the trial court had previously decided this issue against the defendant, res judicata under O.C.G.A. § 9-12-40 barred further litigation of the issue. State v. Allen, 262 Ga. App. 724, 586 S.E.2d 378 (2003).

Trial court did not err in finding that the defendant, who was an officer with a college police department, was not entitled to be present and make a statement pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-52(a) and 45-11-4 when the defendant's case was presented to the grand jury because the indictment did not allege that the crimes occurred while the defendant was performing the defendant's duties; the defendant was not on campus as defined by O.C.G.A. § 20-8-1(1), and the record did not show that the defendant's official duties as a campus police officer included the commission of the acts at issue, while the defendant was off duty and engaged in leisure activities outside of the defendant's jurisdiction. Worthy v. State, 307 Ga. App. 297, 704 S.E.2d 808 (2010).

Law enforcement officer defendant's motion to dismiss an indictment charging the defendant with felony murder on the ground that unauthorized persons were present in the grand jury room during the prosecutor's presentation of evidence was properly denied because Georgia's statutory secrecy requirements were not violated. Olsen v. State, 302 Ga. 288, 806 S.E.2d 556 (2017).

Although a deputy charged with sexual battery and false imprisonment was a certified peace officer and the offenses occurred during the deputy's working hours, the deputy had stepped aside from the deputy's official duties when the deputy allegedly restrained women against their will, groped their breasts and buttocks, and exposed the deputy's genitalia; therefore, the deputy was not entitled to the rights to be present and make a sworn statement to the grand jury provided in O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-52 and 45-11-4. State v. Dorsey, 342 Ga. App. 188, 802 S.E.2d 61 (2017).

Performance of official duties does not include the commission of burglaries. Mize v. State, 152 Ga. App. 190, 262 S.E.2d 492 (1979); Morrill v. State, 216 Ga. App. 468, 454 S.E.2d 796 (1995).

Police officer may be charged with a misdemeanor by accusation in state court. Sanderson v. State, 217 Ga. App. 51, 456 S.E.2d 667 (1995).

Police officer failed to show any violation of statutory rights. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's demurrer and motion to quash based upon the state's alleged violation of the defendant's rights under O.C.G.A. § 45-11-4(g) and (h), with regard to the procedure to be followed when charging a public officer with a crime, as the defendant failed to show that the state violated any of the defendant's rights under the statute. Brandeburg v. State, 292 Ga. App. 191, 663 S.E.2d 844 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1796, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 921 (Ga. 2008).

Lack of proper notice to police officer. — With regard to a defendant's conviction on three counts of false statements and writings, the trial court erred by denying the defendant's motion for a new trial as a result of erring by denying the defendant's plea in abatement and motion to dismiss the indictment as the state violated the notice provisions under O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-52 and 45-11-4, with respect to peace officers and public officials, by failing to notify the defendant when the proposed indictment would be presented to the grand jury. The defendant, a police officer and police chief of two municipalities, was accused of falsifying time records and, as a police officer, was entitled to the notice set forth under the statutes. Smith v. State, 297 Ga. App. 300, 676 S.E.2d 750 (2009), aff'd, 286 Ga. 409, 688 S.E.2d 348 (2010).

Court of appeals did not err in finding that the state failed to notify the defendant when the proposed indictment would be presented and in directing that the defendant's convictions be set aside because notice of the specific time and place of the grand jury presentment was required to be provided to the defendant by the state; timely serving the accused with a copy of the proposed bill of indictment but failing to timely inform the accused of when and where the reckoning with the grand jury will occur is not substantial compliance with the requirements of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-52 and 45-11-4 in regard to notification to the accused, and the task of providing the notice to the accused of the date, time, and place of the state's evidentiary showing logically and pragmatically must lie with the state. State v. Smith, 286 Ga. 409, 688 S.E.2d 348 (2010).

Defendant, a K-9 handler, was acting within the scope of the defendant's official duties when the defendant left the dog in the car with inadequate ventilation as the defendant was responsible for the dog's daily care including housing the dog at the defendant's residence and, thus, the defendant was entitled to the protections afforded by O.C.G.A. § 17-7-52, including notice of the grand jury proceeding and a copy of the proposed indictment before the state presented the case to the grand jury. State v. Peabody, 343 Ga. App. 362, 807 S.E.2d 107 (2017), cert. denied, 2018 Ga. LEXIS 428 (Ga. 2018).

Applicability of section. — Protections of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-52 extend to a peace officer charged with criminal misdeeds in office, but who is no longer employed as a peace officer when the criminal proceedings against that individual are commenced. Dudley v. State, 273 Ga. 466, 542 S.E.2d 99 (2001).

Defendant, a police officer, was charged with misdemeanor traffic violations of speeding and failing to reduce speed when approaching an intersection and was entitled to the statutory protections of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-52 and 45-11-4 afforded to police officers charged with a crime. State v. Lockett, 259 Ga. App. 179, 576 S.E.2d 582 (2003).

Because the defendant's performance of official duties as a police officer did not include rape or any other sort of sexual assault, and the defendant was not performing official duties while allegedly committing the charged offenses, the defendant was not entitled to the protections afforded by O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-52 and 45-11-4. State v. Galloway, 270 Ga. App. 184, 606 S.E.2d 273 (2004).

Charge of false writings and statements, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-10-20, which arose during the performance of official duties by the defendant, a police officer, should have been dismissed because proper notice pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-52 and 45-11-4 was not given to the defendant; other charges against the defendant were not subject to dismissal as those charges did not arise in the performance of official duties, and the lack of notice did not improperly influence or infect the other convictions. Wiggins v. State, 280 Ga. 268, 626 S.E.2d 118 (2006).

Trial court erred by holding that O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-52(a) and 45-11-4(g) did not apply as there was substantial evidence that the defendant entered the sheriff's office in furtherance of an investigation while the defendant was arguably on call on the night of the sheriff's death. Yancey v. State, 342 Ga. App. 294, 802 S.E.2d 702 (2017).

Application to corrections officer. — Counts for battery and lying to an agent of the Department of Corrections did not fall within the scope of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-52 because nothing therein indicated that the acts alleged occurred with the defendant's performance of the job duties at the prison as a corrections officer. State v. O'Neal, 352 Ga. App. 228, 834 S.E.2d 317 (2019), cert. denied, No. S20C0418, 2020 Ga. LEXIS 325 (Ga. 2020).

Trial court did not err in granting the motion to quash the count alleging the defendant violated the defendant's oath as a public officer because the language accusing the defendant of abusing inmates while employed as a corrections officer sufficiently characterized the defendant's conduct as within the performance of the defendant's duties such that O.C.G.A. § 17-7-52 applied and the state failed to follow the notice requirements therein. State v. O'Neal, 352 Ga. App. 228, 834 S.E.2d 317 (2019), cert. denied, No. S20C0418, 2020 Ga. LEXIS 325 (Ga. 2020).

17-7-53. Operation of two returns of "no bill" on charge as bar to future prosecution for same charge.

Two returns of "no bill" by grand juries on the same charge or allegation shall be a bar to any future prosecution of a person for the same offense under the same or another name; provided, however, that, if the returns have been procured by the fraudulent conduct of the person charged or there is newly discovered evidence, upon proof, the judge may allow a third bill to be presented, found, and prosecuted.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Intent. — This section was passed to protect the people of this state from vexatious prosecution in cases where grand juries may hereafter refuse to find the true bills. Lowry v. Thompson, 53 Ga. App. 71, 184 S.E. 891 (1936).

Effect on rights at common law. — This section has not changed the common law with reference to the fact that the defendant was entitled to be discharged without further answer after a return of the first "no bill." Lowry v. Thompson, 53 Ga. App. 71, 184 S.E. 891 (1936).

Applicability to accusations in city courts. — Former Code 1933, §§ 27-701.1, 27-703, and 27-704 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-51, 17-7-54, and 17-7-70) have no applicability to accusations in city courts when, under special legislation establishing the various city courts, it was provided that the accusation must be founded upon the affidavit of the prosecutor, and the affidavit was made a substitute for the formal finding of the grand jury as to the misdemeanors triable in the city courts in question. The affidavit which was the basis for the issuance of a warrant to arrest is not to be confused with the affidavit which formed the basis of the accusation in many of the city courts. Brown v. State, 82 Ga. App. 673, 62 S.E.2d 732 (1950).

Effect of first "no bill." — After the return of a first "no bill", the party against whom the indictment is sought is discharged without further answer, but a fresh bill may afterwards be preferred to a subsequent grand jury. Lowry v. Thompson, 53 Ga. App. 71, 184 S.E. 891 (1936).

After the return of a first "no bill", the party against whom the indictment is sought is discharged without further answer. Curcio v. Sanders, 109 Ga. App. 548, 136 S.E.2d 406 (1964).

Return of a first "no bill" was no bar to the prosecution of the accused under a "true bill" subsequently returned since under this section the return of two "no bills" by grand juries on the same charge or accusation was necessary to constitute a bar to future prosecution for the same offense. Curcio v. Sanders, 109 Ga. App. 548, 136 S.E.2d 406 (1964).

When one has been arrested on a warrant, and has executed an appearance bond with a surety thereon, and a "no bill" is returned by the grand jury as to the charge against the accused, the accused is by operation of law discharged upon the return of the first "no bill", and is released from recognizance along with the surety thereon, subject to being rearrested and new recognizance required upon the initiation of a new bill of indictment. Curcio v. Sanders, 109 Ga. App. 548, 136 S.E.2d 406 (1964).

True bill may not be recalled at same term. — After a grand jury has returned into court a true bill of indictment, and the indictment has been entered on the minutes of the superior court by the court's clerk, the court obtains jurisdiction of the case, and the grand jury is without authority, at the same term of the court, to recall the true bill, erase the entry of "true bill", and make an entry of "no bill" on the indictment. Gibson v. State, 162 Ga. 504, 134 S.E. 326, aff'd, 162 Ga. 504, 134 S.E. 326 (1926).

No right to entry of discharge in minutes of court. — Person discharged is not entitled to an order upon the minutes of the superior court discharging the person from the offense or crime therein contained. Christmas v. State, 53 Ga. 81 (1874).

Proof of return of "no bill". — Entry of "no bill" on the minutes or the original "no bill" is the highest evidence of the action of the grand jury. When it is accounted for, individual grand jurors may testify to the facts. Elliott v. State, 1 Ga. App. 113, 57 S.E. 972 (1907).

Mere statement by the prisoner's attorney to the jailer that the prisoner should be discharged because the grand jury had, upon investigation of the charge made against the prisoner, returned the first "no bill," is not sufficient proof of that return, when the jailer wants further proof and demands the proof, nor would it be such notice as would be conclusive on the sheriff, or jailer, or such notice as the jailer must then act on immediately at the jailer's peril. Even if it charged the jailer with the duty of making further inquiry, the jailer would be entitled to a reasonable time for this purpose before taking further action. Lowry v. Thompson, 53 Ga. 71, 184 S.E. 891 (1936).

Prima facie proof that prosecution has terminated. — Allegation or proof of a return of "no bill" by even one grand jury on an indictment is deemed a sufficient prima facie showing that a prosecution has terminated. Sykes v. South Side Atlanta Bank, 53 Ga. App. 450, 186 S.E. 464 (1936).

Pleading and use in evidence of defense. — Defense granted by this section may be pled in bar or given in evidence under the general issue. Elliott v. State, 1 Ga. App. 113, 57 S.E. 972 (1907).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Constitutionality. — Ga. L. 1987, p. 529, § 2, provides that O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1 shall apply to indictments or presentments returned on or after July 1, 1987. Because the statute treats all persons indicted on or after July 1, 1987, alike and because the statute presents no equal protection or due process problems, constitutional claims of a defendant concerning equal protection and due process do not provide ground for relief. Isaacs v. State, 257 Ga. 798, 364 S.E.2d 567 (1988).

Double jeopardy implications. — Retrial of a charge of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon would not itself violate double jeopardy or any other constitutional right since the right not to be prosecuted on a count which was quashed for the second time was purely statutory pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1. Langlands v. State, 282 Ga. 103, 646 S.E.2d 253 (2007).

Provisions of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1 do not explicitly apply to accusations. State v. Roca, 203 Ga. App. 267, 416 S.E.2d 836 (1992).

O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1 applies when quashed indictments originate in same county. — O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1 applies only when two quashed indictments originate in the grand jury of a single county; thus, the defendant could be prosecuted under a second indictment in a county even though the indictments had previously been quashed in that county and a second county. State v. Griffin, 268 Ga. 540, 491 S.E.2d 340 (1997).

Indictments returned before effective date of section. — Trial court erroneously applied O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1 to three indictments returned before the effective date of the statute, even though one of the indictments was returned after the effective date. State v. Smith, 187 Ga. App. 249, 370 S.E.2d 15 (1988).

Section contemplates actual quashing of two prior indictments. — By the statute's terms, O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1 contemplates the trial court's actual quashing of two prior indictments, not the trial court's mere denial of two prior special demurrers. Smith v. State, 198 Ga. App. 647, 402 S.E.2d 738 (1991).

When the defendant failed to include a record of the first and second indictments, there was no basis for the appellate court to determine whether those indictments were subject to a motion to quash; if the indictments were not quashed, the protections of the statute were not triggered. Hughes v. State, 266 Ga. App. 652, 598 S.E.2d 43 (2004).

O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1 applies when quashed indictments were defective. — When the defendant was indicted for vehicular homicide for the third time following the quashing of two prior indictments which cited the wrong code subsection, the appellate court upheld application of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1, holding that whether the prior indictments were sufficient to withstand demurrer was irrelevant. State v. Dorsey, 251 Ga. App. 788, 555 S.E.2d 141 (2001).

Nolle prossed entries. — Fact that state entered a nolle prosequi as to the second indictment did not preclude prosecution of the defendant under a third indictment for the same offense; the bar under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1 follows actions adverse to the state putting it out of court. Redding v. State, 205 Ga. App. 613, 423 S.E.2d 10, cert. denied, 205 Ga. App. 901, 423 S.E.2d 10 (1992); Gourley v. State, 268 Ga. 235, 486 S.E.2d 342 (1997).

When a trial court entered an order of nolle prosequi on a first indictment after a second indictment had been filed, the court's granting of the defendant's general demurrer on the second indictment was the only action which fell within the dictates of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1, and the trial court correctly held that there was no statutory bar to the defendant's prosecution under a third indictment. Gamble v. State, 235 Ga. App. 777, 510 S.E.2d 69 (1998).

Since the first indictment against the defendant was quashed and the state later initiated a nolle prosequi order regarding a second indictment, which the trial court properly granted in the court's discretion, the entry of the nolle prosequi avoided a quashing of the second indictment such that further prosecution under a third indictment was not barred by O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1, which only applied when a trial court quashed two prior indictments; accordingly, the trial court properly denied the defendant's plea of former jeopardy under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1. State v. Lejeune, 276 Ga. 179, 576 S.E.2d 888 (2003).

Despite the order of nolle prosequi entered as to a first indictment, the defendant would still be subject to reindictment, yet, under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1, the defendant was not subject to reindictment because the first and second indictments against the defendant were quashed. State v. Dempsey, 290 Ga. 763, 727 S.E.2d 670 (2012).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by granting the nolle prosequi as to a first indictment nor did the court err in denying the defendant's plea of former jeopardy and motion to dismiss a third indictment because under O.C.G.A. § 17-8-3, the state did not need defendant's consent to obtain an order of nolle prosequi before the case was submitted to a jury and the court had the discretion to order the nolle prosequi, instead of quashing the indictment to avoid the application of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1. Blanton v. State, 324 Ga. App. 610, 751 S.E.2d 431 (2013).

Entries of nolle prosequi do not trigger the bar to prosecution in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1. Blanton v. State, 324 Ga. App. 610, 751 S.E.2d 431 (2013).

Nothing in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1 evidences an intent by the Georgia General Assembly to include actions initiated by the state in the enumerated matters giving rise to application of the statutory bar to future prosecution. Blanton v. State, 324 Ga. App. 610, 751 S.E.2d 431 (2013).

Indictment quashed orally. — When the trial court orally quashed two previous indictments on the same charge and refused to reduce the order to writing, a third indictment was still barred. Evans v. State, 217 Ga. App. 548, 458 S.E.2d 357 (1995).

Accusation not same as indictment. — When the trial court quashed an indictment and a later accusation, both of which charged the defendant with misdemeanors, due to the state's failure to comply with O.C.G.A. § 17-7-52, O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70.1 did not make a quashed accusation similar or equivalent to an indictment for the purposes of the prosecutory bar under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1. Additionally, § 17-7-70.1 relates primarily to felonies charged by accusation, and the district attorney could not bring the accusation, as was required for § 17-7-70.1, due to the fact that the grand jury heard evidence in the case. State v. Allen, 262 Ga. App. 724, 586 S.E.2d 378 (2003).

Plea in bar properly denied. — Because an order quashing a count of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon for the second time was neither accomplished nor absolutely required, prosecution under a corrected, non-defective indictment was allowed; thus, the trial court did not err in denying a plea in bar as to the charge. Langlands v. State, 282 Ga. 103, 646 S.E.2d 253 (2007).

Ineffective assistance for failure to challenge indictment. — Defense counsel's performance was deficient in failing to challenge the defendant's charge of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon on the basis that the indictment erroneously alleged that the crime was committed on a date after the indictment was issued; since this was the second time the defendant had been indicted for that offense, if trial counsel had timely challenged that count, any future prosecution for that crime would have been barred, and thus prejudice to the defendant was shown. Langlands v. State, 280 Ga. 799, 633 S.E.2d 537 (2006).

Failure to challenge indictment based on grand jury composition not ineffective assistance. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to move to quash the indictment or to arrest judgment because even if a timely motion to quash had been filed, the indictment likely would have been dismissed because a convicted felon served on the grand jury in violation of O.C.G.A. § 15-12-60, however, the state would have been free to obtain the identical indictment from a properly constituted grand jury. Brooks v. State, 332 Ga. App. 396, 772 S.E.2d 838 (2015), cert. denied, No. S15C1548, 2015 Ga. LEXIS 573 (Ga. 2015).

17-7-54. Form of indictment by grand jury.

(a) Every indictment of the grand jury which states the offense in the terms and language of this Code or so plainly that the nature of the offense charged may easily be understood by the jury shall be deemed sufficiently technical and correct. The form of every indictment shall be substantially as follows:

Georgia, _____ County.

The grand jurors selected, chosen, and sworn for the County of _____, to wit: _____, in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia, charge and accuse (name of the accused) of the county and state aforesaid with the offense of _____; for that the said (name of the accused) (state with sufficient certainty the offense and the time and place of committing the same), contrary to the laws of said state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof.

(b) If there should be more than one count, each additional count shall state:

And the jurors aforesaid, in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia, further charge and accuse (name of the accused) with having committed the offense of _____; for that the said (name of the accused) (state with sufficient certainty the offense and the time and place of committing the same) contrary to the laws of said state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof.

General Consideration

This section was not intended to dispense with the substance of good pleading. Braxley v. State, 143 Ga. 658, 85 S.E. 888 (1915).

Indictment must state offense in an understandable manner. — Under this section, an indictment was sufficient if the indictment stated the offense so plainly that a man of rational understanding cannot fail to understand the indictment. Shehany v. Lowry, 170 Ga. 70, 152 S.E. 114 (1930).

When the offense is stated in such language that the jury can easily understand the nature of the offense charged, the charge measures up to the rule expressed by this section. Shehany v. Lowry, 170 Ga. 70, 152 S.E. 114 (1930).

True test of the sufficiency of an indictment. — True criterion as to the sufficiency of an indictment is the description of the crime charged rather than the description and number of the statute under the Code or the law. State v. Black, 149 Ga. App. 389, 254 S.E.2d 506 (1979).

Test is not whether the indictment could have been made more definite and certain, but whether the indictment contains the elements of the offense intended to be charged, and sufficiently apprises the defendant of what the defendant must be prepared to meet, and, in case any other proceedings are taken against the defendant for a similar offense, whether the record shows with accuracy to what extent the defendant may plead a former acquittal or conviction. State v. Black, 149 Ga. App. 389, 254 S.E.2d 506 (1979); Fletcher v. State, 157 Ga. App. 707, 278 S.E.2d 444 (1981).

This section required that the indictment should leave nothing to inference; or implication but that its statements should be so plain that a common man may without doubt or difficulty, from the language used, know what is the charge made against the accused. Moore v. State, 54 Ga. App. 218, 187 S.E. 595 (1936).

Sufficiency of indictment. — Trial court erred in overruling the defendant's special demurrer with regard to portions of the indictment that contended that the Medicaid fraud and theft by taking crimes were committed over a range of 38 months because the specific dates were known to the state and the state should have listed those dates due to the number of alleged acts. Cole v. State, 334 Ga. App. 752, 780 S.E.2d 406 (2015).

Indictment for street gang activity. — Indictment for criminal street gang activity under O.C.G.A. § 16-15-4(a) was sufficient to withstand 12 defendants' general and special demurrers. Although the indictment did not allege a date that the gang came into existence, the indictment sufficiently alleged that the gang existed at the time of each of the enumerated predicate offenses. State v. Hood, 307 Ga. App. 439, 706 S.E.2d 566 (2010).

Charge must be sufficiently explicit to support itself. — No latitude of intention can be allowed to include anything more than is expressed, and no argumentative inferences will supply the want of direct averments of material facts. Scott v. State, 53 Ga. App. 61, 185 S.E. 131 (1936), aff'd, 184 Ga. 164, 190 S.E. 582 (1937).

Indictment must allow accused to prepare defense and plead judgment as bar. — Accused must be apprised by the indictment, with reasonable certainty of the nature of the accusation against the accused, to the end that the accused may prepare a defense and plead the judgment as a bar to any subsequent prosecution for the same offense. Kyler v. State, 94 Ga. App. 321, 94 S.E.2d 429 (1956); State v. Black, 149 Ga. App. 389, 254 S.E.2d 506 (1979).

Good indictment must state the offense charged in detail sufficient to give the defendant ample opportunity to prepare a defense. Morris v. State, 166 Ga. App. 137, 303 S.E.2d 492 (1983).

Indictment not framed with reasonable certainty is defective, although the indictment may follow the language of this section. Kyler v. State, 94 Ga. App. 321, 94 S.E.2d 429 (1956).

Indictment which withstands demurrer and motion in arrest of judgment may yet be insufficient. — Description should be definite so that the judgment may be pleaded in bar of a subsequent prosecution for the same offense. Pharr v. State, 44 Ga. App. 363, 161 S.E. 643 (1931).

Indictment may be good in substance and sufficiently full to withstand a general demurrer or to support a conviction as against a motion in arrest of judgment, and yet be wanting in that degree of detail and definiteness which the accused may demand before going to trial on the merits. Mullen v. State, 51 Ga. App. 385, 180 S.E. 521 (1935).

Accused has the right to know enough of the particular facts constituting the alleged offense to enable the accused to prepare for trial. Lee v. State, 117 Ga. App. 765, 162 S.E.2d 229 (1968).

Requisite of a good indictment, as to form, is that the offense with which the defendant is charged be so stated as to give defendant ample opportunity to prepare a defense. State v. Green, 135 Ga. App. 622, 218 S.E.2d 456 (1975).

As long as the defendant is informed of the charges against the defendant so that the defendant may present a defense at trial and not be surprised by the evidence against the defendant, as well as protect against prosecution for the same offense, the indictment is sufficient. Carter v. State, 155 Ga. App. 49, 270 S.E.2d 233 (1980).

Construction of demurrer to indictment. — Demurrer raising special objections to an indictment should be strictly construed against the pleader. Johnson v. State, 233 Ga. App. 450, 504 S.E.2d 290 (1998).

Indictment is bad if accused is innocent under facts charged. — If all the facts which the indictment charges can be admitted, and still the accused be innocent, the indictment is bad. Chelsey v. State, 121 Ga. 340, 49 S.E. 258 (1904).

Indictment is good when guilt follows as legal conclusion. — If, taking the facts alleged in the indictment as premises, the guilt of the accused follows as a legal conclusion, the indictment is good. Chelsey v. State, 121 Ga. 340, 49 S.E. 258 (1904); Kidd v. State, 39 Ga. App. 30, 146 S.E. 35 (1928); Flynn v. State, 88 Ga. App. 52, 76 S.E.2d 38 (1953).

It is immaterial by what language an indictment styles the offense charged, if the indictment in fact charges an offense. Driver v. State, 60 Ga. App. 719, 4 S.E.2d 922 (1939).

Offense charged in an indictment is not determined by the name given it therein, but by the facts set forth in the indictment. Driver v. State, 60 Ga.

App. 719, 4 S.E.2d 922 (1939).

Description controls offense. — Description and not the name given to a criminal act characterizes the offense. Edwards v. State, 22 Ga. App. 796, 97 S.E. 205 (1918).

Sufficiency of indictment expressed in language of statute. — Indictment which charges the offense defined by a legislative act in the language of the act, when the description of the acts alleged as constituting the offense is full enough to put the defendant on notice of the offense with which the defendant is charged, is sufficiently specific. Lowe v. State, 50 Ga. App. 369, 178 S.E. 203 (1934); Stone v. State, 76 Ga. App. 96, 45 S.E.2d 89 (1947); Gaines v. State, 80 Ga. App. 512, 56 S.E.2d 772 (1949).

Indictment conforming substantially to the requirements of section would be sufficient, but it was not designed to deny to the accused the right to know enough of the particular facts constituting the alleged offense to enable the accused to prepare for trial. Moore v. State, 54 Ga. App. 218, 187 S.E. 595 (1936); Stone v. State, 76 Ga. App. 96, 45 S.E.2d 89 (1947); Kyler v. State, 94 Ga. App. 321, 94 S.E.2d 429 (1956); Cragg v. State, 117 Ga. App. 133, 159 S.E.2d 717 (1968).

Under general principles of common-law pleading, it is sufficient to frame an indictment in the words of the statute, in all cases when the statute so far individuates the offense that the offender has proper notice, from the mere adoption of the statutory terms, what the offense the offender is to be tried for really is. Stone v. State, 76 Ga. App. 96, 45 S.E.2d 89 (1947).

Accusation which alleges the violation of the statute in the language of the statute, together with the other necessary allegations, is sufficient to put the defendant on notice as against what facts and charges defendant must contend as every essential ingredient of the offense charged is set forth in the accusation with sufficient clearness to enable the defendant to clearly understand the nature of the offense, and the accusation is exact enough to protect the defendant from a second jeopardy. Gaines v. State, 80 Ga. App. 512, 56 S.E.2d 772 (1949).

When two counts of an indictment allege the offense charged in the terms and language of this section upon which the indictments are predicated, and the allegations were sufficiently plain for the nature of the offenses to be easily understood by the jury, the indictments were sufficient. Pippin v. State, 205 Ga. 316, 53 S.E.2d 482 (1949).

Indictment substantially in the language of the Code is sufficient in form and substance. Schulman v. State, 94 Ga. App. 489, 95 S.E.2d 343 (1956).

For an indictment to meet the test of this section, the offense shall be described in the language of the statute and with sufficient particularity to enable the defendant to be able to prepare for trial. Ingram v. State, 97 Ga. App. 468, 103 S.E.2d 666 (1958).

When the accusation was framed in the language of this section, the accusation sufficiently alleges and describes the nature of the crime so that the charge may be understood by the jury. Reddish v. State, 101 Ga. App. 759, 115 S.E.2d 736 (1960).

It is ordinarily sufficient to describe the offense in the language of the Code. Jones v. State, 101 Ga. App. 851, 115 S.E.2d 576 (1960).

When the charge is in the language of the statute, and the statute is upheld as against a charge of vagueness, the allegations are not insufficient to put the defendants on notice of the crime charged so as to render the indictment subject to dismissal. Flinchum v. State, 141 Ga. App. 59, 232 S.E.2d 396 (1977).

Indictment which charges a defendant with the commission of a crime in the language of a valid statute is sufficient to withstand a demurrer charging that the indictment is insufficient to charge the defendant with any offense under the laws of this state. Stewart v. State, 246 Ga. 70, 268 S.E.2d 906 (1980).

Indictment in which the allegations track the language of the applicable Code section is good as against a general demurrer. Bentley v. State, 210 Ga. App. 862, 438 S.E.2d 110 (1993); Thomas v. State, 215 Ga. App. 522, 451 S.E.2d 516 (1994).

Indictment couched in the language of the statute is not subject to general demurrer. Smith v. State, 130 Ga. App. 390, 203 S.E.2d 375 (1973); Dye v. State, 177 Ga. App. 813, 341 S.E.2d 469 (1986), overruled on other grounds, Eason v. State, 260 Ga. 445, 396 S.E.2d 492 (1990), overruled on other grounds, State v. Lucious, 271 Ga. 361, 518 S.E.2d 677 (1999).

Indictment need not state the statute on which indictment is based. State v. Pettus, 133 Ga. App. 622, 212 S.E.2d 9 (1974).

In order to charge statutory offenses, indictments are not constitutionally required to cite or name the statute. Turner v. State, 233 Ga. 538, 212 S.E.2d 370 (1975).

Indictment need not state statutory aggravators. — Trial court did not err by denying a defendant's motion to quash an indictment, based on Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000), and Ring v. Arizona, 536 U.S. 584 (2002), because the face of the indictment did not contain the statutory aggravators for the death penalty; the state was not required to list the statutory aggravators in the indictment. Thomason v. State, 281 Ga. 429, 637 S.E.2d 639 (2006).

Indictment which follows statute but lacks definiteness. — Although an indictment followed the statute, and is good in substance, if the indictment is wanting in that degree of detail and definiteness which the accused has a right to demand, a special demurrer thereto should be sustained. Bailey v. State, 65 Ga. 410 (1880); Johnson v. State, 90 Ga. 441, 16 S.E. 92 (1892); Dixon v. Mayor of Savannah, 20 Ga. App. 511, 93 S.E. 274, cert. denied, 20 Ga. App. 511 (1917).

If the indictment does not specify the section under which the indictment is drawn, the omission is immaterial. The offense charged is to be determined by the allegations. Turner v. State, 233 Ga. 538, 212 S.E.2d 370 (1975).

Indictment need not quote literally the language of the statute. — Indictment drawn under a criminal statute, which defines and describes the acts alleged to constitute the crime, is not subject to demurrer on the ground that the indictment fails to quote literally the exact language of the statute. Farrar v. State, 187 Ga. 401, 200 S.E. 803 (1939).

If the statutory definition of an offense includes generic terms. — While an accusation which states the offense in the terms and language of the Code or so plainly that the nature of the offense charged may be easily understood, is generally sufficient; nevertheless, when the terms used in the Code section are generic, it is not sufficient that an indictment charge the offense in the same general terms as in the definition of the crime, but the indictment must state the particular offense intended to be charged. Ramsey v. State, 85 Ga. App. 245, 69 S.E.2d 98 (1952).

Indictment must state the species of act charged; the indictment must descend to particulars. Lee v. State, 117 Ga. App. 765, 162 S.E.2d 229 (1968).

Many offenses cannot be described in language of Code. — This section was not intended to dispense with the substance of good pleading, and there are many charges where the offense cannot be described in the terms and language of the Code. Such cases are covered by the additional words, "so plainly that the nature of the offense charged may be easily understood by the jury." Moore v. State, 54 Ga. App. 218, 187 S.E. 595 (1936); Mell v. State, 69 Ga. App. 302, 25 S.E.2d 142 (1943).

Many offenses would not be sufficiently charged if stated merely in the language of the Code, such as murder, larceny, perjury, and others. A description of these latter offenses or a description of what the defendant did is necessary to make a legal charge, and to enable the defendant to prepare a defense. Kyler v. State, 94 Ga. App. 321, 94 S.E.2d 429 (1956).

Use of language of Code not always sufficient to withstand demurrer. — Rule set forth in this section that an accusation or indictment substantially in the language of the Code is sufficient to withstand demurrer, has its limitations, is not of universal application, and does not cover all crimes. Kyler v. State, 94 Ga. App. 321, 94 S.E.2d 429 (1956).

Indictment sufficient to withstand demurrer. — Trial court's decision overruling the defendant's special demurrer to an indictment charging the defendant with trafficking in methamphetamine and misdemeanor possession of marijuana in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-13-30(b) and 16-13-31(e) was authorized because the allegations of the indictment were sufficient to be easily understood by the jury, to allow the defendant to prepare the defendant's defense, and to protect the defendant from double jeopardy; the indictment sufficiently set forth the date of the offenses and tracked the material language of the statutes proscribing the charged offenses, and the language set forth in the counts against the codefendants separately designated the drugs upon which those charges were based and made clear that the defendant's drug charges were not based upon the drugs allegedly possessed by those individual codefendants. Fyfe v. State, 305 Ga. App. 322, 699 S.E.2d 546 (2010).

If the indictment is not stated in the language of the Code, the indictment must allege every essential element of the crime charged. Capitol Distrib. Co. v. State, 83 Ga. App. 303, 63 S.E.2d 451 (1951).

Predicate act sufficiently set forth in indictment. — Indictment clearly specified the predicate acts alleged against the defendants by specifying that the pattern of racketeering activity was unlawfully obtaining oxycodone, and it incorporated as predicate acts the remaining counts of the indictment charging the defendants with unlawfully obtaining oxycodone. Kimbrough v. State, 336 Ga. App. 381, 785 S.E.2d 54 (2016).

Distinction between accusations of statutory and common-law offenses. — Distinction is to be drawn between charges which are violations of purely statutory offenses and those cases which were penalized under the common law. Naturally, when the offense is statutory, the language of the accusation must follow more closely the language of the statute and be restricted by it more than when the charge relates to a common-law offense, in which the details must necessarily be amplified in order to cover the definition of the common-law offense. Dalton v. State, 176 Ga. 645, 169 S.E. 198 (1933); Kyler v. State, 94 Ga. App. 321, 94 S.E.2d 429 (1956).

When the offenses set forth in the indictment are violations of purely statutory offenses and not offenses penalized under the common law, the language of the indictment must follow more closely the language of the statute and be restricted by it more than a common-law offense. State v. Black, 149 Ga. App. 389, 254 S.E.2d 506 (1979).

Right to indictment perfect in form and substance. — While after verdict the defendant will not be heard to complain of technical defects as to the form of the indictment under which the defendant was tried, every defendant in a criminal case is entitled to be tried under an indictment perfect in form and substance. Kyler v. State, 94 Ga. App. 321, 94 S.E.2d 429 (1956).

Waiver of right. — Every defendant has the right to be tried upon an indictment or accusation perfect in form and substance, but this right, like every other, may be waived. Youmans v. State, 51 Ga. App. 373, 180 S.E. 495 (1935).

Unless the defects appearing in an indictment or accusation are so great that the indictment or accusation is absolutely void, the right to a perfect indictment or accusation may be waived, and is waived by going to trial under a defective indictment or accusation without complaint. Moore v. State, 94 Ga. App. 210, 94 S.E.2d 80 (1956).

Effect of waiver. — One who waives one's right to be tried upon an indictment perfect in form as well as substance, and takes one's chances of acquittal, will not be heard, after conviction, to urge defects in the indictment, unless such defects are so great that the indictment is absolutely void. Goldstein v. State, 26 Ga. App. 651, 107 S.E. 176 (1921); Youmans v. State, 51 Ga. App. 373, 180 S.E. 495 (1935); Tanner v. State, 90 Ga. App. 789, 84 S.E.2d 600 (1954).

If the defendant admitted the act as charged in the indictment, it was in the language of the statute, and so plainly stated as to be understood by the defendant and by the jury. Duncan v. State, 172 Ga. 186, 157 S.E. 670 (1931).

Intent must be alleged unless the law presumes intent from the act. Chelsey v. State, 121 Ga. 340, 49 S.E. 258 (1904).

Failure to charge essential element of crime. — There can be no conviction for the commission of a crime an essential element of which is not charged in the indictment. Steele v. State, 154 Ga. App. 59, 267 S.E.2d 500 (1980).

This section was obviously intended to sweep away all technical exceptions to indictments. Duncan v. State, 41 Ga. App. 655, 154 S.E. 197 (1930).

This section was not intended to dispense with the substance of good pleading, nor to deny to one accused of crime the right to know enough of the particular facts constituting the alleged offense to be able to prepare for trial, nor to deprive the accused of the right to have an indictment perfect as to the essential elements of the crime charged. Pharr v. State, 44 Ga. App. 363, 161 S.E. 643 (1931); Statham v. State, 50 Ga. App. 165, 177 S.E. 522 (1934); Isom v. State, 71 Ga. App. 803, 32 S.E.2d 437 (1944).

Indictments for attempted crimes. — When the indictment charges only an attempt to commit a crime, the indictment must aver some act toward the commission of such crime. However, this rule is not applicable to cases where only the completed offense is charged. Arrington v. State, 48 Ga. App. 70, 171 S.E. 878 (1934).

Allegation in indictment of prior convictions. — It is not necessary for the state to prove that a defendant's prior convictions are valid in order merely to allege the convictions in the indictment. Callahan v. State, 148 Ga. App. 555, 251 S.E.2d 790 (1978).

State need not set out state's evidence in the indictment. — It is not necessary for the state to spread out in an indictment the evidence on which the state relies for a conviction. Mell v. State, 69 Ga. App. 302, 25 S.E.2d 142 (1943).

Roles played need not be stated. — This section required only that the offense shall be stated, not the roles played by the several actors, for instance, as that of an accessory. Chambers v. State, 194 Ga. 773, 22 S.E.2d 487, answer conformed to, 68 Ga. App. 338, 23 S.E.2d 545 (1942).

Principal in the second degree may be convicted under an indictment charging the person as principal in the first degree. Morris v. State, 26 Ga. App. 60, 105 S.E. 380 (1920). See Hansford v. State, 54 Ga. 55 (1875).

Offense, time, and place must appear in indictment. — This section gave a form for every indictment or accusation, and it was there pointed out that each indictment or accusation must set out the offense and allege the time and place of the offense's commission with sufficient certainty. Lyles v. State, 215 Ga. 229, 109 S.E.2d 785 (1959).

Failure to identify dates of offenses. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's special demurrer to an indictment for child molestation and rape alleging that the offenses were committed "between the dates of January 1, 1994 and December 31, 1998, the exact date(s) not being known to the Grand Jury and said date not being alleged to be a material allegation of the Indictment" as the indictment did not specify the specific date or time frame in which the offenses occurred. Blackmon v. State, 272 Ga. App. 854, 614 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's special demurrer to an indictment as the state did not meet the state's burden to show that the state could not more specifically identify the dates of the offenses as the state failed to present evidence that the victim was a young child who was incapable of adequately articulating exactly when the offenses occurred; the defendant was entitled to an indictment perfect in form and substance as the defendant had filed a timely special demurrer and the indictment failed to allege a specific date on which the crime was committed and was not perfect in form. Blackmon v. State, 272 Ga. App. 854, 614 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

Accusation that alleged contributing to the delinquency of a minor and electronically furnishing obscene material to a minor within a two and a half month time frame was subject to a demurrer because the state gave no explanation as to why an investigating officer was unable to ascertain the dates of the offenses from the victim's computer. State v. Meeks, 309 Ga. App. 855, 711 S.E.2d 403 (2011).

Trial court erred by overruling the defendant's special demurrer to one count each of incest and child molestation as those counts were subject to a special demurrer since the evidence showed that the state reasonably could narrow the range of dates alleged in those counts of the indictment to a single date only. Herring v. State, 334 Ga. App. 50, 778 S.E.2d 57 (2015).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's plea in abatement because the state was unable either to identify a specific date on which an offense of child molestation occurred or to narrow the range of possible dates as the evidence produced during the hearing only concerned the date of the defendant's arrival in the victim's neighborhood, that the molestation began thereafter, and the date upon which the victim disclosed the molestation. Watkins v. State, 336 Ga. App. 145, 784 S.E.2d 11 (2016).

Failure to narrow ranges of dates. — Trial court did not err by denying the defendant's special demurrer to Counts 1 and 2 of the indictment charging incest based on the state failing to have narrowed the ranges of dates because the evidence showed that the defendant had engaged in at least 50 individual acts of incest with an older daughter throughout the two-year time period alleged in the indictment, not just during the months the defendant identified in the defendant's brief. Blanton v. State, 324 Ga. App. 610, 751 S.E.2d 431 (2013).

Alleging place of crime. — Unless the character of the place is an essential element of the offense, an indictment that charges the crime to have been committed in a particular county is sufficiently certain as to place. Gentry v. State, 235 Ga. App. 328, 508 S.E.2d 671 (1998).

When a penal statute or regulation contains an exception or exemption, the rule in regard to the necessity of alleging in the indictment that the defendant does not fall within such exception is a rule of construction. That is, if the first sentence or part of the penal law describes a penal offense applicable to all persons, and the second merely describes a class to which the law shall not apply, or simply limits the operation of the law as defined in the first sentence, then such latter portion is merely a matter of defense, and it is incumbent upon the defendant to prove that the defendant falls within such exemption. However, a contrary rule prevails when the penal offense as defined is not directed against all persons generally, but only against a certain class of persons. Flynn v. State, 88 Ga. App. 52, 76 S.E.2d 38 (1953).

Indictment under an alias dictus. — If the grand jury is uncertain which of the several names is the real name of the person, the grand jury may indict the accused under an alias dictus. Andrews v. State, 196 Ga. 84, 26 S.E.2d 263, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 780, 64 S. Ct. 87, 88 L. Ed. 468 (1943), overruled on other grounds, Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955).

When a defendant is indicted under two names, alleged by an alias dictus, it is necessary only that the defendant is commonly known by either of the names. Andrews v. State, 196 Ga. 84, 26 S.E.2d 263, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 780, 64 S. Ct. 87, 88 L. Ed. 468 (1943), overruled on other grounds, Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955).

When the accused is known by different names, or the grand jury is uncertain as to which of a number of names is the accused's true name, it is lawful for the indictment to identify the accused by all such names as alias dictus. Andrews v. State, 196 Ga. 84, 26 S.E.2d 263, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 780, 64 S. Ct. 87, 88 L. Ed. 468 (1943), overruled on other grounds, Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955).

Variance between name in indictment and name used in testimony. — See Anderson v. State, 196 Ga. 468, 26 S.E.2d 755 (1943).

Lack of evidence that accused was known by names alleged as alias dictus. — See Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955).

Omission of averment of residence. — Although the form of the indictment prescribed in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-54 contains an averment of residence of the defendant, the omission of such averment in the indictment will not be grounds for quashing the indictment. Smith v. State, 161 Ga. App. 240, 288 S.E.2d 304 (1982).

Venue. — When an indictment refers to a named county and no other county is mentioned, a subsequent allegation that the crime was committed "in the county aforesaid," sufficiently states the venue. Thomas v. State, 71 Ga. 44 (1883).

Omission of "in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia." — Indictment should be "in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia." If these words are omitted on exceptions taken at the proper time, the indictment will be quashed. Such exception is not good in arrest of judgment. Horne v. State, 37 Ga. 80, 92 Am. Dec. 49 (1867).

Omission in charge and accusation against the defendant by the grand jurors of the words "in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia" was not grounds for demurrer (now motion to dismiss). Deason v. State, 63 Ga. App. 359, 11 S.E.2d 74 (1940).

Failure to include contra pacem clause. — Indictment from which there has been entirely omitted the words prescribed in the form "contrary to the laws of said state, good order, peace and dignity thereof" is defective and subject to a special demurrer. Horne v. State, 37 Ga. 80, 92 Am. Dec. 49 (1867); Hardin v. State, 106 Ga. 384, 32 S.E. 365, 71 Am. St. R. 269 (1899).

Printed words "special presentment" is a sufficient endorsement to show that the grand jury found such special presentment. Barlow v. State, 127 Ga. 58, 56 S.E. 131 (1906).

Failure to state jurors' names on indictment. — When, through inadvertence, the indictment is signed by the foreperson but does not contain the names of the jurors who acted on the true bill, the defect is one of form only and cannot be raised after the verdict. Hopper v. Kemp, 236 Ga. 615, 225 S.E.2d 15 (1976).

Failure to state jurors' names makes indictment defective. — Indictment that failed to show the names of the grand jurors who found the indictment is defective. Willerson v. State, 14 Ga. App. 451, 81 S.E. 391 (1914).

Indictment would have been defective had the indictment failed to show the names of the grand jurors who returned the indictment. Hawkins v. State, 260 Ga. 138, 390 S.E.2d 836 (1990).

Reading of grand jurors' names not error. — Trial court did not err by including the names of the grand jurors when the court read the indictment to the jury; although the trial court was not required by law to read the names of the grand jurors, it was not error to do so when the trial court properly instructed the jury that the indictment did not constitute any evidence of guilt. Thomason v. State, 281 Ga. 429, 637 S.E.2d 639 (2006).

Defendant may expressly waive defect in indictment. Williams v. State, 107 Ga. 721, 33 S.E. 648 (1899).

Signing of foreperson's name on bill. — There is no statute in this state requiring the foreperson to sign their name on the back of the bill of indictment or special presentment under the words "true bill," but it is a practice for the foreperson to do so and the practice so adopted is advisable. Johnson v. State, 177 Ga. 881, 171 S.E. 699 (1933).

Foreperson's signature may appear on any part of the indictment. Taylor v. State, 121 Ga. 362, 49 S.E. 317 (1904).

Clerical errors generally. — When the indictment is otherwise good, an obvious clerical error will not vitiate the indictment. Wood v. State, 118 Ga. App. 477, 164 S.E.2d 233 (1968).

Inadvertent use of "accused" for "prosecutor." — When the indictment in a case is otherwise good, the clerical error of writing inadvertently the word "accused" for the word "prosecutor" does not vitiate the indictment. Since the word which is changed does not so obscure the sense that a juror or person of ordinary intelligence cannot with certainty ascertain the meaning, the defendant will not be permitted after the verdict to take advantage of this mere clerical error which is corrected by the necessary intendment of the indictment. Lewis v. State, 55 Ga. App. 743, 191 S.E. 278 (1937).

Clerk's failure to file accusation. — When the defendant is tried on an accusation which charges the defendant with the commission of a misdemeanor, and before the trial the defendant waives formal arraignment, a copy of the accusation, and a list of the witnesses, and enters a formal plea of not guilty, the defendant is held to have waived the irregularity of the clerk's failure to file the accusation in the office of the clerk of the trial court. Youmans v. State, 51 Ga. App. 373, 180 S.E. 495 (1935).

Sufficiency of substantial conformity with statute. — Indictment conforming substantially to the requirements of this section would be sufficient, but it was not designed to deny to the accused the right to know enough of the particular facts constituting the alleged offense to enable the accused to prepare for trial. Moore v. State, 54 Ga. App. 218, 187 S.E. 595 (1936); Stone v. State, 76 Ga. App. 96, 45 S.E.2d 89 (1947); Kyler v. State, 94 Ga. App. 321, 94 S.E.2d 429 (1956); Cragg v. State, 117 Ga. App. 133, 159 S.E.2d 717 (1968).

Sufficiency of indictment. — If each count in an indictment contained the elements of the offense charged and the defendants could not claim the charges were so insufficient that the defendants were surprised by evidence introduced at trial or were unable to prepare a defense, the indictment was sufficient even though each count was not specifically individualized to each person named in the count. Jordan v. State, 220 Ga. App. 627, 470 S.E.2d 242 (1996).

Indictment sufficient. — Indictment charged the defendant with child molestation using the language found in the relevant statute and described the acts constituting the offense sufficiently to put the defendant on notice of the offense with which the defendant was charged; accordingly, the defendant's claim that the indictment was invalid was without merit. Golden v. State, 299 Ga. App. 407, 683 S.E.2d 618 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1904, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 56 (Ga.), cert. denied, 560 U.S. 941, 130 S. Ct. 3358, 176 L. Ed. 2d 1250 (2010), overruled on other grounds by Collier v. State, 834 S.E.2d 769, 2019 Ga. LEXIS 708 (Ga. 2019).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to challenge the validity of an indictment because pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-54 the indictment showed that it was a "True Bill," was signed by the grand jury foreperson, and was filed with the clerk's office with the clerk of the court's name prior to the defendant's arraignment, since the defendant and counsel signed the indictment; there is no express requirement that the indictment contain a written statement that the indictment was received in "open court," or that the indictment be signed. White v. State, 312 Ga. App. 421, 718 S.E.2d 335 (2011).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a demurrer after finding that the indictment was completely accurate to give the defendant notice of the charges. Andemical v. State, 336 Ga. App. 661, 786 S.E.2d 238 (2016).

How defects or irregularities to be complained of. — Defects or irregularities in an indictment or accusation cannot be complained of in a ground of a motion for a new trial, but the objections to the indictment or accusation must be made by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment. Youmans v. State, 51 Ga. App. 373, 180 S.E. 495 (1935).

Defendant's motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment challenging the wording of the indictment charging the defendant with aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, were properly denied because the defendant could not have admitted the allegations of the indictment without admitting that the defendant was guilty of a crime and, under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-110, having failed to file a timely special demurrer, the defendant waived the right to a perfect indictment. McDaniel v. State, 298 Ga. App. 558, 680 S.E.2d 593 (2009).

Failure to preserve lab sample evidence did not warrant dismissal of indictment. — Trial court's order dismissing an indictment charging the defendant with rape, incest, aggravated child molestation, and child molestation on grounds that the state improperly failed to preserve lab samples taken from the victim was reversed because the defendant failed to show that the failure was the result of bad faith on the part of the state or the police, and the value of the sample to the defendant was only potentially exculpatory. State v. Brady, 287 Ga. App. 626, 653 S.E.2d 72 (2007).

When objection to indictment must be in writing. — When an indictment is not on the indictment's face so defective that a motion in arrest of judgment would lie, an objection to the indictment must be in writing. An oral objection, being ineffective for its purpose, is the equivalent of none at all and if no other action be taken, a waiver results. Curtis v. State, 102 Ga. App. 790, 118 S.E.2d 264 (1960).

Exceptions for form, special demurrers, and pleas generally. — All exceptions to the indictment for form, or for matters that may arise by special demurrer, or by plea in abatement or in bar, must be made in writing preliminary to the trial, and if not made at the proper time are to be held as waived in contemplation of law. Youmans v. State, 51 Ga. App. 373, 180 S.E. 495 (1935).

Defendant waived all exceptions to the mere form of an indictment by failing to urge the exceptions in a timely, written, pretrial special demurrer. Bentley v. State, 210 Ga. App. 862, 438 S.E.2d 110 (1993).

For distinction between exceptions to the indictment before trial, and motion after verdict in arrest of judgment, see Lampkin v. State, 87 Ga. 516, 13 S.E. 523 (1891); Phillips v. State, 95 Ga. 478, 20 S.E. 270 (1894).

Sufficiency to withstand demurrer. — When every essential ingredient of the offense charged is set forth with sufficient clearness to enable the defendant to prepare a defense and the jury clearly to understand the nature of the offense, the accusation is not demurrable. De Vere v. State, 45 Ga. App. 330, 164 S.E. 485 (1932).

When every essential ingredient of the offense charged is set forth with sufficient clearness to enable the defendant to prepare a defense and the jury clearly to understand the nature of the offense, and the indictment is exact enough to protect the defendant from a second jeopardy, the indictment is not demurrable. Summers v. State, 63 Ga. App. 445, 11 S.E.2d 409 (1940).

True test of the sufficiency of an indictment to withstand a general demurrer is that if all the facts which the indictment charges can be admitted, and still the accused is innocent, the indictment is bad, but if, taking the facts alleged as premises, the guilt of the accused follows as a legal conclusion, the indictment is good. Gower v. State, 71 Ga. App. 127, 30 S.E.2d 298 (1944).

Indictment which sets out the essential elements of the crime charged with such particularity as will fully apprise the accused of the exact nature of the offense and the manner in which the offense was committed is sufficient to withstand a general demurrer. Clackum v. State, 55 Ga. App. 44, 189 S.E. 397 (1937); Flynn v. State, 88 Ga. App. 52, 76 S.E.2d 38 (1953).

Demurrer strictly construed against pleader. — Demurrer raising special objections to an indictment should be strictly construed against the pleader. De Vere v. State, 45 Ga. App. 330, 164 S.E. 485 (1932).

When trial has been had before the appellate court reviews the merits of a special demurrer, based upon alleged failure to comply with the form of indictment set out by this section and when no prejudice to defendant has occurred, reversal is a mere windfall to the defendant and contributes nothing to the administration of justice. Bill v. State, 153 Ga. App. 131, 264 S.E.2d 582 (1980).

Effect of motion to quash made after issue joined. — Oral motion to quash an indictment which is made after the issue has been joined raises only the question of whether the indictment is so defective that a motion in arrest of judgment would lie. Curtis v. State, 102 Ga. App. 790, 118 S.E.2d 264 (1960).

Applicability to accusations in city courts. — This section did not apply to accusations in city courts. Flanders v. State, 9 Ga. App. 820, 72 S.E. 286 (1910).

Former Code 1933, §§ 27-701.1, 27-703 and 27-704 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-51, 17-7-54, and 17-7-70) have no applicability to accusations in city courts when, under special legislation establishing the various city courts, it was provided that the accusation must be founded upon the affidavit of the prosecutor, and the affidavit was made a substitute for the formal finding of the grand jury as to the misdemeanors triable in the city courts in question. The affidavit which was the basis for the issuance of a warrant to arrest is not to be confused with the affidavit which formed the basis of the accusation in many of the city courts. Brown v. State, 82 Ga. App. 673, 62 S.E.2d 732 (1950).

Probate judge who is solicitor pro tem may prepare and sign the indictment. Williams v. State, 69 Ga. 11 (1882).

Multiple Counts

Joinder of charges as separate counts generally. — Kindred offenses may be charged in separate counts of the same indictment. Sewell v. State, 23 Ga. App. 765, 99 S.E. 320 (1919).

Different counts charging offenses of the same nature may be joined in one indictment. Gaulden v. State, 41 Ga. App. 635, 154 S.E. 209 (1930).

Two or more counts, charging the defendant with the same species of felony, may be joined in the same indictment. Webb v. State, 177 Ga. 414, 170 S.E. 252, answer conformed to, 47 Ga. App. 505, 170 S.E. 827 (1933).

Two or more felonies may properly be charged in separate counts in one indictment, though the offenses are committed at different times and places, and involve transactions with different persons, when the crimes charged, though differing in degree and varying in the punishment to be inflicted for their perpetration, are of the same general nature, and the mode of trial is the same. Webb v. State, 47 Ga. App. 505, 170 S.E. 827 (1933); Ivester v. State, 75 Ga. App. 600, 44 S.E.2d 61 (1947).

Felonies of the same general nature, when the mode of trial is the same, may be joined in separate counts of the same indictment. Askea v. State, 153 Ga. App. 849, 267 S.E.2d 279 (1980).

Joinder of offenses in same indictment not prohibited by statute. — There is no statute in this state which prohibits the joinder of several offenses of the same class or species in different counts of the same indictment. Patterson v. State, 181 Ga. 698, 184 S.E. 309 (1935).

If all of the offenses charged in an indictment are of the same species, it is unnecessary to allege that the separate offenses had a continuity of purpose or intent so as to make the offenses a part of a general plan or scheme. Webb v. State, 177 Ga. 414, 170 S.E. 252, answer conformed to, 47 Ga. App. 505, 170 S.E. 827 (1933).

Each count must be complete within itself. — It is fundamental that when an indictment is in more than one count, each count must be complete within itself and plainly, fully, and distinctly set out the crime alleged. Lee v. State, 81 Ga. App. 829, 60 S.E.2d 177 (1950).

Essential allegations. — Rule of law that each count must be complete within itself and must contain every essential allegation to constitute a crime applies to the offense rather than to the form. Shuman v. State, 82 Ga. App. 294, 60 S.E.2d 517 (1950).

Express reference from one count to another is allowable. Lee v. State, 81 Ga. App. 829, 60 S.E.2d 177 (1950).

One count may refer to another to prevent repetition. Braxley v. State, 143 Ga. 658, 85 S.E. 888, rev'd on other grounds, 17 Ga. App. 196, 86 S.E. 425 (1915); Durden v. State, 29 Ga. App. 548, 116 S.E. 41, aff'd, 31 Ga. App. 295, 121 S.E. 840 (1923).

Counts need not be numbered. — In stating the form of an indictment which shall be sufficiently technical and correct, this section did not require that the counts shall be numbered, and while it was preferable to consecutively number the counts, failure to do so would not render the indictment demurrable. Wright v. State, 53 Ga. App. 371, 186 S.E. 149 (1936).

Charging of several offenses in one count. — While a defendant cannot be charged with separate and distinct offenses in one count of an indictment, offenses of the same nature and differing only in degree may be joined in one count of the same indictment. Offenses not of the same nature, but blended together by concurrent acts so that the offenses constitute but one transaction, may likewise be so joined. The test is whether the acts charged in the indictment relate to but one transaction. Bennings v. State, 53 Ga. App. 218, 185 S.E. 370 (1936).

Failure to repeat contra pacem clause after each count. — If the phrase "contrary to the laws of said state, the good order, peace and dignity thereof" is a necessary part of an indictment at all, the requirement is met when the indictment consists of more than one count and, although the phrase does not appear at the conclusion of each count, it does appear at the conclusion of the indictment. Lee v. State, 81 Ga. App. 829, 60 S.E.2d 177 (1950).

It is true that every count of an indictment must be complete within itself and plainly, fully, and distinctly set out the offense charged. However, when there is an indictment in three counts, the first two counts of which do not contain the contra pacem clause, such a defect is one of technical formality only, and, is not such as to vitiate the proceedings. Shuman v. State, 82 Ga. App. 294, 60 S.E.2d 517 (1950).

Indictment was not fatally defective but was in substantial compliance with the provisions of this section, when the contra pacem clause "contrary to the laws of said state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof" follows the last and second count thereof, although immediately following the first count there was no such clause. Shuman v. State, 82 Ga. App. 297, 60 S.E.2d 519 (1950).

Requirement that district attorney elect count on which district attorney will proceed. — It is within the sound discretion of the court to require, or not to require, the solicitor general (now district attorney) to elect upon which count the solicitor general will proceed. Webb v. State, 47 Ga. App. 505, 170 S.E. 827 (1933); Ivester v. State, 75 Ga. App. 600, 44 S.E.2d 61 (1947).

Effect of reading only one count to jurors on voir dire. — When an indictment containing several counts is read to the jury in the indictment's entirety by the judge, and the solicitor general (now district attorney) states that the solicitor general is trying defendant on all counts, the fact that the solicitor read only one count to the jurors when qualifying the jurors on the jurors' voir dire does not constitute sufficient grounds on which to bar the admission of evidence on the other counts and to charge the jury to disregard all other counts. Patterson v. State, 181 Ga. 698, 184 S.E. 309 (1935).

Verdict need not specify the count upon which the verdict is founded. Dohme v. State, 68 Ga. 339 (1882).

General verdict of guilty when several counts of same felony charged. — When an indictment contains several counts, all charging the commission of the same felony, but in different ways, a general verdict of guilty is not contrary to the evidence if any one of the counts be supported by proof. Bowen v. State, 47 Ga. App. 9, 170 S.E. 104 (1933).

Conviction on some counts, acquittal on others. — When distinct offenses are charged in separate counts there may be an acquittal on some counts and a conviction or disagreement on others. O'Brien v. State, 22 Ga. App. 249, 95 S.E. 938 (1918).

Punishment when indictment charges several distinct offenses. — Unless otherwise provided by statute, a defendant convicted under an indictment charging two or more distinct offenses may be punished for both or all, if each offense requires proof of some fact or element not required to establish the other offense. Playmate Cinema, Inc. v. State, 154 Ga. App. 871, 269 S.E.2d 883 (1980).

Demurrer for improper joinder or dissimilar offenses. — When a demurrer is based upon improper joinder or dissimilar offenses, these must be pointed out. Boatwright v. State, 26 Ga. App. 67, 105 S.E. 381 (1920).

Indictment charging two or more felonies in separate counts is not subject to general demurrer. Webb v. State, 47 Ga. App. 505, 170 S.E. 827 (1933).

Sufficiency of the indictment involving two property offenses. — Trial court erred in quashing an indictment for counts of residential mortgage fraud, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-102, and counts of felony theft by deception, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-3, because: (1) certain allegations between counts in the indictment were mere surplusage and did not invalidate the indictment; (2) the indictment was not duplicitous under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-7(a)(2); (3) the indictment was sufficient pursuant to the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-54(a) to withstand general and special demurrers as each count sufficiently stated the offense; and (4) each count was sufficient to charge each of the named defendants as either the actual perpetrator or as a party to the crime pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-2-20(a) and 16-2-21. State v. Corhen, 306 Ga. App. 495, 700 S.E.2d 912 (2010).

Misjoinder of offenses is not ground for a motion in arrest of judgment. Lampkin v. State, 87 Ga. 516, 13 S.E. 523 (1891).

Pleading in the Alternative; More than One Way to Commit Offense

Indictment must not state any essential of the offense in the alternative, for pleadings which are in the alternative are defective in form, and this defect must be taken advantage of by special demurrer. Isom v. State, 71 Ga. App. 803, 32 S.E.2d 437 (1944).

Single count may charge the commission of the offense in different ways. Cody v. State, 118 Ga. 784, 45 S.E. 622 (1903), aff'd, 119 Ga. 418, 46 S.E. 647 (1904).

In an indictment charging a crime capable of being committed in more than one way, failure to charge the manner in which the crime was committed subjects the indictment to a proper special demurrer, but not to an oral motion to quash in the nature of a general demurrer when the indictment has charged the crime in the substantial language of former Code 1933, § 27-910 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-7-54). Barton v. State, 79 Ga. App. 380, 53 S.E.2d 707 (1949).

Charges must be expressed in conjunctive when statute provides means of commission. — When a defendant is charged with the violation of a penal statute containing disjunctively several ways or methods a crime may be committed, proof of any one of which is sufficient to constitute the crime, the indictment, in order to be good as against a special demurrer, must charge such ways or methods conjunctively if the indictment charges more than one of them. Jones v. State, 75 Ga. App. 610, 44 S.E.2d 174 (1947); Vann v. State, 153 Ga. App. 710, 266 S.E.2d 349 (1980).

Proof of any one charge establishes prima facie case. — On the trial of a defendant under an indictment so charging, it is not incumbent upon the state to prove all of such separate ways or methods alleged in the indictment, but the state makes a prima facie case upon its establishment by proof of any one of them. Jones v. State, 75 Ga. App. 610, 44 S.E.2d 174 (1947).

Upon which conviction may be had. — When under a penal statute an offense may be committed by the doing of any one of several forbidden acts, a conviction may be had upon an indictment which in a single count charges the accused with the commission of two or more of the acts, if there is satisfactory proof that the accused committed at least one of the acts therein specified. Mitchell v. State, 154 Ga. App. 399, 268 S.E.2d 360, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1011, 101 S. Ct. 567, 66 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1980).

Subject to special demurrer when expressed disjunctively. — Notwithstanding this section, an indictment or accusation charging a crime in the alternative when the offense may be committed in more than one way is subject to special demurrer. Jones v. State, 75 Ga. App. 610, 44 S.E.2d 174 (1947).

Variance

Basis for rule that allegations and proof must correspond. — General rule that allegations and proof must correspond is based upon the obvious requirements: (1) that the accused shall be definitely informed as to the charges against the accused, so that the accused may be enabled to present a defense and not be taken by surprise by the evidence offered at the trial; and (2) that the accused may be protected against another prosecution for the same offense. McHugh v. State, 136 Ga. App. 57, 220 S.E.2d 69 (1975); Caldwell v. State, 139 Ga. App. 279, 228 S.E.2d 219 (1976); Hunter v. State, 155 Ga. App. 561, 271 S.E.2d 694 (1980).

When variance is fatal generally. — Variance is fatal if the variance fails to definitely inform the defendant of the charges against the defendant or leaves the defendant open to a subsequent prosecution for that offense. Lewis v. State,

Variance (Cont'd)

149 Ga. App. 181, 254 S.E.2d 142 (1979).

Technical or trivial variance nonfatal. — If the variation is technical or trivial, or if the allegations and the proof substantially correspond, so that it cannot be said that the defendant was misled or prejudiced, the variance will not be fatal. Lewis v. State, 149 Ga. App. 181, 254 S.E.2d 142 (1979).

Allegation in an indictment that is wholly unnecessary to constitute the offense charged is mere surplusage. Smith v. State, 130 Ga. App. 390, 203 S.E.2d 375 (1973).

Mere surplusage will not vitiate an indictment, and need not be established in proof. The material facts which constitute the offense charged must be stated, and it must be proved in evidence, but allegations not essential to such purpose, which might be entirely omitted without affecting the charge and without detriment to the indictment, are considered as mere surplusage, and may be disregarded in evidence. Robinson v. State, 76 Ga. App. 313, 45 S.E.2d 717 (1947).

No allegation descriptive of essential elements is surplusage. — No allegation in an indictment, whether it be necessary or unnecessary, whether it be more or less particular, which is descriptive of the identity of that which is legally essential to the charge in the indictment, can ever be rejected as surplusage. Robinson v. State, 76 Ga. App. 313, 45 S.E.2d 717 (1947).

Unnecessarily minute description of a necessary fact must be proved as charged. Simmons v. State, 98 Ga. App. 159, 105 S.E.2d 356 (1958); McHugh v. State, 136 Ga. App. 57, 220 S.E.2d 69 (1975).

Proof must satisfy description. — If the indictment sets out the offense as done in a particular way, the proof must show it so, or there will be a variance. When there is a necessary allegation which cannot be rejected, yet the pleader makes it unnecessarily minute in the way of description, the proof must satisfy the description as well as the main part, since the one is essential to the identity of the other. Youngblood v. State, 40 Ga. App. 514, 150 S.E. 457 (1929).

Unnecessarily minute description of an unnecessary fact alleged in an indictment need not be proved. Simmons v. State, 98 Ga. App. 159, 105 S.E.2d 356 (1958); McHugh v. State, 136 Ga. App. 57, 220 S.E.2d 69 (1975).

Different day from that laid may generally be proved. — In proving the time of the commission of an offense the state is not, as a general rule, restricted to proof of the date alleged in the indictment, but is permitted to prove its commission on any date within the statute of limitations. Grayson v. State, 39 Ga. App. 673, 148 S.E. 309 (1929).

Though a day and year must be alleged in every indictment, time is not material, and a different day from the one laid may generally be proved, provided it is within the period prescribed by the statute of limitations. Nelson v. State, 51 Ga. App. 207, 180 S.E. 16 (1935).

Failure to allege date on which offense committed. — Indictment or accusation which fails to allege some specific date on which the offense was committed is defective as to form and, therefore, subject to a timely interposed special demurrer pointing out such defect. Lyles v. State, 215 Ga. 229, 109 S.E.2d 785 (1959).

Exact location and time of day not required. — This section did not require the exact time of day or the specific location in the county to be given. It is sufficient to state the date the alleged offense was committed and the county within the state in which the same allegedly occurred. Lyle v. State, 131 Ga. App. 8, 205 S.E.2d 126 (1974).

Time immaterial unless an essential element of the offense charged. — Unless time is an essential element of the offense charged, the time of the commission of the offense alleged in the indictment, presentment, accusation, information, or affidavit is immaterial. Proof of the commission of the offense at any time prior to the finding of the indictment or presentment, the filing of the accusation or information, or the swearing of the affidavit which made the foundation of the accusation, will sustain a conviction if the proof also establishes the commission of the offense within the statute of limitations. Brown v. State, 82 Ga. App. 673, 62

Variance as to date when alibi defense interposed. — Alleging one date in the indictment and proving another at trial when a defense of alibi as to the date alleged is relied upon violates the requirement that the accused shall be definitely informed as to the charges against the accused, so that the accused may be enabled to present a defense and not be taken by surprise by the evidence offered at the trial. Caldwell v. State, 139 Ga. App. 279, 228 S.E.2d 219 (1976).

Defendant's motion for continuance upon surprise by time variance in an alibi case. — If defendant, relying upon an alibi defense for the time alleged in the indictment, is surprised and prejudiced by a time variance, upon defendant's motion therefor the defendant will be afforded sufficient time to prepare a defense to meet the new date. Caldwell v. State, 139 Ga. App. 279, 228 S.E.2d 219 (1976).

Defendant must make a motion for continuance, postponement, or recess if the defendant is surprised by a time variance in an alibi case. Caldwell v. State, 139 Ga. App. 279, 228 S.E.2d 219 (1976).

Charge that state has burden of proving defendant's presence at time of offense. — When the date of the offense alleged in the indictment coincides with both the date proved by the state and the date proved by the defense in support of the alibi, and the trial court properly charges the jury that the state has the burden of proving the accused's presence at the scene at the time of the commission of the offense, such a charge does not constitute reversible error. The better practice would be to refrain from giving such a charge unless: (1) the defendant has not developed an alibi defense in reliance upon the date alleged in the indictment; and (2) the evidence would authorize the jury to conclude that the offense was actually committed on a date different from that alleged in the indictment. Thomas v. State, 158 Ga. App. 97, 279 S.E.2d 335 (1981).

Particular Offenses

It is not necessary to allege the location of a theft within the county. State v. Ramos, 145 Ga. App. 301, 243 S.E.2d 693 (1978).

Variance as to kind of weapon charged in the indictment. — No fatal variance between the pleading and the proof exists when one weapon is charged in the indictment and a weapon of a similar nature capable of inflicting the same character of injury is shown by the evidence, but this rule does not apply when the evidence shows the deceased met death at the hands of the defendant in a manner vastly different from that alleged in the indictment. Habersham v. State, 79 Ga. App. 244, 53 S.E.2d 578 (1949).

For sufficiency of indictment charging assault and battery, see Wood v. State, 69 Ga. App. 450, 26 S.E.2d 140 (1943).

Surplusage in indictment for assault and battery. — When the facts in an indictment set forth the offense of assault and battery, the language in part of the indictment which charged an attempt to commit an injury was mere surplusage. Wood v. State, 69 Ga. App. 450, 26 S.E.2d 140 (1943).

Sufficiency of indictment charging aggravated assault by dentist. — Count nine in an indictment charging a defendant, allegedly an oral surgeon, with aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-54(a) because the general intent required under § 16-5-21(a)(2) did not need to be expressly alleged and the use of the phrase "serious bodily harm" was substantially the same as the statutory language; additional pleading was not required simply because the case involved a doctor and a patient. State v. Austin, 297 Ga. App. 478, 677 S.E.2d 706 (2009).

Sufficiency of indictment for bribery. — Indictment for bribery which fails to set out in what respect the official behavior of the accused was to be influenced by the payment of the money alleged to have been given the accused, and what official act was to be performed or not to be performed by the accused as a result of the payment of that sum, is not fatally defective. Saunders v. State, 43 Ga. App. 59, 158 S.E. 433 (1931).

Indictment for bribery is not defective as regards statute of limitations for failure to allege to whom the offense was unknown until after a given date. Saunders v. State, 43 Ga. App. 59, 158 S.E. 433 (1931).

Sufficiency of indictment alleging RICO violations. — Indictment, which described a scheme of fraudulent borrowing from the parishioners of one defendant, a pastor, to benefit the pastor and the other defendant, a banker, sufficiently described the RICO crimes and predicate acts under O.C.G.A. § 16-14-4(a) and (c) so as to inform the defendants of the charges against the defendants and protect the defendants against another prosecution for the same offense. State v. Pittman, 302 Ga. App. 531, 690 S.E.2d 661 (2010).

Indictment insufficient in RICO action. — Indictment charging the defendants with violating the Georgia Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) Act, O.C.G.A. § 16-14-1 et seq., did not give the defendants enough information about the RICO charge to prepare their defense intelligently because the sparse allegations in the indictment, which said nothing about the nature of the connection between the enterprise and the pattern of racketeering activity, were insufficient to enable the defendants to prepare for trial; and the nature of that connection was not apparent from the identification of the enterprise, the general description of the racketeering activity in Count 1, or the subsequent counts charging more particularly the predicate acts of racketeering. Kimbrough v. State, 300 Ga. 878, 799 S.E.2d 229 (2017).

Burglary indictment must allege location and ownership of premises. — When the defendant is charged with burglary, the indictment must specify the location of the burglary, and contain some allegation regarding ownership of the burglarized premises. Morris v. State, 166 Ga. App. 137, 303 S.E.2d 492 (1983).

It is sufficient to allege legal control of the premises in an indictment for burglary rather than "ownership" as that term is used in property law. Morris v. State, 166 Ga. App. 137, 303 S.E.2d 492 (1983).

For case in which allegations and proof of burglary were fatally variant, see Hunter v. State, 155 Ga. App. 561, 271 S.E.2d 694 (1980).

Variance in time of commission of burglary and carrying pistol without license. — Offenses of burglary and of carrying a pistol without a license come within the general rule that the state is not restricted to the date alleged in the indictment in proving the case as laid, but may prove the alleged offense to have been committed at any time within the statute of limitations applicable to the case. Taylor v. State, 44 Ga. App. 821, 163 S.E. 271 (1931).

Joinder of charges of burglary and receipt of goods stolen in the burglary. — Indictment alleging a felony count of burglary and a felony count of receiving stolen goods is not subject to demurrer on the grounds of misjoinder of the offenses of burglary and receiving stolen goods knowing the goods to be the fruit of the burglary from the person committing the burglary. Ivester v. State, 75 Ga. App. 600, 44 S.E.2d 61 (1947).

Allegations in burglary indictment as to goods stolen. — If an indictment for burglary alleged, as the purpose of the breaking, the intent to commit a larceny, and if the indictment further alleged, for the purpose of illustrating the intent to steal at the time of the breaking and entering, an actual stealing after the breaking and entering, no description, value, or ownership of any goods intended to be stolen, or actually stolen after the breaking and entering, had to be alleged. Harris v. State, 46 Ga. App. 319, 167 S.E. 609 (1933).

Indictment sufficient for attempted burglary. — Trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground that the indictment was defective for failing to allege the essential element of intent to commit a theft because the indictment clearly charged that the defendant attempted to commit a burglary, not that the defendant completed the crime. Coleman v. State, 318 Ga. App. 478, 735 S.E.2d 788 (2012), recons. denied; overruled on other grounds by State v. Heath, 2020 Ga. LEXIS 362 (Ga. 2020).

Sufficiency of indictment for breaking into railroad car. — See Whitener v. State, 34 Ga. App. 697, 131 S.E. 301 (1925).

Indictment for attempted child molestation was sufficient without alleging the specific intent of child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4. Livery v. State, 233 Ga. App. 332, 503 S.E.2d 914 (1998).

Indictment for attempted child molestation alleging that the defendant took a substantial step toward commission of the crime of child molestation by: (1) engaging in sexually explicit conversations over the Internet; and (2) driving to an arranged meeting place was not fatally defective in that the indictment failed to allege the commission of a crime. Dennard v. State, 243 Ga. App. 868, 534 S.E.2d 182 (2000).

Joinder of child molestation charges. — Because sufficient similarities between two indicted charges of child molestation were presented to show a common motive, plan, scheme, or bent of mind pattern, and, the number of offenses charged or the complexity of the evidence offered did not render the factfinder unable to parse the evidence to apply the law fairly and intelligently to each charge, both offenses were properly joined for trial. Milton v. State, 280 Ga. App. 179, 633 S.E.2d 606 (2006).

Indictment for attempted statutory rape initiated via computer. — Indictment alleging that the defendant attempted to commit the crime of statutory rape by taking the substantial step of discussing engaging in sexual intercourse via computer and driving to an arranged meeting place for the purpose of engaging in sexual intercourse was not fatally defective for failure to allege the commission of a crime. Dennard v. State, 243 Ga. App. 868, 534 S.E.2d 182 (2000).

Indictment for attempt to entice child for immoral purposes. — Although an indictment for attempting to commit the offense of enticing a child for indecent purposes did not allege actual asportation, the indictment did allege that the defendant arranged to meet the victim for the purpose of committing indecent acts and, accordingly, did not fail to allege the taking of a substantial step toward the commission of the crime. Dennard v. State, 243 Ga. App. 868, 534 S.E.2d 182 (2000).

Indictment for attempted sexual exploitation. — Indictment charging the defendant with attempted sexual exploitation of children properly alleged that the defendant took a substantial step toward the commission of the crime by making arrangements to meet the victim for the purpose of violating the statute and by proceeding to the meeting place. Dennard v. State, 243 Ga. App. 868, 534 S.E.2d 182 (2000).

For sufficiency of indictment for false swearing, see Darnell v. State, 63 Ga. App. 582, 11 S.E.2d 692 (1940).

One count of indictment charging witness intimidation insufficient. — Trial court properly granted a defendant's special demurrer as to one count of a two count indictment charging the defendant with influencing a witness as the use of the term "intimidation," without specifying the way the defendant allegedly did so, was generic and did not adequately inform the defendant of the facts constituting the offense. State v. Delaby, 298 Ga. App. 723, 681 S.E.2d 645 (2009).

For sufficiency of indictment for murder, see Green v. State, 172 Ga. 635, 158 S.E. 285 (1931); Lyles v. State, 215 Ga. 229, 109 S.E.2d 785 (1959); Lackey v. State, 246 Ga. 331, 271 S.E.2d 478 (1980).

Fatal variance in murder indictment, etc. see Habersham v. State, 79 Ga. App. 244, 53 S.E.2d 578 (1949).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to challenge the sufficiency of the indictment charging malice murder and felony murder as unconstitutionally vague because the defendant's counsel reviewed the indictment and believed that the indictment was not vague, overbroad, or subject to dismissal; each of the murder counts tracked the language of the applicable statute and alleged the essential elements of the offense charged; and the indictment provided the date and county of the offense and the identity of the victim, and, in terms clear enough to be easily understood by the jury and by the accused, charged the defendant with acting in concert with the co-defendant to kill the victim by beating and stabbing the victim to death. Smith v. State, 303 Ga. 643, 814 S.E.2d 411 (2018).

Demurrer to indictment containing alternative charges of assault with intent to murder. — See Isom v. State, 71 Ga. App. 803, 32 S.E.2d 437 (1944).

Demurrer to indictment for aggravated assault and felony murder based on aggravated assault. — There was no basis to grant the defendant a special demurrer on the counts for aggravated assault and felony murder based on assault as the indictment informed the defendant that the state intended to prove that on a day when the defendant admitted the victim was in the defendant's custody, the defendant used an object that was likely to result in serious bodily injury to fatally injure the victim by causing damage to the victim's brain, which was sufficient notice for the defendant to prepare a defense. State v. Wyatt, 295 Ga. 257, 759 S.E.2d 500 (2014).

In larceny (now theft) cases, ownership of the property should be alleged, and may not be inferred. Scott v. State, 53 Ga. App. 61, 185 S.E. 131 (1936), aff'd, 184 Ga. 164, 190 S.E. 582 (1937).

Description of stolen property in indictment for larceny (now theft). — In indictment for larceny, description of stolen property should be set forth such as will affirmatively show the accused to be guilty, will reasonably inform the accused of transaction charged, and will put the accused in a position to make the needful preparations for the accused's defense. The marks, quality, or kind of property must be incorporated in the description, or the transaction in some way individualized. Pharr v. State, 44 Ga. App. 363, 161 S.E. 643 (1931).

For sufficiency of indictment charging larceny (now theft), see Ellis v. State, 67 Ga. App. 821, 21 S.E.2d 316 (1942); Kyler v. State, 94 Ga. App. 321, 94 S.E.2d 429 (1956).

Sufficiency of indictment charging theft by deception. — See Johnson v. State, 233 Ga. App. 450, 504 S.E.2d 290 (1998).

Indictment for theft by taking sufficient. — Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's general and special demurrers to an indictment charging the defendant with theft by taking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-2 because the indictment tracked the language of theft by taking and sufficiently placed the defendant on notice of the charges against the defendant, and the indictment also provided some factual detail to support the crimes alleged; in each count of theft by taking, the indictment alleged that the defendant took U.S. currency in excess of $500 from a grocery store owner with the intention of depriving the owner of those funds on a specific date, and if the defendant admitted the conduct alleged in the indictment, the defendant would not be innocent of the crime. Falagian v. State, 300 Ga. App. 187, 684 S.E.2d 340 (2009), overruled on other grounds, McNair v. State, 293 Ga. 282 (2013).

Accusation that alleged that the defendant took "drugs the property of Dr. Bob Lanier having a value of less than $500 with the intention of depriving said owner of said property" was sufficient to allege theft by taking under O.C.G.A. § 16-8-2. State v. Meeks, 309 Ga. App. 855, 711 S.E.2d 403 (2011).

For sufficiency of indictment for robbery, see Lacey v. State, 44 Ga. App. 791, 163 S.E. 292 (1931).

Ownership of property in indictment for robbery. — In an indictment for robbery, the ownership of the personal property stolen may be laid in the person having actual lawful possession of such property, although the person may be holding the property merely as the agent or bailee of another. It is not necessary to set forth in the indictment the fact that the person in whom the ownership is laid is holding the property merely as the agent or bailee of the real owner. Jones v. State, 42 Ga. App. 290, 155 S.E. 797 (1931); Estes v. State, 44 Ga. App. 239, 161 S.E. 165 (1931).

"Fraudulently," when used in an indictment for robbery, implies an intent to steal. Lacey v. State, 44 Ga. App. 791, 163 S.E. 292 (1931).

When the gist of the offense is the fraudulent conversion of money, a special demurrer to the indictment on the grounds that the terms of the contract on account of which the payment is alleged to have been made are not set forth, and also the amount of money to be received under the contract is not set forth, is without merit. Ramer v. State, 76 Ga. App. 678, 47 S.E.2d 174 (1948).

Indictments under § 16-8-3. — While, in an indictment under former Code 1933, § 26-1803 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-8-3), it was necessary to allege the ownership of the moneys obtained, yet if, from the allegations of the indictment as a whole, it was clearly inferable to whom the money belonged, the absence of an express allegation to that effect was no reason for quashing the indictment. Scott v. State, 53 Ga. App. 61, 185 S.E. 131 (1936), aff'd, 184 Ga. 164, 190 S.E. 582 (1937).

Indictment for cheating and swindling. — Essential elements of an indictment for the offense of cheating and swindling by false representations are that the representations were made; that the representations were knowingly and designedly false; that the representations were made with the intent to deceive and defraud; that the representations did deceive and defraud; that the representations related to an existing fact or past event; that the party to whom the false statements were made, relying upon their truth, was thereby induced to part with that person's property. Fischer v. State, 46 Ga. App. 207, 167 S.E. 200 (1933).

If an indictment for cheating and swindling and not a presentment is being considered, it is not necessary that the very words of the pretense be set out. It is sufficient to state the effect of the pretense correctly. Hence, the indictment need not allege whether the pretense was spoken or written. Turnipseed v. State, 53 Ga. App. 194, 185 S.E. 403 (1936).

In a case of cheating and swindling it is essential to the legality of a conviction that the person alleged to have been defrauded sustained some pecuniary loss. Turnipseed v. State, 53 Ga. App. 194, 185 S.E. 403 (1936).

If the allegation is that a corporation was defrauded, or attempted to be defrauded, it is sufficient to set out the name of such corporation, without designating any particular individual, officer, or agent of such corporation to whom the representations or false pretenses were made. Turnipseed v. State, 53 Ga. App. 194, 185 S.E. 403 (1936).

Indictment for insurance fraud. — There was not a fatal variance in the evidence because the evidence adduced at trial was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction for insurance fraud and was consistent with the allegations in the indictment as the evidence showed that the defendant, an attorney, assisted the client in making an affirmative fraudulent representation when the client signed the sworn proof of loss statement claiming that the client suffered a loss, when in fact the client had not. Sallee v. State, 329 Ga. App. 612, 765 S.E.2d 758 (2014), cert. denied, 136 S. Ct. 199, 193 L. Ed. 2d 128 (U.S. 2015).

Sufficiency of indictment charging conspiracy to defraud county. — See Clinkscales v. State, 102 Ga. App. 670, 117 S.E.2d 229 (1960).

Sufficiency and duplicity of indictment for conspiracy to defraud state. — See Rollins v. State, 215 Ga. 437, 111 S.E.2d 63 (1959).

Sufficiency of indictment for criminal racketeering. — Indictment for criminal racketeering alleged the offense with sufficient specificity as it set forth specific timber transactions involving specific persons, places, acreage, deals, and owners. Grant v. State, 227 Ga. App. 88, 488 S.E.2d 79 (1997); Adams v. State, 231 Ga. App. 279, 499 S.E.2d 105 (1998).

Variance in dates in indictment under section regarding hindrance of levy on encumbered property. — See Nelson v. State, 51 Ga. App. 207, 180 S.E. 16 (1935) (see O.C.G.A. § 44-14-8).

Sufficiency of indictment for violation of county zoning act. — See Flynn v. State, 88 Ga. App. 52, 76 S.E.2d 38 (1953).

Sufficiency of indictment under section for charging excessive interest. — See Crowe v. State, 44 Ga. App. 719, 162 S.E. 849 (1931), overruled on other grounds, Fleet Fin., Inc. v. Jones, 263 Ga. 228, 430 S.E.2d 352 (1993) (see O.C.G.A. § 7-4-18).

Sufficiency of indictment under section relating to driving while intoxicated. — See Hooks v. State, 97 Ga. App. 897, 104 S.E.2d 623 (1958) (see O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391).

Sufficiency of indictment charging vehicle homicide. — See State v. Black, 149 Ga. App. 389, 254 S.E.2d 506 (1979).

Indictment for serious injury by vehicle. — General demurrer to charges of serious injury by vehicle against the defendant was properly denied because whether broken bones constituted serious disfigurement under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-394 depended on the facts of the case; further, the indictment tracked the language of the statute and sufficiently advised defendant of the charges against him. Harris v. State, 272 Ga. App. 366, 612 S.E.2d 557 (2005).

Sufficiency of allegations of time of child molestation. — Allegations in the indictment for child molestation that the defendant molested one child from January 1, 1995, to June 5, 1995, and another child from January 1, 1991, until June 5, 1995, sufficiently informed the defendant of the time of the charges against the defendant. Gentry v. State, 235 Ga. App. 328, 508 S.E.2d 671 (1998).

Accusation for abandonment of dependent child, pursuant to former Code 1933, § 74-9902 (see O.C.G.A. § 19-10-1), which failed to allege the abandonment of a "minor" child was sufficient. Heard v. State, 79 Ga. App. 601, 54 S.E.2d 495 (1949).

Failure to name person solicited in indictment for soliciting for prostitution. — Objection raised by demurrer to an accusation returned for soliciting for purposes of prostitution, that the accusation does not name the person allegedly solicited and did not put the defendant on notice of any particular charge sufficiently to enable the defendant to prepare a defense, is insufficient. Bennefield v. State, 86 Ga. App. 285, 71 S.E.2d 760 (1952).

Surplusage in indictment for prostitution under former Code 1933, § 26-2012 (see O.C.G.A. § 16-6-9). — See Anderson v. State, 149 Ga. App. 460, 254 S.E.2d 459 (1979); Hicks v. State, 149 Ga. App. 459, 254 S.E.2d 461 (1979).

Sufficiency of indictment charging unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors. — See Capitol Distrib. Co. v. State, 83 Ga. App. 303, 63 S.E.2d 451 (1951).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment accusing the defendant of criminal attempt to traffic in cocaine in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-4-1 and 16-13-31(a)(1); purity did not have to be alleged in an attempt case, particularly since there was no cocaine involved in the instant case, the indictment satisfied O.C.G.A. § 17-7-54(a) by tracking the applicable statutes in a manner that was easily understood and by apprising the defendant of both the crime and the manner in which the crime was alleged to have been committed, and if the defendant admitted the allegations precisely as set forth in the indictment, the defendant would have been guilty of criminal attempt to traffic in cocaine. Davis v. State, 281 Ga. App. 855, 637 S.E.2d 431 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0408, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 151 (Ga. 2007).

ARTICLE 4

ACCUSATIONS

Offense must be shown to have been committed before accusation sued out. — It is essential, to sustain a conviction of a criminal offense, that it be distinctly shown that the alleged offense was committed prior to the suing out of the accusation. Rivers v. State, 55 Ga. App. 290, 189 S.E. 923 (1937).

Burden of proving timing of accusation on state. — Burden is as much upon the state to prove affirmatively that the accusation was subsequent in time to the commission of the alleged offense, as it is to show that the offense did not so far antedate the accusation as to be barred by the statute of limitations, the failure to prove either being fatal to the state's cause. Rivers v. State, 55 Ga. App. 290, 189 S.E. 923 (1937).

17-7-70. Trial upon accusations in felony cases; trial upon accusations of felony and misdemeanor cases in which guilty plea entered and indictment waived.

(a) In all felony cases, other than cases involving capital felonies, in which defendants have been bound over to the superior court, are confined in jail or released on bond pending a commitment hearing, or are in jail having waived a commitment hearing, the district attorney shall have authority to prefer accusations, and such defendants shall be tried on such accusations, provided that defendants going to trial under such accusations shall, in writing, waive indictment by a grand jury.

(b) Judges of the superior court may open their courts at any time without the presence of either a grand jury or a trial jury to receive and act upon pleas of guilty in misdemeanor cases and in felony cases, except those punishable by death or life imprisonment, when the judge and the defendant consent thereto. The judge may try the issues in such cases without a jury upon an accusation filed by the district attorney where the defendant has waived indictment and consented thereto in writing and counsel is present in court representing the defendant either by virtue of his employment or by appointment by the court.

U.S. Code. — Indictment and information, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 7.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Accusation equivalent to old common-law information. — Accusation provided for in this section as the basis for the trial of misdemeanor cases in the superior courts was comparable to, or the equivalent of, the old common-law information. Brown v. State, 82 Ga. App. 673, 62 S.E.2d 732 (1950).

Scope of jurisdiction. — Court has jurisdiction to try, or accept a plea of guilty, of one charged with a felony before the grand jury has returned an indictment in felony cases, but does not have such jurisdiction as to those felonies punishable by death or life imprisonment. Webb v. Henlery, 209 Ga. 447, 74 S.E.2d 7 (1953), overruled on other grounds, Garmon v. Johnson, 243 Ga. 855, 257 S.E.2d 276 (1979).

Since the accusation to which the defendant pled guilty did not charge the defendant with a felony punishable by death, the trial court had jurisdiction to take the plea following the defendant's waiver of the indictment, and to sentence the defendant thereon, and the trial court did not err when the court denied the defendant's motion to void the conviction. Orr v. State, 276 Ga. 91, 575 S.E.2d 444 (2003).

Applicability to accusations in city courts. — Former Code 1933, §§ 27-701.1, 27-703, and 27-704 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-51, 17-7-54 and 17-7-70) have no applicability to accusations in city courts when, under special legislation establishing the various city courts, it was provided that the accusation must be founded upon the affidavit of the prosecutor, and the affidavit was made a substitute for the formal finding of the grand jury as to the misdemeanors triable in the city courts in question. The affidavit which was the basis for the issuance of a warrant to arrest is not to be confused with the affidavit which formed the basis of the accusation in many of the city courts. Brown v. State, 82 Ga. App. 673, 62 S.E.2d 732 (1950).

Defendant does not choose between indictment or accusation. — O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70(a) did not give the right to choose whether to be tried by indictment or accusation; the district attorney had the authority to prefer accusations. Webb v. State, 278 Ga. App. 9, 627 S.E.2d 925 (2006).

Offense must have been committed before making of affidavit. — If trial is had upon accusation founded on affidavit there can be no conviction, unless it appears that the offense was committed before the making of the affidavit charging its commission. Dixon v. State, 155 Ga. App. 17, 270 S.E.2d 192 (1980).

Affidavit must be sworn to and signed. — Affidavit upon which an accusation is based is void, unless the purported affidavit was in fact sworn to and the jurat signed at the time the affidavit was made. Dixon v. State, 155 Ga. App. 17, 270 S.E.2d 192 (1980).

Proper administration of oath must appear of record. — In a criminal case the accusation is void, unless the oath is properly administered and this appears from the record, and the whole proceeding is a nullity. Dixon v. State, 155 Ga. App. 17, 270 S.E.2d 192 (1980).

Whole trial a nullity if affidavit void. — Affidavit is essential, and if the instrument treated by the court and the parties as an affidavit is void, there is no foundation for the proceeding. The whole trial is a nullity. Bickley v. State, 150 Ga. App. 669, 258 S.E.2d 306 (1979).

Accusation cannot be broader than the affidavit, but, as the greater includes the lesser, if the affidavit is general, the accusation can be specific. McCann v. State, 158 Ga. App. 202, 279 S.E.2d 499 (1981).

Accusations are amendable to the time that issue is joined. Guess v. State, 155 Ga. App. 14, 270 S.E.2d 255 (1980).

That an indictment of a defendant was later necessary under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70(a), O.C.G.A. § 40-13-3 did not destroy the validity of a formerly issued uniform traffic citation; the citation for felony vehicular homicide was not void, but expired and was superseded. State v. Perkins, 276 Ga. 621, 580 S.E.2d 523 (2003).

Purpose for allowing waiver. — Purpose of this section, permitting persons charged with felony to waive indictment by grand jury, was to give a person who had been charged with a felony the right, with the concurrence of the prosecuting officer and the judge, to have the person's case disposed of without having to await the action of the grand jury, but that section expressly withholds such right when one is charged with a crime punishable by death or life imprisonment. Webb v. Henlery, 209 Ga. 447, 74 S.E.2d 7 (1953), overruled on other grounds, Garmon v. Johnson, 243 Ga. 855, 257 S.E.2d 276 (1979).

Grand jury waived. — Defendant charged with the sale of cocaine, which is not a felony punishable by death, could waive indictment by the grand jury and enter a guilty plea on the accusation. Smith v. Wilson, 268 Ga. 38, 485 S.E.2d 197 (1997).

Waiver and consent in writing is jurisdictional requirement. — Waiver and consent in writing by the accused being a necessary prerequisite to jurisdiction to try a person charged with a felony other than a capital felony upon an accusation, the sentences imposed based upon trials had upon accusations, without any waiver and consent in writing by the accused, are void, since the judgment of the court without jurisdiction is void. Roberson v. Balkcom, 212 Ga. 603, 94 S.E.2d 720 (1956).

Charge of felony obstruction of an officer by accusation instead of by grand jury indictment was not authorized because of the state's failure to obtain the defendant's waiver of the indictment in writing as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70. Brackins v. State, 249 Ga. App. 788, 549 S.E.2d 775 (2001).

Defendant was initially charged by accusation with terroristic threats and aggravated stalking, which were not properly prosecuted without an indictment or a written waiver thereof pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-70.1 and 17-7-70(a), the dismissal of the accusation after the jury was sworn and the indictment of the same charges was proper and there was no former jeopardy bar under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-8(d)(1), as the former prosecution under the indictment was void and of no effect. Armstrong v. State, 281 Ga. App. 297, 635 S.E.2d 880 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was void for lack of jurisdiction and had to be reversed because the evidence showed that the defendant verbally waived the defendant's right to a grand jury indictment at the start of trial and a written waiver was required by O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70(a). Martinez v. State, 322 Ga. App. 63, 743 S.E.2d 621 (2013).

Waiver may be signed by attorney for accused. — This section, insofar as it provides for waiver of indictment by a person charged with a crime, was satisfied by a waiver in writing signed by the attorney for the accused. Cook v. Wier, 185 Ga. 418, 195 S.E. 740 (1938).

Guilty plea waives written waiver requirement. — In the case of a plea of guilty, such plea would waive any defense known and unknown, and this would include any deficiency in the written waiver required by this section. Balkcom v. McDaniel, 234 Ga. 470, 216 S.E.2d 328 (1975).

Contention that a specific written waiver of indictment was required by this section of one pleading guilty to a noncapital felony was without basis in the text of that section. Walker v. Hopper, 234 Ga. 123, 214 S.E.2d 553 (1975); Balkcom v. McDaniel, 234 Ga. 470, 216 S.E.2d 328 (1975).

Even though the defendant did not waive the right to be indicted on the charged offenses of aggravated assault and false imprisonment in writing, such was not required for a trial court to act upon the defendant's guilty plea because neither of the felonies charged carried a penalty of life imprisonment or death and the defendant consented to the trial judge's acting on the defendant's plea. Sanchez v. State, 259 Ga. App. 400, 577 S.E.2d 80 (2003).

Assent of accused not on record. — When one count of the accusation filed by the district attorney recited that it was charged under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30, which is a felony which may not be brought by accusation pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70 without the assent of the accused, not on record in the case, nor was it one of those felonies listed in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70.1 which, under circumstances not present in the case, may be pursued by accusation, the count was considered by the court to be brought under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-2(b), misdemeanor possession of less than an ounce of marijuana. Chadwick v. State, 236 Ga. App. 199, 511 S.E.2d 286 (1999).

This section related to guilty pleas upon accusations as well as after indictment. Garmon v. Johnson, 243 Ga. 855, 257 S.E.2d 276 (1979).

Absent waiver, only grand jury may subject defendant to felony trial. — Grand jury is the only body authorized to subject the defendant to trial for a felony, unless the defendant waives indictment. Blake v. State, 109 Ga. App. 636, 137 S.E.2d 49, cert. denied, 379 U.S. 924, 85 S. Ct. 281, 13 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1964).

Indictment required for capital felony. — Because the defendant was charged on an accusation for malice murder without an indictment, the trial court had no jurisdiction to accept the defendant's plea and sentence the defendant. Weatherbed v. State, 271 Ga. 736, 524 S.E.2d 452 (1999).

Indictment was required to confer subject matter jurisdiction on a trial court in a capital case, and a malice murder conviction was reversed after the trial proceeded on an accusation and not an indictment, despite the fact that the defendant had stipulated to proceeding under an accusation. Defendant's aggravated assault and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime convictions were not capital felonies, and could, therefore, properly proceed under an accusation with the defendant's consent. Mayo v. State, 277 Ga. 645, 594 S.E.2d 333 (2004).

No distinction between "capital felonies" and felonies "punishable by death or life imprisonment." — For the purposes of superior court jurisdiction under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70, there is no distinction between "capital felonies" and felonies "punishable by death or life imprisonment"; each has the same meaning. Weatherbed v. State, 271 Ga. 736, 524 S.E.2d 452 (1999).

Failure to seek death penalty. — Fact that the state did not seek the death penalty against the defendant did not take the case outside the ambit of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70. Weatherbed v. State, 271 Ga. 736, 524 S.E.2d 452 (1999).

Variance between caption and contents of Ga. L. 1972, p. 623. — Fact that the caption contained in Ga. L. 1972, p. 623 "that indictment by a grand jury shall not be required in certain cases" did not contain the word "felony" does not effect a fatal variance between the caption and the body of the Act, pursuant to Ga. Const. 1983, Art. III, Sec. V, Para. III. Keener v. MacDougall, 235 Ga. 288, 219 S.E.2d 377 (1975).

Good faith is presumed when state law obligates official to perform a ministerial duty, absent express evidence on the record of bad motive. Howell v. Tanner, 650 F.2d 610 (5th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 918, 102 S. Ct. 1775, 72 L. Ed. 2d 178, 456 U.S. 919, 102 S. Ct. 1777, 72 L. Ed. 2d 180 (1982).

Sheriff liability for false arrest where acting under instructions from district attorney. — Sheriff could not be liable under civil rights statute, 42 U.S.C. § 1983, for false arrest and malicious prosecution because of the sheriff's action in swearing out the accusations for the trespass and firearms offenses for which the plaintiff had been arrested, since the sheriff was required by state law to issue accusations upon receipt of instructions from the district attorney. Howell v. Tanner, 650 F.2d 610 (5th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 918, 102 S. Ct. 1775, 72 L. Ed. 2d 178, 456 U.S. 919, 102 S. Ct. 1777, 72 L. Ed. 2d 180 (1982).

Motion for acquittal properly denied. — After weighing the factors considered in determining whether the defendant's right to a speedy trial was violated, the appeals court upheld the denial of the defendant's plea in bar and demand for an acquittal as the defendant failed to show that any prejudice resulted from the delay in bringing the case to trial. Lackey v. State, 283 Ga. App. 139, 640 S.E.2d 717 (2006).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion for discharge and acquittal on statutory speedy trial grounds pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-170(a) because the defendant's speedy trial demand was premature and a nullity since the "complaint" was filed after the defendant's arrest, was not an accusation pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-70 and 17-7-70.1, and the prosecution did not proceed on the "complaint." Campbell v. State, 294 Ga. App. 166, 669 S.E.2d 190 (2008).

Only indictments are feasible for corporations. — Only feasible method for charging corporations with crimes is through the return of an indictment by a grand jury. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 70-155.

Proceedings against persons imprisoned on other charges. — Although the detainer procedure may be invoked by an accusation without a waiver of indictment by the grand jury, this procedure will not authorize the Board of Offender Rehabilitation to hold a prisoner after the prisoner's present sentence has expired. The district attorney can arrest the prisoner upon the prisoner's release and proceed against the prisoner as the prisoner would proceed against any other criminal defendant. 1969 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 69-410.

Discretion of district attorney. — Decision as to whether to present an indictment to the grand jury lies within the discretion of the district attorney. There is misconduct only if the decision concerning prosecution is based upon some constitutionally impermissible reason such as race, religion, or the exercise of constitutional rights. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-25.

Motion to nolle prosequi. — Once an indictment or accusation has been filed, a district attorney's motion to nolle prosequi or dead docket requires consent of the court. If the trial court refuses to grant the district attorney's motion to nolle prosequi or dead docket the case, the district attorney is not thereby disqualified. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-25.

Effect of pretrial diversion program. — If an indictment or accusation has been filed against a person who successfully completes a pretrial diversion program, consent of the court is required before the criminal charge can be dismissed. If the person completes the pretrial diversion program prior to the filing of an indictment or accusation, consent of the court is not required. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-25.

(a)(1) In felony cases involving violations of the following:

(A) Code Sections 16-8-2, 16-8-14, 16-8-18, 16-9-1, 16-9-20, 16-9-31, 16-9-33, 16-9-37, 16-10-52, and 40-5-58;

(D) Article 3 of Chapter 10 of Title 16, relating to escape and other offenses related to confinement; or

(E) Code Section 16-11-131, relating to possession of a firearm by a convicted felon or first offender probationer, in which defendants have either been bound over to the superior court based on a finding of probable cause pursuant to a commitment hearing under Article 2 of this chapter or have expressly or by operation of law waived a commitment hearing, the district attorney shall have authority to prefer accusations, and the defendants shall be tried on such accusations according to the same rules of substantive and procedural laws relating to defendants who have been indicted by a grand jury.

(2) All laws relating to rights and responsibilities attendant to indicted cases shall be applicable to cases brought by accusations signed by the district attorney.

(3) The accusation need not be supported by an affidavit except in those cases in which the defendant has not been previously arrested in conjunction with the transaction charged in the accusation.

(a.1) The provisions of subsection (a) of this Code section shall apply to violations of Code Section 16-13-30 whenever there has been a finding of probable cause pursuant to a commitment hearing under Article 2 of this chapter or the accused has waived either expressly or by operation of law the right to this hearing.

(b) Judges of the superior court may open their courts at any time without the presence of either a grand jury or a trial jury to receive and act upon pleas of guilty or nolo contendere in felony and misdemeanor cases. The judge of the superior court may try the issues in such cases without a jury upon an indictment or upon an accusation filed by the district attorney where the defendant has waived trial by jury.

(c) An accusation substantially complying with the form provided in subsections (d) and (e) of Code Section 17-7-71 shall in all cases be sufficient.

(d) The district attorney may not bring an accusation pursuant to this Code section in those cases where the grand jury has heard evidence or conducted an investigation or in which a no bill has been returned.

(e) Notwithstanding subsections (a) through (d) of this Code section, nothing in this Code section shall affect the rights of public officials to appear before a grand jury as provided in Code Sections 45-11-4 and 45-15-11 or peace officers to appear before a grand jury as provided in Code Section 17-7-52.

shall be governed by the statute in effect at the time of such offense and shall be considered a prior conviction for the purpose of imposing a sentence that provides for a different penalty for a subsequent conviction for the same type of offense, of whatever degree or level, pursuant to this Act."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Constitutionality. — Substitution of accusation for indictment for the specific felonies enumerated in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70.1 does not violate due process since statutory procedures exist to safeguard against criminal prosecution without probable cause, and to further protect all defendants equally, whether indicted or formally accused. Lamberson v. State, 265 Ga. 764, 462 S.E.2d 706 (1995).

O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70.1 was not an ex post facto law with respect to defendant charged with forgery when the defendant entered a plea of not guilty on the accusation without having first entered a written objection to the proceeding and when the defendant was arrested after the effective date of the section. Crowder v. State, 218 Ga. App. 630, 462 S.E.2d 754 (1995).

Trial on accusation preferred by district attorney. — Felony charge of driving after having been declared a habitual violator may be tried on an accusation preferred by a district attorney rather than on an indictment returned by a grand jury. State v. Gilstrap, 230 Ga. App. 281, 495 S.E.2d 885 (1998).

Defendant charged with possession of cocaine with intent to distribute could be tried by accusation because the defendant waived the right to a grand jury indictment when the defendant posted bond following arrest. McNair v. State, 240 Ga. App. 324, 523 S.E.2d 392 (1999).

Because the defendant waived the right to a commitment hearing when the defendant posted bond, the state was authorized to proceed to trial on the accusation charging theft by taking despite the defendant's objection. Pruitt v. State, 245 Ga. App. 801, 538 S.E.2d 874 (2000).

Accusation not same as indictment. — After the trial court quashed an indictment and a later accusation, both of which charged the defendant with misdemeanors, due to the state's failure to comply with O.C.G.A. § 17-7-52, O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70.1 did not make a quashed accusation similar or equivalent to an indictment for the purposes of the prosecutory bar under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1. Additionally, § 17-7-70.1 relates primarily to felonies charged by accusation, and the district attorney could not bring the accusation, as was required for § 17-7-70.1, due to the fact that the grand jury heard evidence in the case. State v. Allen, 262 Ga. App. 724, 586 S.E.2d 378 (2003).

Accusation was a proper charging document in a theft by receiving case, and the defendant's appellate argument that a trial court should have instructed the jury that the indictment was not evidence proving guilt failed because there was no indictment in the case, only an accusation. Brown v. State, 265 Ga. App. 613, 594 S.E.2d 770 (2004).

Waiver of indictment. — Trial court had jurisdiction to try the defendant for the offense of theft by receiving stolen property as the criminal code permitted that offense to be tried upon accusation even when the defendant had not waived the indictment. Gerrard v. State, 252 Ga. App. 767, 556 S.E.2d 131 (2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 1077, 122 S. Ct. 1960, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1021 (2002).

Defendant waived the right to a commitment hearing when defendant posted bond; thus, the state was authorized to try the charge of forgery in the first degree by accusation. Watson v. State, 264 Ga. App. 41, 589 S.E.2d 867 (2003).

Indictment required. — Defendant was initially charged by accusation with terroristic threats and aggravated stalking, which were not properly prosecuted without an indictment or a written waiver thereof pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-70.1 and 17-7-70(a), the dismissal of the accusation after the jury was sworn and the indictment of the same charges was proper and there was no former jeopardy bar under O.C.G.A. § 16-1-8(d)(1), as the former prosecution under the indictment was void and of no effect. Armstrong v. State, 281 Ga. App. 297, 635 S.E.2d 880 (2006).

Cocaine possession. — State was authorized to try a cocaine possession charge by accusation when there was a commitment hearing and a finding of probable cause. Brackins v. State, 249 Ga. App. 788, 549 S.E.2d 775 (2001).

Felony obstruction of officer. — Charge of felony obstruction of an officer by accusation instead of by grand jury indictment was not authorized because of the state's failure to obtain the defendant's waiver of an indictment in writing as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70. Brackins v. State, 249 Ga. App. 788, 549 S.E.2d 775 (2001).

Sentence not impacted by use or accusation rather than indictment. — When the defendant was charged and convicted of felony theft by shoplifting, the trial court was not required to sentence the defendant as a misdemeanant simply because the state utilized an accusation rather than an indictment. Hood v. State, 223 Ga. App. 573, 479 S.E.2d 400 (1996).

When felony not one listed in statute. — When one count of the accusation filed by the district attorney recited that it was charged under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30, which is a felony which may not be brought by accusation pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70 without the assent of the accused, not on record in the case, nor was it one of those felonies listed in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-70.1 which, under circumstances not present in the case, may be pursued by accusation, the count was considered by the court to be brought under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-2(b), misdemeanor possession of less than an ounce of marijuana. Chadwick v. State, 236 Ga. App. 199, 511 S.E.2d 286 (1999).

Pretrial amendment of accusation did not start new prosecution. — Pretrial amendment of accusation did not start a new prosecution as the previous arraignment of the defendant was sufficient and jeopardy attached before the nolle prosequi was entered over the defendant's objection; consequently, a later prosecution of the offenses charged in the accusation was barred by former jeopardy. Smith v. State, 279 Ga. 396, 614 S.E.2d 79 (2005).

No accusation found. — Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion for discharge and acquittal on statutory speedy trial grounds pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-170(a) because the defendant's speedy trial demand was premature and a nullity since the "complaint" was filed after the defendant's arrest, was not an accusation pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-70 and 17-7-70.1, and the prosecution did not proceed on the "complaint." Campbell v. State, 294 Ga. App. 166, 669 S.E.2d 190 (2008).

17-7-71. Trials of misdemeanors; trial of misdemeanor motor vehicle violations; form and contents of accusations; amendment of accusation; service of amendment upon defendant; continuances.

(a) In all misdemeanor cases, the defendant may be tried upon an accusation framed and signed by the prosecuting attorney of the court. The accusation need not be supported by an affidavit except in those cases where the defendant has not been previously arrested in conjunction with the transaction charged in the accusation and where the accusation is to be used as the basis for the issuance of a warrant for the arrest of the defendant.

(b)(1) In all misdemeanor cases arising out of violations of the laws of this state, relating to (A) the operation and licensing of motor vehicles and operators; (B) the width, height, and length of vehicles and loads; (C) motor common carriers and motor contract carriers; or (D) road taxes on motor carriers as provided in Article 2 of Chapter 9 of Title 48, the defendant may be tried upon the uniform traffic citation and complaint provided for in Article 1 of Chapter 13 of Title 40.

(2) In all misdemeanor cases arising out of violations of the laws of this state relating to game, fish, or boating, the defendant may be tried upon the summons provided for in Code Section 27-1-35.

(c) Every accusation which states the offense in the terms and language of the law or so plainly that the nature of the offense charged may be easily understood by the jury shall be deemed sufficiently technical and correct.

(d) An accusation substantially complying with the following form shall in all cases be sufficient:

IN THE _____ COURT OF _____ COUNTY
STATE OF GEORGIA

On behalf of the people of the State of Georgia, the undersigned, as prosecuting attorney for the county and state aforesaid, does hereby charge and accuse (name of accused) with the offense of _____; for that the said (name of accused) (state with sufficient certainty the offense and the time and place it occurred) contrary to the laws of this state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof.

/s/_____
(District attorney)
(Solicitor-general)

(e) If there should be more than one count, each additional count shall state:

The undersigned, as prosecuting attorney, does further charge and accuse the said (name of accused) with the offense of _____ (the offense as before); for that the said (name of accused) (state with sufficient certainty the offense and the time and place it occurred), contrary to the laws of this state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof.

(f) Prior to trial, the prosecuting attorney may amend the accusation, summons, or any citation to allege or to change the allegations regarding any offense arising out of the same conduct of the defendant which gave rise to any offense alleged or attempted to be alleged in the original accusation, summons, or citation. A copy of any such amendment shall be served upon the defendant or his or her counsel and the original filed with the clerk of the court. On motion, the court shall grant the defendant a continuance which is reasonably necessitated by an amendment. If any additional charges against the defendant are made the judge shall advise the defendant that he or she has an automatic right to a continuance.

Editor's notes. — Ga. L. 1996, p. 748, § 27, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, an Act approved February 11, 1854 (Ga. L. 1854, p. 281), which abolished the office of solicitor of the City Court of Savannah, now the State Court of Chatham County, and transferred responsibility for the prosecution of criminal cases in said court to the solicitor general (now the district attorney) for the Eastern Judicial Circuit is confirmed. It shall be the duty of said district attorney to prosecute all criminal actions in said state court until otherwise specifically provided by law."

Ga. L. 1996, p. 748, § 28, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of this Act shall not affect the powers, duties, or responsibilities of the district attorney as successor to the office of solicitor general under the constitution, statutes, and common law of this state as provided by Code Section 15-18-1."

Ga. L. 1996, p. 748, § 29, not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "Except as otherwise authorized in this Act, on and after July 1, 1996, any reference in general law or in any local Act to the solicitor of a state court shall mean and shall be deemed to mean the solicitor-general of such state court."

Ga. L. 1996, p. 748, § 30(b), not codified by the General Assembly, provides: "The provisions of paragraph (3) of Code Section 15-18-62, relating to the qualifications for the office of solicitor-general of a state court, shall apply to any person elected or appointed to such office after July 1, 1996. Any person holding such office on July 1, 1996, may continue to hold such office for the remainder of the term to which such person was elected or appointed notwithstanding the fact that such person has not been a member of the State Bar of Georgia for three years if such person is otherwise qualified to hold the office of solicitor-general."

General Consideration

Affidavit not required when defendant previously arrested. — Accusation need not be supported by an affidavit when the defendant has been previously arrested in conjunction with the transaction charged in the accusation. Manning v. State, 175 Ga. App. 738, 334 S.E.2d 338 (1985); Military Circle Pet Ctr. No. 94, Inc. v. State, 181 Ga. App. 657, 353 S.E.2d 555, rev'd on other grounds, 257 Ga. 388, 360 S.E.2d 248, vacated in part on other grounds, 184 Ga. App. 805, 363 S.E.2d 360 (1987).

Affidavit not required for peripheral accusation. — When an accusation of telephone call harassment was not used as the basis for an arrest warrant issuance, an affidavit was not required for it. Williams v. State, 206 Ga. App. 533, 426 S.E.2d 32 (1992).

Affidavit not required when appellant was not arrested. — No affidavit supporting an accusation filed against an appellant was required under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(a) when the appellant was not arrested for the charged offenses, and the accusation was not intended or used as the basis for the issuance of a warrant for the appellant's arrest. Blankenship v. State, 208 Ga. App. 710, 431 S.E.2d 481 (1993).

No affidavit required. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's request to charge the jury on the solicitor's duty to file an affidavit in support of the accusation because O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(a) clearly stated that an affidavit to support the accusation was required only when the accusation was to be used as the basis for the issuance of an arrest warrant and the record reflected no evidence that a warrant was issued for the defendant's arrest; thus, the requested instruction was not applicable or required. King v. State, 300 Ga. 180, 794 S.E.2d 110 (2016).

Filing date of supporting affidavit not determinative of timeliness of prosecution. — Prosecution against the defendant for simple battery was timely filed within two years, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(d), since the accusation was filed within the time period, which was deemed to be the commencement of the matter pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-1-3(14); the fact that the supporting affidavit was filed six days after the limitations period ran did not affect the timeliness of the action pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(a) because that document was for the issuance of an arrest warrant. Cochran v. State, 259 Ga. App. 130, 575 S.E.2d 901 (2003).

Right improperly invoked. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for discharge and acquittal based on speedy trial grounds because the defendant did not properly assert the statutory right since the demand did not meet the minimum acceptable standard as neither the indictment number or the charges against the defendant were included. Bonakies v. State, 263 Ga. App. 812, 589 S.E.2d 573 (2003).

Omission of some of statutory language. — Accusation charging driving under the influence and reciting the proper statute, but omitting "less safe driver" language in the statute, was sufficient. Broski v. State, 196 Ga. App. 116, 395 S.E.2d 317 (1990).

Accusation referring to a "masturbation for hire" and referencing O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71 sufficiently charged the defendant. Pak v. State, 206 Ga. App. 78, 424 S.E.2d 292 (1992).

Accusation that omitted certain statutory language but that apprised the defendant that the defendant was being charged with driving with an unlawful alcohol concentration of 0.10 grams or more within three hours of operating a vehicle was sufficient. Lewis v. State, 215 Ga. App. 486, 451 S.E.2d 116 (1994).

Accusation charging reckless driving was sufficient, notwithstanding the contention that the accusation did not include the essential element of disregard for the safety of persons or property, since it was so plain that the nature of the offense was easily understood when the accusation charged that the defendant unlawfully drove a motor vehicle on a public road in a reckless manner. Freeman v. State, 234 Ga. App. 110, 505 S.E.2d 836 (1998).

Superseding indictment not barred. — Timely accusation charging the defendant with misdemeanors, which was later followed by an indictment that included the misdemeanor charges and a felony charge filed more than two years after the commission of the crimes, was not barred by the statute of limitations because the indictment merely duplicated the original misdemeanor charges and the felony indictment was within the applicable statute of limitation period of four years. Wooten v. State, 240 Ga. App. 725, 524 S.E.2d 776 (1999).

Accusation based on arrest warrant or supported by affidavit not required. — Simple battery accusation was not invalid, although an arrest warrant on the same charge had been dismissed and the accusation was not supported by an affidavit. State v. Litz, 210 Ga. App. 200, 435 S.E.2d 724 (1993).

Uniform traffic citation. — Oath and attestation upon the uniform traffic citation issued under O.C.G.A. § 40-13-1 is apparently an "affidavit," developed by the commissioner of public safety for the prosecution of traffic offense cases; this "ticket" alone suffices to prosecute a traffic violation. But when the arresting officer neglects to sign, under oath and before an authorized magistrate, the "arresting officer's certification" on the citation attesting that the officer reasonably believed the defendant committed the offense, prosecution by formal accusation, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71, is the correct procedure. Evans v. State, 168 Ga. App. 716, 310 S.E.2d 3 (1983).

Prosecution does not need to proceed upon the uniform traffic citation form that has initially been issued and the prosecuting attorney has authority to file a subsequent formal accusation. State v. Doyal, 184 Ga. App. 126, 361 S.E.2d 17 (1987).

Defendant's argument that the state was not entitled to amend a uniform traffic citation to allege an accusation not contained in the original citation was inapplicable to the defendant's case as the state's original uniform traffic citation did not have to be amended since the citation did not improperly allege multiple offenses; rather, the state's reference to the statute violated, which contained multiple subsections, did not refer to multiple offenses, but referred to one offense and multiple ways to prove the offenses. Additionally, the uniform traffic citation issued to the defendant was not required to follow any sort of "mandatory" accusation as statutory law did not require the citation to be mandatory as to form. Slinkard v. State, 259 Ga. App. 755, 577 S.E.2d 825 (2003).

Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motion to dismiss because even though a uniform traffic citation (UTC) did not list the defendant's name in the correct order and did not contain a date for the defendant's initial court appearance, the defendant was not prejudiced; the defendant was aware of the charge against the defendant and appeared at all scheduled court dates. Regardless of whether O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(b)(1) allowed amendment to portions of a UTC other than the allegation, the state's accusation was sufficient to allow prosecution of the defendant for violating O.C.G.A. § 40-6-98 because O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(b)(1) allowed misdemeanor cases to proceed upon an accusation framed and signed by the prosecuting attorney. Switlick v. State, 295 Ga. App. 849, 673 S.E.2d 323 (2009).

Improper charge of defendants under uniform traffic citation. — Appellate court reversed the trial court's judgment convicting defendants of violating O.C.G.A. § 4-3-3 by allowing livestock to roam at large because § 4-3-3 was not a penal statute and the defendants were improperly charged by use of a uniform traffic citation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71. Cotton v. State, 263 Ga. App. 843, 589 S.E.2d 610 (2003).

Indictment for misdemeanor battery sufficient. — Trial court correctly denied the defendant's motion to quash a count alleging misdemeanor battery because the allegations of the count were not too vague, uncertain, or unclear as contended by the defendant since the allegations met the language of the statute and were sufficiently technical and correct; further, the specific bodily harm did not have to be alleged. State v. Tate, 262 Ga. App. 311, 585 S.E.2d 224 (2003).

Accusation for battery, family violence, and criminal trespass that alleged that the defendant injured the victim by striking the victim, causing a visibly bloody lip, and that the defendant knocked a hole in the victim's closet door, was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(c). There was no requirement that the accusation state the instrumentality used by the defendant because the instrumentality was not an element of any of the charged crimes. State v. Leatherwood, 326 Ga. App. 730, 757 S.E.2d 434 (2014).

Accusation misstated defendant's age. — Accusation that charged the defendant, age 19, with being a minor under 18 while driving with an alcohol concentration of .02 or more, met the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(c) because the accusation cited O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391, the correct statute under which the defendant was charged, and the defendant could not be surprised with proof of the defendant's age. Mills v. State, 271 Ga. App. 506, 610 S.E.2d 80 (2004).

Double jeopardy did not bar prosecution on new accusation. — Prosecution of the 2015 charge against the defendant was not barred on the ground of double jeopardy or failure to prosecute timely because the defendant made no showing that the 2015 charge arose from the illegal storage of the rubbish and no additional items were at issue in the 2010 charge. King v. State, 300 Ga. 180, 794 S.E.2d 110 (2016).

There was no error in trial court's denial of motion for directed verdict of acquittal based upon the assertion that the probata did not conform to the allegata, in that the original accusation charged that the defendant received money from a prostitute without lawful consideration on February 23, 1983, but the evidence at trial showed that the offense occurred on February 2, 1983, because time is not a material element of the offense of pimping and the state proved that the offense occurred within the statute of limitation prior to the return of the indictment. Angevine v. State, 171 Ga. App. 658, 320 S.E.2d 578 (1984).

State failed to prove a tolling of the statute of limitation by means of an amendment to an earlier accusation since there was no showing that the crimes charged in the earlier accusation arose out of the same conduct which gave rise to the offenses alleged in the subsequent accusation. Tarver v. State, 198 Ga. App. 634, 402 S.E.2d 365 (1991).

Traffic violation pending, which tolled limitations period. — Summary judgment in favor of the defendant was reversed because the plaintiff met the plaintiff's burden of producing evidence that the two year limitation period applicable to the plaintiff's tort suit had not run because the limiation period was tolled as the plaintiff established that the prosecution of the defendant for the traffic violation remained pending in municipal court until November 18, 2014, which was less than two years before the lawsuit was filed. Williams v. Durden, 347 Ga. App. 363, 819 S.E.2d 524 (2018).

Charging instrument defective. — Trial court's denial of a defendant's general demurrer to a charge against the defendant of violation of a family violence order, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-95(a), was error as the accusation failed to state any specific acts that violated any specific terms of a family violence order, such that the accusation failed to set out the essential elements of the crime or to apprise the defendant properly of the charge pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(c). Newsome v. State, 296 Ga. App. 490, 675 S.E.2d 229 (2009).

Charging instrument not defective. — Accusation was not fatally defective because the accusation informed the defendants of the charges against the defendants and protected the defendants against another prosecution for the same offense, and the defendants could not admit that the defendants passed in an area defined by markings as a no-passing zone without being guilty of the crime charged. Moreover, to the extent that the defendants' attack on the accusation could be read as a special demurrer, seeking greater specificity, it was waived by the defendants' failure to raise the issue within ten days after the defendants pled to the accusation. Haynes-Turner v. State, 289 Ga. App. 652, 658 S.E.2d 203 (2008).

Accusation charging a defendant with causing the unjustifiable physical pain or suffering of a dog by failing to provide adequate food or water or medical care was sufficient to charge the defendant with cruelty to animals pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-12-4. Ford v. State, 306 Ga. App. 606, 703 S.E.2d 71 (2010).

Harmless error analysis. — Even if the failure to name the specific drug involved was error, applying the harmless error standard on appeal, as the defendant was a less than safe driver because the defendant was under the influence of drugs, the defendant was in the best position to know which drug or drugs the defendant ingested, therefore the defendant was not prejudiced or misled and there was no violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(c). Gantt v. State, 263 Ga. App. 102, 587 S.E.2d 255 (2003).

Amendment

Amendment of accusation. — In a prosecution for driving under the influence of alcohol, the state was entitled, under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71 (f), to amend the accusation after the defendant entered the defendant's plea but before jury selection commenced in order to charge the correct date of the offense. Melton v. State, 174 Ga. App. 461, 330 S.E.2d 398 (1985).

Trial court did not err in denying the motion for a continuance when no showing was made to suggest that the defendant's ability to present a defense was in any way impeded by a change of the date of the alleged offense by one day. Melton v. State, 174 Ga. App. 461, 330 S.E.2d 398 (1985).

Trial court did not err in refusing to dismiss uniform traffic citations issued within two years of the date the offenses occurred, but later amended by the state, on the ground that the statute of limitation expired; the amended accusations did not constitute the commencement of a new prosecution and there had been no final disposition of the previously filed accusations. Prindle v. State, 240 Ga. App. 461, 523 S.E.2d 44 (1999).

Defendant could not complain that the defendant was required to answer to a charge that had been amended from the original charge filed against the defendant as the defendant was notified of the change, defendant was given a continuance to prepare for the amended charge, the amended charge arose out of the same conduct as the original charge, the defendant did not object but acquiesced in going forward on the amended accusation with the jury that had been impaneled, and the defendant's earlier jury trial had not started because the jury had been impaneled, but had not been sworn. Lunsford v. State, 262 Ga. App. 635, 585 S.E.2d 923 (2003).

Pretrial amendment of an accusation did not start a new prosecution, the previous arraignment of the defendant was sufficient, and jeopardy attached before the nolle prosequi was entered over the defendant's objection; consequently, a later prosecution of the offenses charged in the accusation was barred by former jeopardy. Smith v. State, 279 Ga. 396, 614 S.E.2d 79 (2005).

Because the state amended the state's accusation against the defendant before trial to include an additional charge of disorderly conduct, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-11-39, O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(f) required the trial court to grant the defendant's request for a continuance, and erred when the court failed to do so; moreover, the defendant had no pretrial notice of the need to defend against a tumultuous act that did not physically harm the spouse. Martin v. State, 278 Ga. App. 465, 629 S.E.2d 134 (2006).

Amendment of an accusation to clarify that the defendant made contact with the victim's breast, as opposed to the victim's "intimate body parts", was timely under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(f) when the state filed the amendment several days before trial, the amendment was served on defense counsel, and the trial court read the amended accusation in open court before trial commenced. Furthermore, the defendant was not surprised by the amendment, and the defendant did not show that the amendment impeded the defendant's ability to present a defense. Romo v. State, 288 Ga. App. 237, 653 S.E.2d 832 (2007).

When the defendant was prosecuted for serving alcohol to a minor, under O.C.G.A. § 3-3-23(a)(1), the defendant did not show the accusation was improperly amended in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(f) because: (1) it was not shown that the accusation was amended after trial commenced; and (2) while it was unknown if the amended accusation was served on the defendant, the amendment, deleting the name of an undercover officer to whom alcohol was allegedly served, did not surprise the defendant, given extensive testimony that had been given about the undercover operation resulting in the charge against the defendant. Butler v. State, 298 Ga. App. 129, 679 S.E.2d 361 (2009).

State was not barred from filing a formal accusation charging new violations even though the defendant was issued Uniform Traffic Citations (UTCs) at a traffic stop following a collision because the differences between the charges made in the UTCs and the charges set forth in the accusation did not affect the accusation's validity. Sevostiyanova v. State, 313 Ga. App. 729, 722 S.E.2d 333, cert. denied, No. S12C0968, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 612 (Ga. 2012).

Amendment to correct typographical error. — Even if the correction of a typographical error in the original accusation was considered an amendment, such a change was authorized by O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71. Anderson v. State, 211 Ga. App. 2, 438 S.E.2d 376 (1993).

Amended accusation, by correcting a typographical error with respect to the offense date, did not charge an offense beyond the two year statute of limitation for prosecuting misdemeanors because the offense date was not a material element of the offense charged. Thomas v. State, 233 Ga. App. 224, 504 S.E.2d 59 (1998).

Amendment filed after two-year period in § 17-3-1(d). — If an original accusation was timely filed and valid within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(c) and was subsequently amended after the two-year period of limitations set forth in O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1(d), the amendment did not negate the prior valid commencement of the prosecution which occurred before the expiration of the operative statute of limitations. Freeman v. State, 194 Ga. App. 905, 392 S.E.2d 330 (1990).

Right to continuance after amendment. — Trial court was not required to warn defendant that the defendant was entitled to a continuance based on the state's filing of an amended information as that right only applied if a defendant was pursuing a right to a trial and the defendant waived that right and entered guilty pleas to the charges. Payne v. State, 276 Ga. App. 577, 623 S.E.2d 668 (2005).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Uniform traffic citation. — O.C.G.A. § 17-7-71(b) specifically permits use of an uniform traffic citation in all misdemeanor cases involving vehicle dimensions and laws concerning motor common carriers and motor contract carriers, which would include violations of former § 46-7-61 to the extent that such violations were misdemeanors. 1981 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U81-17.

Nontraffic misdemeanor offenses are not properly chargeable on uniform traffic citation and complaint form but instead should be charged on an accusation. 1982 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U82-26.

Discretion of district attorney. — Decision as to whether to present an indictment to the grand jury lies within the discretion of the district attorney. There is misconduct only if the decision concerning prosecution is based upon some constitutionally impermissible reason such as race, religion, or the exercise of constitutional rights. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-25.

Motion to nolle prosequi. — Once an indictment or accusation has been filed, a district attorney's motion to nolle prosequi or dead docket requires the consent of the court. If the trial court refuses to grant the district attorney's motion to nolle prosequi or dead docket the case, the district attorney is not thereby disqualified. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-25.

Effect of pretrial diversion program. — If an indictment or accusation has been filed against a person who successfully completes a pretrial diversion program, consent of the court is required before the criminal charge can be dismissed. If the person completes the pretrial diversion program prior to the filing of an indictment or accusation, consent of the court is not required. 1988 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U88-25.

17-7-90. Issuance of bench warrant; execution; receiving bail, fixing bond, and approving sureties.

(a) A bench warrant may be issued by a judge for the arrest of a person:

(1) Accused of a crime by a grand jury;

(2) Except as otherwise provided in Code Section 17-6-11, charged with a crime who has failed to appear in court after:

(A) Actual notice of the time and place to appear to the person in open court;

(B) Notice of the time and place to appear to the person by mailing a notice to such person's last known address; or

(C) The person has otherwise been notified of the time and place to appear personally, in writing, by a court official or officer of the court;

(3) Charged with a crime upon the filing by the prosecutor of an accusation supported by affidavit; or

(4) Who failed to dispose of his or her charges or waive arraignment and plead not guilty after the expiration of the 30 day period set forth in subsection (b) of Code Section 17-6-11.

(b) Every officer is bound to execute a bench warrant within his or her jurisdiction, and every person so arrested shall be committed to jail until bail is tendered. Any judicial officer or the sheriff of the county where the charge was returned may receive the bail, fix the amount of the bond, and approve the sureties unless it is a case that is bailable only before some particular judicial officer.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

"Any judicial officer" defined. — "Any judicial officer" means an officer of the county where the accusation is found. An officer of another county cannot admit a person to bail. Weatherly v. Beavers, 139 Ga. 122, 76 S.E. 853 (1912).

Description of the crime in the bench warrant may be general. Brady v. Davis, 9 Ga. 73 (1850).

When arrest may be made. — Arrest may be made either before or after an accusation is made or an indictment found by a grand jury. Rogers v. State, 133 Ga. App. 513, 211 S.E.2d 373 (1974).

Agreement by a sheriff to protect sureties after taking the sureties' bond will not prevent forfeiture. McClure v. Smith, 56 Ga. 439 (1876).

Court clerks protected from suit on arrest warrant by judicial and quasi-judicial immunity. — Appellant's suit against clerks of a city municipal court was properly dismissed because the clerks' failure to perform their duties to withdraw a canceled arrest warrant from the state's criminal database, which led to the appellant's arrest and detention, were actions protected by quasi-judicial immunity as to the appellant's claims of wrongful arrest. OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Power of judge of probate court to issue arrest warrant. — Judge of the probate court does not have authority to issue a bench warrant, but the judge does have authority to issue an arrest warrant for a person who does not appear to answer a traffic violation citation issued to the person, regardless of whether the person resides in the county. 1975 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U75-65.

Service of warrants which do not fit definition of "bench warrant." — Any warrant issued by the court itself resulting from a case of criminal contempt or when a misdemeanor case is proceeding upon an accusation or to bring in a witness who has not obeyed a subpoena issued in a criminal case can properly be served by members of the Department of Public Safety, even though such a warrant would not be a bench warrant under the narrow definition given by this section. 1963-65 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 42.

Warrant for arrest of traffic law violator. — Named probate court may issue a warrant ordering apprehension of an individual charged with violating traffic laws of this state who fails to appear in court on the date and at the time specified in the citation upon which he or she was arrested. 1980 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U80-58.

Professional bondsman may not make an arrest pursuant to a bench warrant. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-83.

Approval of sureties. — Former Code 1933, §§ 27-801 and 27-902 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-90, 17-6-1 and 17-6-2) provided for the approval of sureties by sheriffs or judicial officers. Qualifications, such as solvency and reliability, may be inquired into before approval. 1970 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U70-83.

17-7-91. Date of arraignment; notice; service of notice and fee therefor; notice to surety on bond; arraignment; receipt and entering of plea; establishment of time for trial; effect of appearance and plea on notice requirement.

(a) In all criminal cases the court shall fix a date on which the defendant shall be arraigned. The clerk of the court, at least five days prior to the date set therefor, shall mail to the accused and his attorney of record, if known, notice of the date which has been fixed for arraignment. For such first service of notice, the clerk shall receive the fee prescribed in Code Section 15-6-77. This notice may be served by the sheriff of the county in which the court is situated or his lawful deputies. If the defendant has posted a bond or recognizance, a copy of the notice shall be mailed to each surety on the bond.

(b) On the date fixed by the court the accused shall be arraigned. The court shall receive the plea of the accused and enter the plea as provided for in this chapter. In those cases in which a plea of not guilty is entered, the court shall set the case down for trial at such time as shall be determined by the court.

(c) The appearance and entering of a plea by the accused shall be a waiver of the notice required in this Code section.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Right to arraignment generally. — Generally, a person indicted for or charged with an offense is entitled as a matter of right to be arraigned before pleading to the indictment. Hiatt v. State, 144 Ga. App. 298, 240 S.E.2d 894 (1977).

When the record showed that a defendant waived a formal arraignment and pled guilty, a reading of the indictment was not required at the guilty plea hearing and there was no merit to the defendant's claim that the trial court should have granted the defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal because the defendant was not formally arraigned pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-91, or because the trial court did not read the indictment to the defendant pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93. Johnson v. State, 287 Ga. App. 759, 652 S.E.2d 836 (2007).

Necessary steps in arraignment. — Purpose of an arraignment being to put the defendant on notice as to the charge against which the defendant must defend, the only formal arraignment necessary is reading the indictment to the accused and the entering of the defendant's plea of not guilty. Clark v. State, 138 Ga. App. 266, 226 S.E.2d 89 (1976).

Three days' notice does not mean 72 hours' notice. — This section required at least three days' notice of arraignment. However, it does require a full 72 hours since the statute was couched in the number of days and not the number of hours. Smith v. State, 235 Ga. 620, 221 S.E.2d 41 (1975).

Giving notice to bondsman. — While it is true that the notice of arraignment as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-7-91(a) was not given to the bondsman, this did not void the bond or release the bondsman's obligations under the bond because at the time of giving notice of arraignment, there was no bondsman to be notified. Osborne Bonding Co. v. Harris, 183 Ga. App. 764, 360 S.E.2d 32, cert. denied, 183 Ga. App. 906, 360 S.E.2d 32 (1987).

Actual notice of arraignment. — Failure to mail notice of arraignments to the surety could not be used as a basis for avoidance of the bond obligation since the surety had actual notice of the arraignment in time to assure the defendant's presence. Jam Bonding Co. v. State, 182 Ga. App. 608, 356 S.E.2d 551 (1987).

No fixed period of time for arraignment. — There is no provision of law requiring that an accused be arraigned within any fixed period of time. Brand v. Wofford, 230 Ga. 750, 199 S.E.2d 231 (1973).

Arraignment may be rescheduled. — Dismissal of charges against a defendant arising out of a road rage incident was not required on the ground that the defendant's arraignment was postponed on three separate occasions; O.C.G.A. § 17-7-91 did not mandate that an arraignment date be permanently fixed and not subject to rescheduling and the defendant failed to show that the notices of arraignment for any of the rescheduled dates were defective. Adams v. State, 282 Ga. App. 819, 640 S.E.2d 329 (2006).

Mere call of the case is not a formal arraignment. Birt v. State, 127 Ga. App. 532, 194 S.E.2d 335 (1972).

Arraignment or waiver as prerequisites to further proceedings. — Until arraignment or a waiver thereof, there can be no jury impaneled and no placing of the defendant in jeopardy. Hardwick v. State, 231 Ga. 181, 200 S.E.2d 728 (1973).

Power to have plea entered when defendant stands mute. — Trial court does not err by ordering a plea of not guilty to be entered when the defendant stands mute upon the defendant's arraignment. Hardwick v. State, 231 Ga. 181, 200 S.E.2d 728 (1973).

Waiver of arraignment and plea generally. — Defendant may waive arraignment and plea by failure to call the attention of the court to this defect in the proceedings at the proper time, and when it does not appear that the defendant made any mention of the fact until after the verdict, the defendant is conclusively presumed to have waived the arraignment and plea. Bunn v. State, 150 Ga. App. 294, 257 S.E.2d 364 (1979); Moore v. State, 153 Ga. App. 511, 265 S.E.2d 821 (1980).

Defendant was not denied due process by an arraignment without proper notice since the defendant's own appellate brief established that the defendant waived any valid objection to the sufficiency of notice by appearing at arraignment and entering a not guilty plea. Reedman v. State, 265 Ga. App. 162, 593 S.E.2d 46 (2003).

Because the defendant voiced no objection at trial to the alleged lack of arraignment or notice, any error in the lack of arraignment was waived by the defendant's failure to raise the issue prior to verdict; even if there had been no waiver, the defendant failed to show, or even assert harm. Flores v. State, 308 Ga. App. 368, 707 S.E.2d 578 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C1072, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 527 (Ga. 2011).

Waiver of defendant's presence at arraignment. — Presence of the defendant at the arraignment is waived by failure of the defendant's counsel to object to proceeding in the client's absence at the arraignment. Davis v. State, 135 Ga. App. 203, 217 S.E.2d 343 (1975).

When formal indictment deemed waived. — After the jury is impaneled to try the case, and after the state and the defendant introduce evidence, and the defendant makes a statement, but before any argument of counsel, and before the jury was charged by the court, the defendant will be deemed to have waived formal arraignment. Gravitt v. State, 53 Ga. App. 353, 185 S.E. 594 (1936).

Whenever the defendant presents an issue of law without demanding a formal arraignment, this amounts to a waiver of arraignment as to issues of law or fact. Hiatt v. State, 144 Ga. App. 298, 240 S.E.2d 894 (1977).

Formal prerequisites to arraignment met. — If the defendant is aware of the indictment, waives formal arraignment, and pleads not guilty, the formal prerequisites to arraignment are met. Moore v. State, 153 Ga. App. 511, 265 S.E.2d 821 (1980).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Purpose of section is to set a time limit in which the clerk is to give notice to the defendant and the defendant's counsel in order to make timely appearance before the court, impliedly after the defendant's indictment. 1968 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 68-13.

Construction with § 17-6-8. — In view of Ga. L. 1962, p. 530, § 2 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-6-8), a notice of arraignment is necessary only if the court decides to require the defendant to face trial. 1965-66 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 66-216.

When notice of arraignment to be given. — Unless a true bill has been returned or an accusation preferred, it is premature to give the accused notice of an arraignment at the time of arrest. 1973 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U73-26.

Sufficiency of notice. — Notice of arraignment to appear on the first day of the next court, which was attached to a copy of the bond in a criminal case, was not sufficient notice to the defendant to satisfy the statute. 1968 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 68-13.

Clerk's fee for notice. — Notice of arraignment required by former Code 1933, § 27-401 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-7-91) to be sent to all defendants in criminal cases was to be treated as a summons rather than as a subpoena in determining the correct fee to be charged by the clerk of court pursuant to former Code 1933, § 24-2727 (see O.C.G.A. § 15-6-77). 1967 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 67-42.

Applicability to traffic cases. — Since the notice is made applicable to "all criminal cases," the notice is meant to apply to traffic cases as well as all other criminal cases. 1965-66 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 66-216.

17-7-92. Service of notice of filing of indictment, special presentment, or accusation against corporation; return of service; failure of corporation to appear or enter plea; judgment and execution against corporate property.

Whenever an indictment, special presentment, or accusation against a corporation doing business in this state is returned or filed in any court having jurisdiction over the offense, the clerk of the court shall issue an original and copy notice to the defendant corporation of the filing of the indictment, special presentment, or accusation, which copy notice shall be served by a sheriff upon any officer of the corporation who is found in his county; or, if there is no such officer in his county, then service shall be upon any agent of the corporation. The sheriff serving the copy notice shall make an entry of such service on the original notice and return the same to the court from which it issued. Such service shall be deemed service upon the corporation. Upon the return of the notice, executed as provided for in this Code section, the indictment, special presentment, or accusation shall stand for trial. At the trial, if the defendant corporation fails to appear, or appearing, fails to plead, the judge shall cause a plea of not guilty to be entered, and the trial shall proceed as though the defendant had appeared and pleaded. Upon the conviction of any corporation in any such trial, there shall be rendered against it a judgment for the fine imposed, together with the costs of the prosecution. Upon judgment, an execution shall issue against the property of the defendant.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

This section provided an exception to the general law that the defendants charged with a crime were not served with process. Wells v. Terrell, 121 Ga. 368, 49 S.E. 319 (1904).

Method of service is exclusive, unless service be waived by the corporation. Progress Club v. State, 12 Ga. App. 174, 76 S.E. 1029 (1913).

Accusation is not sufficient. Central Ga. Power Co. v. State, 12 Ga. App. 260, 77 S.E. 107 (1913).

In the absence of waiver of indictment, a corporation can be tried for a crime only upon an indictment or presentment of a grand jury. Progress Club v. State, 12 Ga. App. 174, 76 S.E. 1029 (1913).

Appearance by attorney is waiver. — Appearance of the corporation voluntarily by the corporation's attorney demurring to an indictment is a waiver. Reeves v. Southern R.R., 121 Ga. 561, 49 S.E. 674, 70 L.R.A. 513, 2 Ann. Cas. 207 (1905).

Service on agent, see Central Ga. Power Co. v. Parnell, 11 Ga. App. 779, 76 S.E. 157 (1912).

Applicability to foreign corporations. — Foreign corporations doing business in this state come within the scope of this section. Reeves v. Southern Ry., 121 Ga. 561, 49 S.E. 674, 70 L.R.A. 513, 2 Ann. Cas. 207 (1905).

Solicitor general's reliance upon O.C.G.A. § 17-7-92 in the service of an accusation against a foreign corporation which published an allegedly obscene magazine distributed within the state was not clearly unconstitutional and, thus, did not constitute bad faith so as to justify federal interference in the state proceedings. Penthouse Int'l, Ltd. v. Webb, 594 F. Supp. 1186 (N.D. Ga. 1984).

Evidence of who are the officers or directors of a corporation. — Highest and best evidence of who are officers or board of directors of a corporation is to be found in the minutes of the corporation. Before parol evidence thereof can be introduced over timely and proper objection, the minutes must be produced or accounted for, or some proper foundation laid for the introduction of secondary evidence, when the identity of the officers or board of directors of the corporation is a material and vital fact to be proved in the case. South Ga. Trust Co. v. Crandall, 47 Ga. App. 328, 170 S.E. 333 (1933).

17-7-93. Reading of indictment or accusation; answer of accused to charge; recordation of "guilty" plea and pronouncement of judgment; withdrawn guilty pleas; pleas by immigrants.

(a) Upon the arraignment of a person accused of committing a crime, the indictment or accusation shall be read to him and he shall be required to answer whether he is guilty or not guilty of the offense charged, which answer or plea shall be made orally by the accused person or his counsel.

(b) If the person pleads "guilty," the plea shall be immediately recorded on the minutes of the court by the clerk, together with the arraignment; and the court shall pronounce the judgment of the law upon the person in the same manner as if he or she had been convicted of the offense by the verdict of a jury. At any time before judgment is pronounced, the accused person may withdraw the plea of "guilty" and plead "not guilty."

(c) In addition to any other inquiry by the court prior to acceptance of a plea of guilty, the court shall determine whether the defendant is freely entering the plea with an understanding that if he or she is not a citizen of the United States, then the plea may have an impact on his or her immigration status. This subsection shall apply with respect to acceptance of any plea of guilty to any state offense in any court of this state or any political subdivision of this state.

General Consideration

Legislative intent must be followed. — Intent of the General Assembly in establishing this section must be closely adhered to. Williams v. State, 148 Ga. App. 521, 251 S.E.2d 601 (1978), overruled on other grounds, State v. Germany, 246 Ga. 455, 271 S.E.2d 851 (1980).

What constitutes arraignment. — Arraignment of a prisoner is nothing more than reading the indictment to the prisoner, and asking the prisoner in open court whether the prisoner is guilty or not guilty. Cogswell v. State, 49 Ga. 103 (1873); Fears v. State, 125 Ga. 739, 54 S.E. 667 (1906); Harris v. State, 11 Ga. App. 137, 74 S.E. 895 (1912); Horne v. State, 27 Ga. App. 587, 109 S.E. 699 (1921).

Formal opportunity to plead. — Arraignment gives the prisoner a formal opportunity to plead to the indictment. Tarver v. State, 95 Ga. 222, 21 S.E. 381 (1894).

Formal opportunity to object to the indictment before trial. Lampkin v. State, 87 Ga. 516, 13 S.E. 523 (1891).

Formal opportunity to object to the indictment before pleading to the merits. Smith v. State, 17 Ga. App. 612, 87 S.E. 846 (1916).

Indictment did not need to be read into record. — Sufficient factual basis was established for a defendant's guilty plea to armed robbery, kidnapping, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime when the prosecutor stated that the defendant and an accomplice entered the victims' apartment, forced the victims into rooms at gunpoint, tied the victims up, and stole some items; the prosecutor also noted that much of the crime had been recorded by a 9-1-1 operator; defense counsel stated that counsel had discussed the facts with the defendant; and the defendant conceded guilt. Therefore, it was not necessary that the indictment be read into the record. Leary v. State, 291 Ga. App. 754, 662 S.E.2d 733 (2008).

Arraignment states the terms for the issue. — There can be no plea or issue before arraignment or waiver thereof. Bryans v. State, 34 Ga. 323 (1866).

Arraignment enables the court to identify the prisoner as the proper party to proceed against. Wells v. Terrell, 121 Ga. 368, 49 S.E. 319 (1904).

Prisoner must be present at the arraignment, whether the charge be a felony or a misdemeanor. Tarver v. State, 95 Ga. 222, 21 S.E. 381 (1894).

All of the persons charged in an indictment may be arraigned at one time. Rawlins v. State, 124 Ga. 31, 52 S.E. 1 (1905), aff'd, 201 U.S. 638, 26 S. Ct. 560, 50 L. Ed. 899 (1906).

On a new trial, a prisoner need not be rearraigned. Cogswell v. State, 49 Ga. 103 (1873); Hayes v. State, 58 Ga. 35 (1877); Atkins v. State, 69 Ga. 595 (1882).

What constitutes pronouncement. — Judgment was "pronounced," within the purview of this section, whenever the accused was officially informed by the court of the sentence to be entered against the accused. Griffin v. State, 12 Ga. App. 615, 77 S.E. 1080 (1913).

Pronouncement of judgment as provided in this section meant the signing of the written sentence by the presiding judge and the judgment's delivery to the clerk for the record. Wright v. State, 75 Ga. App. 764, 44 S.E.2d 569 (1947); Burkett v. State, 131 Ga. App. 177, 205 S.E.2d 496 (1974); Carney v. State, 131 Ga. App. 209, 205 S.E.2d 518 (1974).

"Pronouncement" means the signing of the written sentence by the judge. Farmer v. State, 128 Ga. App. 416, 196 S.E.2d 893 (1973).

Oral announcement is a pronouncement. — Term "pronounced" as employed by the legislature in this section meant "orally announced" and that, therefore, a defendant does not have an absolute statutory right to withdraw a guilty plea after the trial court's oral announcement. State v. Germany, 246 Ga. 455, 271 S.E.2d 851 (1980).

Orally announcing the sentence constitutes a "pronouncement" under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b) which grants the defendant an absolute right to withdraw a guilty plea "before judgment is pronounced." Anderson v. State, 194 Ga. App. 395, 390 S.E.2d 637 (1990).

"Judgment" in the context of this section meant "sentence" and obviously referred to a valid one. Mullins v. State, 134 Ga. App. 243, 214 S.E.2d 1 (1975).

Entry of a guilty plea was not a judgment of conviction until sentence was imposed; therefore, a defendant who walked away from the courthouse after a plea entry but before sentencing was not guilty of felony escape, but could be convicted only of misdemeanor escape. Dorsey v. State, 259 Ga.

App. 254, 576 S.E.2d 637 (2003).

Section was inapplicable to pleas which result in first offender treatment, because to do so would frustrate the purpose of Ga. L. 1968, p. 324 (see O.C.G.A. Art. 3, Ch. 8, T. 42). Fair v. State, 245 Ga. 868, 268 S.E.2d 316 (1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 986, 101 S. Ct. 407, 66 L. Ed. 2d 250 (1980).

Defendant's right to be present for sentencing. — Defendant on trial must be present when the court takes any action materially affecting the case. Thus, unless there is only one possible sentence that can be imposed, or unless the defendant has voluntarily absented oneself from the proceedings, a defendant has the right to be present in court for the defendant's sentencing. Williams v. State, 148 Ga. App. 521, 251 S.E.2d 601 (1978), overruled on other grounds, 246 Ga. 455, 271 S.E.2d 851 (1980).

Right to be present for sentencing would be meaningless if it did not include a concomitant right to be informed of the sentence, and thus to have some opportunity to address the court, prior to its final pronouncement. Williams v. State, 148 Ga. App. 521, 251 S.E.2d 601 (1978), overruled on other grounds, 246 Ga. 455, 271 S.E.2d 851 (1980).

Advising prisoner of consequences of plea. — It is good practice and in the interest of fairness to admonish the prisoner of the consequences before receiving the prisoner's plea, even though there is no statute requiring it. Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945).

If the prisoner is misled, or is induced to enter a plea by fraud, or even by mistake, the prisoner ought to be allowed to withdraw the plea. Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945).

Statute applies to defendants pleading nolo contendere. — See McLeod v. State, 251 Ga. App. 371, 554 S.E.2d 507 (2001).

Mental competency. — When the defendant, who had an IQ of 49, was determined by the court to be mentally incompetent to waive a plea of not guilty, the trial court erred in not ordering a hearing on the defendant's competence to stand trial. Holloway v. State, 257 Ga. 620, 361 S.E.2d 794 (1987).

Good faith reliance on advice of counsel. — Person cannot avoid the legal consequences of the person's plea even if based on good faith reliance on the advice of counsel. Davis v. State, 151 Ga. App. 736, 261 S.E.2d 468 (1979).

Plea may be made by the defendant or by defendant's attorney, and when by the latter, the defendant being present and interposing no objection, it will be binding upon the defendant as though made by the defendant personally. Bearden v. State, 13 Ga. App. 264, 79 S.E. 79 (1913).

Denial by defendant that counsel had authority to act on defendant's behalf. — This section provided express legislative recognition of the authority of an attorney at law to speak for the client in open court and for the court to act thereon. It would be trifling with the court to allow the client, after keeping silent in the presence of the court while the defendant's attorney entered a plea of guilty in the defendant's behalf and the court acting thereon imposed the sentence, to deny thereafter the authority of the defendant's attorney to enter the plea or to deny the defendant's approval of such action by the defendant's attorney. If the defendant had any objection, the defendant should have made the objection known at the time and before the court acted thereon. Archer v. Clark, 202 Ga. 229, 42 S.E.2d 924 (1947).

Waiver of trial requires affirmative action by prisoner. — Affirmative action on the part of the prisoner is required before the prisoner will be held to have waived the right of trial created for the prisoner's benefit. Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945).

Consideration by jury of indictment, plea, and withdrawal of plea. — When the indictment with the plea of guilty and the withdrawal of the plea of guilty are out with the jury during the jury's deliberation, without objection, such is not reversible error. Smith v. State, 85 Ga. App. 459, 69 S.E.2d 281 (1952).

Prisoner may waive formal arraignment. Tarver v. State, 95 Ga. 222, 21 S.E. 381 (1894); Hudson v. State, 117 Ga. 704, 45 S.E. 66 (1903); Harris v. State, 11 Ga. App. 137, 74 S.E. 895 (1912).

Unless waived, the prisoner is entitled to arraignment as a matter of right. Kincade v. State, 14 Ga. App. 544, 81 S.E. 910 (1914).

Waiver may be express or implied from silent acquiescence in going to trial without pleading to the indictment. Hudson v. State, 117 Ga. 704, 45 S.E. 66 (1903).

Waiver amounts to a plea in forming the issue. Tarver v. State, 95 Ga. 222, 21 S.E. 381 (1894).

Waiver on a first trial renders formal arraignment unnecessary on a new trial. Parker v. State, 17 Ga. App. 252, 87 S.E. 705 (1915).

Wavier of arraignment. — Because the defendant voiced no objection at trial to the alleged lack of arraignment or notice, any error in the lack of arraignment was waived by the defendant's failure to raise the issue prior to verdict; even if there had been no waiver, the defendant failed to show, or even assert harm. Flores v. State, 308 Ga. App. 368, 707 S.E.2d 578 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C1072, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 527 (Ga. 2011).

Failure to arraign. — Reversal was required because the state acknowledged that the state could not show that the defendant was formerly arraigned and aware of the charges, and that because the defendant objected to the lack of a formal arraignment, the trial court should have arraigned the defendant. Sapp v. State, 338 Ga. App. 628, 791 S.E.2d 201 (2016).

Guilty Pleas

Plea of guilty is but a confession in open court. Griffin v. State, 12 Ga. App. 615, 77 S.E. 1080 (1913); Rowland v. State, 72 Ga. App. 793, 35 S.E.2d 372 (1945); Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945).

Plea should be carefully scanned and cautiously received. — Like a confession out of court, a plea should be scanned with care and received with caution. Griffin v. State, 12 Ga. App. 615, 77 S.E. 1080 (1913).

Trial on merits favored. — Law favors a trial on the merits and the law does not encourage confessions of guilt, either in or out of court. Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945).

No right to guilty plea. — Trial court properly rejected a defendant's tendered guilty plea to charges of felony murder and armed robbery, and entered a nolle prosequi without the defendant's consent as to those charges as O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93 did not confer on the defendant a right to enter a guilty plea. Sanders v. State, 280 Ga. 780, 631 S.E.2d 344 (2006).

Acceptance of guilty pleas generally. — Plea of guilty ought never be received, unless the plea is freely and voluntarily made. Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945).

Like a confession out of court, a guilty plea ought to be scanned with care and received with caution. The judge is not bound to receive such a plea at all, and in capital cases frequently declines to do so. Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945).

Voluntariness of a guilty plea must be guarded with the same degree of carefulness in the plea's reception as a confession out of court. If the reason of the plea of guilty is influenced by the slightest hope of benefit or the remotest fear of injury, the plea should not be allowed to stand. Rowland v. State, 72 Ga. App. 793, 35 S.E.2d 372 (1945).

Plea of guilty should be scanned with care and received with caution. Calloway v. State, 115 Ga. App. 158, 154 S.E.2d 291 (1967).

Effect of guilty plea generally. — In a criminal proceeding, a confession of the offense by the party charged by means of a plea of guilty is the highest kind of conviction of which the case admits, and subjects the party precisely to the same punishment as if the party were tried and found guilty by verdict. Jackson v. Lowry, 171 Ga. 349, 155 S.E. 466 (1930).

Evidence of prior guilty plea inadmissible. — Telling a jury that a defendant initially pled guilty to an offense for which the defendant was being tried is clearly harmful to the defendant, and for that reason, the General Assembly included in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b) a prohibition against admitting evidence of a defendant's prior guilty plea. Dixon v. State, 268 Ga. App. 215, 601 S.E.2d 748 (2004), overruled on other grounds by State v. Lane, 308 Ga. 10, 838 S.E.2d 808 (2020).

Trial court is without jurisdiction to accept a plea of guilty executed by another, and impose sentence in a misdemeanor case, in the absence of the defendant. Chastain v. State, 75 Ga. App. 880, 45 S.E.2d 81 (1947).

Guilty plea hearing. — Reading of the indictment was not required at the guilty plea hearing. Thompson v. State, 240 Ga. App. 539, 524 S.E.2d 239 (1999).

Requirement that judge personally inquire into the guilty plea. — So long as the substantive requirements of Fed. R. Crim. P. 11, as interpreted in Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1969), concerning the defendant's guilty plea are met, there is no procedural requirement that the judge personally make all the inquiries, provided that the inquiries are made in the defendant's presence. State v. Germany, 245 Ga. 326, 265 S.E.2d 13 (1980).

Duties under Fed. R. Crim. P. 11 in accepting plea of guilty. — It is clear that a state trial judge, in accepting a plea of guilty, now has the same duty in this respect that a federal trial judge has under Fed. R. Crim. P. 11. Weathers v. State, 149 Ga. App. 617, 255 S.E.2d 90 (1979).

Duty to ascertain whether plea agreement was reached. — When a guilty plea is offered, the trial court is required to ascertain if any plea agreement was reached by the state and the defendant. Anderson v. State, 194 Ga. App. 395, 390 S.E.2d 637 (1990).

Court not required to inform defendant of all possible consequences. — While it is unquestioned that a guilty plea or a nolo contendere plea must be knowingly and voluntarily made after proper advice and with a full understanding of the consequences, the trial court is not required to inform a defendant of all the possible collateral consequences of the defendant's plea, including those at the hands of a different sovereign. Davis v. State, 151 Ga. App. 736, 261 S.E.2d 468 (1979).

O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(c) required the trial court to determine that the defendant was entering the plea with an understanding that if the defendant was not a citizen of the United States, then the plea could have an impact on the defendant's immigration status. McLeod v. State, 251 Ga. App. 371, 554 S.E.2d 507 (2001).

Failure to recite range of punishment does not invalidate guilty plea. — Defendant's otherwise voluntary guilty plea is not invalidated merely because the range of punishment on the plea was never recited to the defendant, when the defendant makes no claim that the defendant was disadvantaged by the omission or even that the defendant was in fact unaware of the possible sentence which could be imposed. Hill v. Hopper, 233 Ga.

633, 212 S.E.2d 810 (1975).

Failure to notify defendant of ineligibility for parole. — Although the trial court did not tell the defendant that the defendant would be ineligible for parole, this was not grounds for overturning the defendant's guilty plea, and the fact that the trial court allegedly misinformed the defendant about eligibility for sentence review did not change the result as such eligibility was also a collateral consequence of pleading guilty. Furthermore, because the defendant did not timely seek sentence review, the defendant could not show harm. Leary v. State, 291 Ga. App. 754, 662 S.E.2d 733 (2008).

Defendant's desire to reduce penalty. — Otherwise valid plea of guilty is not involuntary because the plea was induced by the defendant's desire to limit the possible maximum penalty to less than that authorized if there had been a jury trial. Thomason v. Caldwell, 229 Ga. 637, 194 S.E.2d 112 (1972).

Plea of guilty must be voluntarily made. — To waive an individual's fundamental rights, including the right to trial by jury, the privilege against self-incrimination, and the right to confront one's accusers, by a plea of guilty, the accused must make an informed, knowledgeable, and voluntary decision; the accused must be aware of the relevant circumstances and likely consequences of the accused's decision. McBryar v. McElroy, 510 F. Supp. 706 (N.D. Ga. 1981).

Use of former guilty pleas to enhance sentence. — When the defendant's sentence for aggravated assault was enhanced by the use of prior convictions based on guilty pleas during which the defendant was not asked required questions to determine the voluntariness of the pleas, defendant's sentence had to be vacated and the matter remanded for resentencing, at which time the state would have the burden of proving the voluntariness of the guilty pleas before the state could use the prior convictions to enhance the defendant's sentence. Carswell v. State, 263 Ga. App. 833, 589 S.E.2d 605 (2003).

Accused need not correctly assess every relevant factor for plea to be valid. — Rule that a plea must be intelligently made to be valid does not suggest that a plea is vulnerable to later attack if the accused did not correctly assess every relevant factor entering into the accused's decision. Kight v. State, 158 Ga. App. 698, 282 S.E.2d 176 (1981).

Threshold right to assistance of counsel is no less momentous to accused who must decide whether to plead guilty than to accused who stands trial. McBryar v. McElroy, 510 F. Supp. 706 (N.D. Ga. 1981).

If petitioner did not receive effective assistance of counsel, petitioner's plea of guilty was consequently not intelligent and voluntary. McBryar v. McElroy, 510 F. Supp. 706 (N.D. Ga. 1981).

When guilty plea considered made without duress or influence. — If the evidence indicates that the trial judge advised the defendants of the sentences the judge intended to impose and allowed the defendants a recess to consider the matter further with counsel, a decision to let guilty pleas stand must be abided by as being made without duress or influence. Smith v. State, 231 Ga. 23, 200 S.E.2d 119 (1973).

Validity of agreement under which prosecuting attorney makes recommendations concerning punishment. — Although the rule that it is vital that the rights of the defendants should be zealously protected by the court, and that pleas of guilty, like confessions, should be scanned with great care, and, if necessary, rejected when it appears that the defendant has been led to make such plea in the belief that the defendant will receive some reward or avert some injury thereby is recognized, this rule is not available to a defendant who enters a plea of guilty under an agreement between the prosecuting attorney and the defense attorney that certain recommendations will be made by the prosecuting attorney as to punishment, such defendant through the defendant's counsel having express notice by the trial judge prior to the entry of such plea that no commitment would be made and no person had authority to make any commitment which would be binding upon the defendant. King v. State, 91 Ga. App. 388, 85 S.E.2d 637 (1955).

Setting aside of convictions based on pleas induced by hope for leniency. — Reason for allowing a defendant to set aside a conviction based on a plea of guilty which plea was induced by hope for leniency offered by public officials is not primarily to afford the defendant an opportunity to change the defendant's mind because the inducement or promises are not fulfilled, but to give effect to the law that only confessions understandingly and voluntarily made have probative value, and not those coercively induced by prosecuting officers in violation of law. Smith v. State, 231 Ga. 23, 200 S.E.2d 119 (1973).

Misleading of defendant by court officer as to effect of pleading guilty. — If someone on whom the defendant has a right to rely, someone connected with the court, such as the judge, the sheriff, the solicitor (now district attorney) or counsel for the defendant, should mislead the defendant as to what the defendant might expect if a plea of guilty is entered, and defendant is thus actuated by hope of lesser punishment if the plea is entered or fear of greater punishment if it is not, then the court should, these facts being plainly made to appear, withdraw the plea even after judgment is entered. Holston v. State, 103 Ga. App. 373, 119 S.E.2d 302 (1961).

For validity of guilty plea entered in counsel's absence, see Welch v. State, 63 Ga. App. 277, 11 S.E.2d 42 (1940).

Acceptance of guilty pleas in capital cases. — In capital cases, the court ought generally to advise the prisoner to retract the prisoner's guilty plea and plead to the indictment. Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945).

Plea bargaining in capital cases. — If a plea of guilty was entered in a capital felony case and the state seeks the death penalty under former Code 1933, § 27-2534.1, plea bargaining was not involved nor could it ever be involved. Therefore, former Code 1933, § 27-1404 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93) would have no purpose under such a circumstance. Fair v. State, 245 Ga. 868, 268 S.E.2d 316 (1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 986, 101 S. Ct. 407, 66 L. Ed. 2d 250 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30).

Guilty plea waives defenses and trial. — Valid plea of guilty waives all defenses known and unknown and waives the right to trial by jury. Thomason v. Caldwell, 229 Ga. 637, 194 S.E.2d 112 (1972).

Waiver of constitutional rights in guilty plea. — Because the transcript of proceedings and a trial counsel's affidavit did not show that the defendant was advised that a guilty plea would waive the privilege against self-incrimination and the right to confrontation, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's habeas corpus petition. Green v. State, 279 Ga. 687, 620 S.E.2d 788 (2005).

Habeas court's finding that a petitioner's guilty pleas were validly entered was reversed as the waiver forms signed by the petitioner and reviewed with the petitioner by the petitioner's attorneys addressed only the right to be tried by a jury; the waiver forms did not advise the petitioner that the petitioner was waiving the petitioner's right against self-incrimination and the petitioner's confrontation right. Beckworth v. State, 281 Ga. 41, 635 S.E.2d 769 (2006).

Because the transcript of an inmate's guilty plea hearing failed to show that the inmate was expressly informed of, and voluntarily waived the privilege against compulsory self-incrimination, an order denying a petition for a writ of habeas corpus was reversed, despite the fact that the record showed that the inmate voluntarily waived the right to trial by jury and the right to confront one's accusers. Hawes v. State, 281 Ga. 822, 642 S.E.2d 92 (2007).

Because the record evidence showed that the defendant was advised of the right to remain silent, the right to a jury trial, and the right to confrontation, the defendant's guilty plea was knowingly and voluntarily entered upon a full understanding that those rights would be waived. Duffey v. State, 289 Ga. App. 141, 656 S.E.2d 167 (2007).

Plea of guilty is a waiver of trial. Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945).

Guilty plea constitutes a waiver of several basic rights, including the right to trial by jury, the privilege against self-incrimination, and the right to confront one's accusers. McBryar v. McElroy, 510 F. Supp. 706 (N.D. Ga. 1981).

Error in admission of defendant's withdrawn guilty plea. — Error in the admission of evidence of a defendant's withdrawn guilty plea is of such serious magnitude that although the defendant erred procedurally in the manner and timeliness of pursuing the error, a new trial is required. No harm can be done a defendant greater than of calling to the attention of the jury the fact the defendant has previously pled guilty to the same charge for which the defendant is on trial under a subsequent plea of "not guilty". Shoemake v. State, 213 Ga. App. 528, 445 S.E.2d 558 (1994).

Mistaken plea of guilty. — Plea of guilty made by mistake to one of a number of pending indictments, when the intention was to plead guilty to another, may be corrected even after the entry has been made on the indictment and has been transferred to the minutes of the court. Davis v. State, 20 Ga. 674 (1856).

Cure of errors committed in taking and entering guilty plea. — Entry by the accused of the words, "I consent," underneath the verdict of guilty, did not cure the lack of observance of the accused's rights in taking and entering a plea of guilty. Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945).

Recording of plea. — Court would reject the assertion that the trial court erred when the court failed to immediately record the plea when the record showed that the defendant's plea statement was filed with the clerk on the same date it was signed by the defendant. Craft v. State, 234 Ga. App. 305, 506 S.E.2d 663 (1998).

Motion to set aside plea denied. — When the defendant entered a guilty plea to aggravated assault, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in refusing to set aside the plea as the state established that the defendant was cognizant of the rights defendant was waiving and of the possible consequences of the plea; the record contained a transcript of the plea hearing and a sworn statement signed by defendant, both of which established that defendant's guilty plea was knowing and voluntary. Shields v. State, 259 Ga. App. 906, 578 S.E.2d 566 (2003).

Presumption that guilty plea has been made and entered. — In the absence of anything to the contrary, it will be presumed that the accused orally plead guilty, and that the clerk of the court entered the plea of guilty upon the minutes of the court. Jackson v. Lowry, 171 Ga. 349, 155 S.E. 466 (1930).

Entry on accusation as prima facie evidence of guilty plea. — When there is an entry on the accusation of waiver of arraignment and plea of guilty, signed by the acting solicitor, such record entry furnishes prima facie evidence of a plea of guilty by the defendant. Jackson v. Lowry, 171 Ga. 349, 155 S.E. 466 (1930).

Colloquy proved guilty plea was not made under duress. — Colloquy proved that a guilty plea was knowingly and voluntarily made; a defendant stated the defendant was satisfied with counsel and not under duress (such as claimed family pressure to plead guilty), knew defendant was waiving certain rights (such as speedy trial rights), so the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by not letting the defendant withdraw that guilty plea after sentencing the defendant to twice as long a term as the defendant would have received if the defendant pled guilty at an earlier stage — the state located the complaining witness and so was in a better bargaining position. Jones v. State, 268 Ga. App. 101, 601 S.E.2d 469 (2004).

Burden of proving guilty plea intelligently and voluntarily entered. — After a prisoner raises the question of the validity of the prisoner's plea of guilty, the burden is on the state to show that the plea was intelligently and voluntarily entered. Cook v. State, 153 Ga. App. 362, 265 S.E.2d 323 (1980).

Guilty plea forestalls motion for new trial. — When the defendant has filed a guilty plea, the defendant cannot move for a new trial since there has been no verdict; therefore, all enumeration of error involving consideration of evidence and alleged harmful error committed during trial cannot be considered. Stevens v. State, 169 Ga. App. 646, 314 S.E.2d 481 (1984).

Guilty plea exchange offer admissible at sentencing. — Defendant may present evidence in the sentencing phase of trial that the defendant offered to plead guilty in exchange for a life sentence but the state refused the offer. Mobley v. State, 262 Ga. 808, 426 S.E.2d 150, cert. denied, 510 U.S. 870, 114 S. Ct. 198, 126 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1993).

Defendant's remark indicating willingness to plead guilty admissible at trial. — When a defendant's remark to a law enforcement official as to the defendant's willingness to plead guilty is a voluntary statement made subsequent to the defendant's receipt of Miranda warnings, and is not a response to an offer instituted by the officer, testimony about the remark is admissible. Stone v. State, 166 Ga. App. 245, 304 S.E.2d 94 (1983).

Court rejecting plea agreement when defendant not previously informed. — Trial court cannot reject a plea agreement, impose a greater sentence than that called for in the agreement, and deny the defendant's request to withdraw the defendant's plea if the court did not inform the defendant on the record that the court was not bound by the plea agreement and intended to reject the plea agreement. Jackson v. State, 172 Ga. App. 874, 324 S.E.2d 816 (1984).

Trial court's refusal to accept defendant's guilty plea upheld. Echols v. State, 167 Ga. App. 307, 306 S.E.2d 324 (1983).

Extrinsic evidence did not support finding right against self-incrimination was knowingly, intelligently, or voluntarily waived. — Mere speculation that an appellant inmate had been informed of all three of the Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1969) rights the inmate would be waiving by entering a guilty plea was insufficient to support a finding that extrinsic evidence showed that the inmate knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waived the inmate's right to self-incrimination, particularly in light of the fact that defense counsel testified during a hearing on the inmate's habeas petition that counsel did not recall what rights counsel might have discussed with the inmate but that it was not counsel's practice to get into the specifics of any particular right being waived. Denson v. Frazier, 284 Ga. 858, 672 S.E.2d 625 (2009).

Entry of Alford plea by juvenile. — Juvenile court erred by denying a juvenile's request to enter an Alford plea since the Georgia General Assembly did not expressly prohibit the entry of Alford pleas in juvenile court, and the juvenile court was required to construe O.C.G.A. § 15-11-580 liberally to ensure the juvenile's best interests. In the Interest of B. C., 333 Ga. App. 763, 777 S.E.2d 52 (2015).

Withdrawal of Pleas

Purpose of the withdrawal provision of this section was to provide a necessary part of the plea bargaining procedure. Fair v. State, 245 Ga. 868, 268 S.E.2d 316, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 986, 101 S. Ct. 407, 66 L. Ed. 2d 250 (1980).

District court did not err in dismissing as time-barred an inmate's 28 U.S.C. § 2254 petition because the inmate's untimely motion to withdraw the inmate's plea of guilty under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b) was not a "properly filed" application for state postconviction relief for purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(2)'s tolling provisions of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996's one-year time period for filing a 28 U.S.C. § 2254 petition. Colbert v. Head, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 17563 (11th Cir. Aug. 16, 2005) (Unpublished).

Withdrawal after term of court when sentence pronounced. — Trial court lacked jurisdiction to allow the defendant to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea when the term of court in which that defendant was sentenced expired. Tabatabaee v. State, 266 Ga. App. 462, 597 S.E.2d 518 (2004).

Trial court in February 2004 term of court lacked jurisdiction to allow the defendant to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea entered during the August 2003 term of court. State v. Manders, 271 Ga. App. 315, 609 S.E.2d 658 (2005).

It was not an abuse of discretion to deny the defendant's motion for a new trial, requested to facilitate the defendant's efforts to become a naturalized citizen, because the trial court considered that the defendant's sentence for giving a false name to an officer had long since been served, that six years had passed since sentencing, and that the sentence was within the statutory guidelines for misdemeanors; claims that the defendant's guilty plea was not voluntary were of no avail as the defendant failed to move to withdraw the plea or to appeal and the times for doing so had expired. Elias v. State, 272 Ga. App. 506, 613 S.E.2d 157 (2005).

Because the defendant did not move to withdraw the plea before sentencing pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b), which occurred when the trial court orally announced the sentence, but in fact, the withdrawal motion did not occur until after the term of court in which the plea was entered had expired, the trial court lacked jurisdiction to consider the motion. Storch v. State, 276 Ga. App. 789, 625 S.E.2d 70 (2005).

Trial court lacked jurisdiction to grant a motion to withdraw a guilty plea that was filed after the term of court expired in which the defendant was sentenced. Curry v. State, 274 Ga. App. 19, 616 S.E.2d 225 (2005).

When the defendant entered a guilty plea in 1997 and filed a motion to withdraw the guilty plea in 2006, the trial court was without jurisdiction to hear the motion because it was filed after the term of court in which the defendant was sentenced. Nhek v. State, 285 Ga. App. 186, 645 S.E.2d 683 (2007).

Trial court erred in dismissing the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea. The defendant retained a statutory right to withdrawal under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b) because the sentence imposed as a result of the guilty plea was void and the defendant had a right to withdrawal until a legal sentence was imposed. Kaiser v. State, 285 Ga. App. 63, 646 S.E.2d 84 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1275, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 696 (Ga. 2007).

When the record showed that a defendant waived a formal arraignment and pled guilty, a reading of the indictment was not required at the guilty plea hearing and there was no merit to the defendant's claim that the trial court should have granted the defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal because the defendant was not formally arraigned pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-91, or because the trial court did not read the indictment to the defendant pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93. Johnson v. State, 287 Ga. App. 759, 652 S.E.2d 836 (2007).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty pleas because the defendant did not move to withdraw the defendant's guilty pleas until the term of court following the term in which the defendant was sentenced; therefore, the defendant's only available means to withdraw the defendant's guilty pleas was through habeas corpus proceedings, and even if the defendant's motion had been timely, the defendant voluntarily and intelligently entered the defendant's guilty pleas. Loyd v. State, 288 Ga. 481, 705 S.E.2d 616, cert. dismissed, 565 U.S. 971, 132 S. Ct. 474, 181 L. Ed. 2d 309 (U.S. 2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea to possession of a controlled substance as the defendant entered the guilty plea seven years before the defendant filed a motion to withdraw; therefore, the trial court lacked jurisdiction to allow withdrawal of the plea under the general rule providing that a trial court lacked jurisdiction to allow the withdrawal of a guilty plea when the term of court had expired in which the defendant was sentenced. In light of those time limitations, it was too late for the defendant to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea seven years later, and nothing in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b) changed this. Simmons v. State, 315 Ga. App. 82, 726 S.E.2d 573 (2012).

Withdrawal denied in case of first offender. — Trial court did not err in instructing the defendant that the defendant would not be allowed to withdraw the Alford plea between the time the plea was entered and the pronouncement of the sentence; this instruction did not violate O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b) as that statute did not apply to pleas resulting in treatment as a first offender under the Georgia First Offender Act, O.C.G.A. § 42-8-60 et seq. Winkles v. State, 275 Ga. App. 351, 620 S.E.2d 594 (2005).

Legislative intent as to nolo contendere pleas. — General Assembly intended for the plea of nolo contendere to stand upon the same footing as a plea of guilty in all respects, except when otherwise specially provided, to constitute the remedy of the evil of the old law when only a plea of guilty or not guilty was available, and intended that the right to withdraw the plea be accorded any time before pronouncement of judgment as provided in this section as to a plea of guilty. Wright v. State, 75 Ga. App. 764, 44 S.E.2d 569 (1947).

Withdrawn guilty plea not admissible. — In two cousins' trial for the murder of a drug dealer, cousin one's trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance by failing to seek admission of statements that cousin two made, which exonerated cousin one, when cousin two attempted to plead guilty because under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b), cousin two's withdrawn guilty plea was not admissible. Esprit v. State, 305 Ga. 429, 826 S.E.2d 7 (2019).

Guilty plea may be withdrawn before sentence pronounced. — Before sentence is pronounced, the defendant may withdraw the defendant's plea of guilty as a matter of right. Welch v. State, 63 Ga. App. 277, 11 S.E.2d 42 (1940); Clark v. State, 72 Ga. App. 603, 34 S.E.2d 608 (1945); King v. State, 91 Ga. App. 388, 85 S.E.2d 637 (1955); Higgins v. State, 92 Ga. App. 739, 90 S.E.2d 40 (1955); Calloway v. State, 115 Ga. App. 158, 154 S.E.2d 291 (1967).

Before sentence is pronounced, the defendant has the right to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea. Galbreath v. State, 130 Ga. App. 179, 202 S.E.2d 562 (1973); Lee v. State, 139 Ga. App. 65, 227 S.E.2d 878 (1976); Weathers v. State, 149 Ga. App. 617, 255 S.E.2d 90 (1979).

Accused may withdraw a guilty plea at any time before judgment is announced and may then plead not guilty. Davis v. State, 151 Ga. App. 736, 261 S.E.2d 468 (1979).

Defendant can withdraw the defendant's plea at any time before the defendant's sentence is pronounced; therefore, when the defendant was clearly informed of both the maximum and the minimum sentence defendant could receive before the defendant's sentence was entered, the defendant could have withdrawn the defendant's plea before the trial court pronounced the defendant's sentence if the defendant found the minimum sentence to be unacceptable. Johnson v. State, 242 Ga. App. 89, 528 S.E.2d 861 (2000).

Trial court erred in denying the motion to withdraw the defendant's plea prior to resentencing the defendant on the incest count as the defendant had an absolute right to withdraw the plea before sentence was pronounced. Further, as the sentence imposed on the remaining counts was likewise void, the defendant was entitled to withdraw the defendant's plea as to the other five counts. Martinez-Chavez v. State, 352 Ga. App. 142, 834 S.E.2d 139 (2019).

Right is not qualified or limited. — Right given a defendant under this section to withdraw a plea of guilty and plead not guilty at any time before judgment was pronounced was not qualified or limited in any way. Fowler v. State, 41 Ga. App. 333, 153 S.E. 90 (1930).

Until sentence is pronounced upon a prisoner, the prisoner has an unlimited right to withdraw the prisoner's plea of guilty. McCrary v. State, 215 Ga. 887, 114 S.E.2d 133 (1960).

Defendant had an unqualified statutory right to withdraw a guilty plea at any time before judgment was pronounced by oral announcement of the sentence by the court, notwithstanding an assertion by the state that the defendant was precluded from withdrawing the defendant's agreement because the defendant entered a negotiated plea agreement and received certain benefits by virtue of the agreement. Chives v. State, 214 Ga. App. 786, 449 S.E.2d 152 (1994).

Trial court's denial of the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea was reversed; although the defendant signed a drug court contract obligating the defendant to undergo rehabilitation, the defendant was never sentenced and retained the ability to withdraw the plea as a matter of right. Stinson v. State,

264 Ga. App. 774, 592 S.E.2d 141 (2003).

Trial court must inform defendant of the right to withdraw a plea if a negotiated plea is rejected. This "bright line" rule cannot be satisfied with implicit rejection of a plea. Forrest v. State, 251 Ga. App. 487, 554 S.E.2d 735 (2001).

Trial court held a hearing on the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea, but did not appoint an attorney to represent the defendant or inform the defendant of the right to counsel; thus, the defendant's constitutional right to counsel during the plea proceedings was denied. Kennedy v. State, 267 Ga. App. 314, 599 S.E.2d 290 (2004).

Because the trial judge accepted the negotiated agreement upon the defendant's entering of an Alford plea to a particular charge, there was no requirement that the defendant be informed about the right to withdraw the plea prior to judgment being pronounced, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b); such information to the defendant was only required if the trial court intended to reject the negotiated plea agreement. Storch v. State, 276 Ga. App. 789, 625 S.E.2d 70 (2005).

Oral sentence not reduced to writing could be changed with notice to defendant. — Although a magistrate who was appointed to preside at a county drug court pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 15-1-9.1(b)(2) had authority to accept a defendant's guilty plea to marijuana possession, the superior court judge had the power to set aside the sentence, which was not reduced to writing, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b), give notice of intent to impose a harsher sentence, and allow the defendant to withdraw the defendant's plea. Surh v. State, 303 Ga. App. 380, 693 S.E.2d 501, cert. denied, No. S10C1274, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 705 (Ga. 2010).

Plea may be withdrawn of right after dismissal and discharge of jurors. — Accused has the right to withdraw a guilty plea prior to judgment even after the witnesses have been dismissed and the jurors have been discharged in reliance upon the guilty plea. Nobles v. State, 17 Ga. App. 382, 86 S.E. 1073 (1915); Burkett v. State, 131 Ga. App. 177, 205 S.E.2d 496 (1974).

Exercise of the right to withdraw a guilty plea is not hampered or impaired by the fact that in reliance on the earlier plea of guilty witnesses and jurors may have been dismissed. Hardman v. State, 143 Ga. App. 689, 239 S.E.2d 699 (1977).

Pleas may be withdrawn even though sentence has been delayed at defendant's own instance. Nobles v. State, 17 Ga. App. 382, 86 S.E. 1073 (1915).

Right to withdraw plea is restricted to period before sentence is pronounced. — Reducing to writing of the trial judge's probation sentence and the filing of the sentence with the clerk of the court was sufficient compliance with former Code 1933, § 27-1404 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93) so as to prevent the withdrawal of the plea of guilty as a matter of right. Davenport v. State, 136 Ga. App. 913, 222 S.E.2d 644 (1975).

Right to withdraw a plea of guilty ceases after sentence is entered. Gray v. State, 157 Ga. App. 745, 278 S.E.2d 457 (1981).

Defendant no longer has an absolute statutory right to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea after the trial court announces the sentence. Fair v. Zant, 715 F.2d 1519 (11th Cir. 1983).

Oral pronouncement of sentence by the trial court ends any absolute statutory right to withdraw a guilty plea. Coleman v. State, 256 Ga. 77, 343 S.E.2d 695 (1986).

Defendant does not have an absolute statutory right to withdraw a guilty plea after the trial court's oral announcement of the sentence. Stevens v. State, 202 Ga. App. 473, 414 S.E.2d 702 (1992).

Defendant did not have the right to withdraw the defendant's plea after the trial court pronounced the defendant's sentence, even though the defendant tried to do so before the court addressed the defendant's request to reduce the sentence. Manues v. State, 232 Ga. App. 454, 501 S.E.2d 826 (1998).

Even though the defendant's motion to withdraw a plea was signed the day before sentence was pronounced, because the motion was not filed until five days after sentence was pronounced, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the motion. Isaac v. State, 237 Ga. App. 723, 516 S.E.2d 575 (1999).

Since the defendant did not move to withdraw the defendant's non-negotiated plea until after the trial court pronounced sentence, the defendant had no right to withdraw the plea. Brassfield v. State, 242 Ga. App. 747, 531 S.E.2d 148 (2000).

Absolute right to withdrawal lost once written sentence entered. — When the trial court simply neglects to pronounce orally the sentence at the plea hearing but does enter a written judgment of sentence, a defendant loses the defendant's absolute right to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea at the time the written sentence is filed and any motion to withdraw the plea must be made in the same term of court in which the sentence was filed. Barton v. State, 331 Ga. App. 887, 769 S.E.2d 96 (2015).

After sentence pronounced, withdrawal is within court's discretion. — Motion to withdraw a plea of guilty after sentence is pronounced is within the sound legal discretion of the court. Bearden v. State, 13 Ga. App. 264, 79 S.E. 79 (1913); Clark v. State, 72 Ga. App. 603, 34 S.E.2d 608 (1945); Rowland v. State, 72 Ga. App. 793, 35 S.E.2d 372 (1945); Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945); King v. State, 91 Ga. App. 388, 85 S.E.2d 637 (1955); Higgins v. State, 92 Ga. App. 739, 90 S.E.2d 40 (1955); McCrary v. State, 215 Ga. 887, 114 S.E.2d 133 (1960); Holston v. State, 103 Ga. App. 373, 119 S.E.2d 302 (1961); Calloway v. State, 115 Ga. App. 158, 154 S.E.2d 291 (1967); Marshall v. State, 128 Ga. App. 413, 197 S.E.2d 161 (1973); Thomas v. State, 231 Ga. 298, 201 S.E.2d 415 (1973); Galbreath v. State, 130 Ga. App. 179, 202 S.E.2d 562 (1973); Ballard v. State, 131 Ga. App. 847, 207 S.E.2d 246 (1974); Lee v. State, 139 Ga. App. 65, 227 S.E.2d 878 (1976); Weathers v. State, 149 Ga. App. 617, 255 S.E.2d 90 (1979); Davis v. State, 151 Ga. App. 736, 261 S.E.2d 468 (1979); Crump v. State, 154 Ga. App. 359, 268 S.E.2d 411 (1980); Dankert v. State, 154 Ga. App. 392, 268 S.E.2d 435 (1980); Miller v. State, 160 Ga. App. 639, 287 S.E.2d 643 (1981).

When a motion to withdraw a plea of guilty is made after the sentence is entered in writing and handed to the clerk, the granting or refusal thereof is in the sound discretion of the trial judge. King v. State, 91 Ga. App. 388, 85 S.E.2d 637 (1955).

After a sentence has been filed with the clerk, it is discretionary with the trial judge whether the judge will permit withdrawal. Duncan v. State, 148 Ga. App. 685, 252 S.E.2d 190 (1979).

Accused may withdraw a guilty plea at any time before judgment is announced and may then plead not guilty. However, once sentence is pronounced, a withdrawal of a plea is within the sound discretion of the court. Kight v. State, 158 Ga. App. 698, 282 S.E.2d 176 (1981); Bowens v. State, 194 Ga. App. 391, 390 S.E.2d 634 (1990); Threatt v. State, 211 Ga. App. 630, 440 S.E.2d 61 (1994), overruled on other grounds, 266 Ga. 657, 469 S.E.2d 22 (1996).

Defendant may withdraw the defendant's plea of guilty as a matter of right before sentence is pronounced, but after the pronouncement of a sentence, a ruling on a motion to withdraw a guilty plea is within the sound discretion of the trial court and this discretion will not be disturbed on appeal unless manifestly abused. DeLapuente v. State, 182 Ga. App. 808, 357 S.E.2d 155 (1987); Dalton v. State, 244 Ga. App. 203, 534 S.E.2d 523 (2000); Rowe v. State, 246 Ga. App. 855, 542 S.E.2d 578 (2000).

Offer to allow the defendant to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea if the defendant was not satisfied with the sentence expired by virtue of the defendant's failure to respond when sentence was pronounced. Freeman v. State, 211 Ga. App. 716, 440 S.E.2d 490 (1994).

After a guilty plea has been accepted and sentence has been pronounced, whether to allow a defendant to withdraw a guilty plea is within the discretion of the trial count, and the trial court's decision will not be disturbed on appeal unless the court has manifestly abused the court's discretion. Whitesides v. State, 266 Ga. App. 181, 596 S.E.2d 706 (2004).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea to charges of trafficking in methamphetamine and possession of marijuana as the defendant acknowledged, and the record showed, that the trial court advised the defendant of the maximum allowable sentence on both a trafficking in methamphetamine and possession of marijuana charge, as well as the mandatory minimum sentence on the former offense; further, despite the fact that the waiver of rights form the defendant signed incorrectly stated that the maximum term of imprisonment was 30 years, rather than 31 years, given the aforementioned, the mistake did not amount to a manifest injustice requiring reversal of the court's refusal to allow withdrawal. Rodriguez v. State, 280 Ga. App. 423, 634 S.E.2d 182 (2006).

Even if a prior ruling did not preclude consideration of the voluntariness of the defendant's plea, as the defendant did not raise in the trial court the issue of the defendant's mental competence to enter a plea, the defendant was precluded from raising it on appeal; therefore, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the guilty plea. Adams v. State, 316 Ga. App. 161, 728 S.E.2d 711 (2012).

Appellate court's reversal did not give right to withdraw plea. — In the context of a defendant's absolute right to withdraw a guilty plea pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b), the appellate court's reversal of an amendment to the sentence did not give defendant an absolute right to withdraw the plea as defendant's sentence of life in prison was still valid. Shaheed v. State, 276 Ga. 291, 578 S.E.2d 119 (2003).

When the defendant pled guilty to aggravated assault, armed robbery, and robbery, and the defendant's aggravated assault convictions and sentences were vacated on appeal, the defendant had no right, on remand, to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea as to the other convictions because there was no basis to find the separate and distinct sentences entered on those convictions were void. Murray v. State, 314 Ga. App. 240, 723 S.E.2d 531 (2012).

Withdrawal after term of court when sentence pronounced. — Trial court has no authority to permit a defendant to withdraw the defendant's plea after the term of court when sentence was pronounced. State v. Kight, 175 Ga. App. 65, 332 S.E.2d 363 (1985).

If sentence already had been pronounced prior to the defendant's filing a motion to withdraw a guilty plea, and the term of court at which the judgment was entered had also passed, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the motion. Hughes v. State, 176 Ga. App. 443, 336 S.E.2d 346 (1985).

After the expiration of the term of court in which the sentence was entered and the time for filing an appeal from the conviction, the only remedy available to the defendant would be through habeas corpus proceedings. Staley v. State, 184 Ga. App. 402, 361 S.E.2d 702 (1987).

Because a trial court lacked jurisdiction to entertain a motion to withdraw a guilty plea filed after the term of court in which the defendant was sentenced under the plea, the trial court properly dismissed the defendant's motion based on a lack of jurisdiction. Smith v. State, 283 Ga. 376, 659 S.E.2d 380 (2008).

Court's judgment on withdrawal will not be set aside unless abused. Rowland v. State, 72 Ga. App. 793, 35 S.E.2d 372 (1945); King v. State, 91 Ga. App. 388, 85 S.E.2d 637 (1955).

Discretion of the trial judge will not be controlled absent a showing of a clear abuse of discretion. Calloway v. State, 115 Ga. App. 158, 154 S.E.2d 291 (1967).

Court's discretion was not to be disturbed on the appellate level unless manifestly abused. Thomas v. State, 231 Ga. 298, 201 S.E.2d 415 (1973); Davis v. State, 151 Ga. App. 736, 261 S.E.2d 468 (1979).

Court's discretion as regards withdrawal of a guilty plea will not be disturbed unless there is a manifest abuse of discretion. Kight v. State, 158 Ga. App. 698, 282 S.E.2d 176 (1981).

Ruling on a motion to withdraw a guilty plea lies within the sound discretion of the trial court and will not be disturbed absent a manifest abuse of such discretion. Johnson v. State, 260 Ga. App. 897, 581 S.E.2d 407 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea as: (1) the defendant's counsel was not ineffective; (2) no evidence of coercion was presented; (3) if the defendant proceeded to trial, the defendant's counsel would have been prepared; and (4) the defendant elected not to pursue a motion for replacement counsel; even assuming that counsel's performance was somehow deficient, the defendant failed to show a reasonable probability that, but for the allegedly deficient performance, the defendant would have elected to proceed to trial. Muckle v. State, 283 Ga. App. 395, 641 S.E.2d 603 (2007).

Adverse unanticipated collateral consequences are not valid reasons for reversal of the trial court's refusal to withdraw a plea. Davis v. State, 151 Ga. App. 736, 261 S.E.2d 468 (1979).

Manner in which discretion to be exercised. — Trial court's discretion must be exercised, not in opposition to, but in accordance with, established rules of law. King v. State, 91 Ga. App. 388, 85 S.E.2d 637 (1955).

In exercising the court's discretion, the trial judge settles all conflicts in evidence and is the exclusive arbiter of the facts. Holston v. State, 103 Ga. App. 373, 119 S.E.2d 302 (1961).

Test for withdrawal of plea after sentencing. — Question in considering whether or not to allow the withdrawal of a plea of guilty after sentencing is whether the defendant entered the plea freely and voluntarily, without any hope of benefit. Rowland v. State, 72 Ga. App. 793, 35 S.E.2d 372 (1945).

Defendant's argument that the defendant had an absolute right to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea in its entirety before resentencing because a portion of the defendant's original sentence was vacated was rejected as case law precedent established that since only a discrete provision of the defendant's sentence was invalidated, the defendant was ineligible to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea. Troutman v. State, 348 Ga. App. 375, 823 S.E.2d 66 (2019).

Guilty plea freely and voluntarily entered. — Because a trial judge informed the defendant of the charges as well as the possible penalties for conviction on those charges, the defendant's guilty plea was freely and voluntarily entered; the defendant failed to show that counsel's trial strategies were ineffective, and consequently, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the guilty pleas. Hart v. State, 272 Ga. App. 754, 613 S.E.2d 107 (2005).

Trial court did not err by denying a defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea as the plea was entered knowingly and intelligently since: (1) the trial court found a sufficient factual basis for the plea, determined that the defendant understood and voluntarily entered the plea, and correctly informed the defendant of the possible sentences the defendant could receive; and (2) the trial court further informed the defendant of the rights the defendant was waiving by pleading guilty, including the defendant's rights to remain silent, to trial by jury, to subpoena and confront witnesses, and to testify. Rios v. State, 281 Ga. 181, 637 S.E.2d 20 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea as the trial court was well aware of the medications the defendant was taking when the plea was entered, the medications did not affect the defendant's ability to understand the proceedings, and an expert opined that the defendant was feigning hallucinations and was competent to stand trial; hence, at that point, the trial court had no duty to make any further inquiries into the defendant's ability to competently tender a plea. McDowell v. State, 282 Ga. App. 754, 639 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

Because: (1) the record adequately showed that the defendant voluntarily entered a non-negotiated guilty plea, with a full understanding of the rights waived and the sentence which could have been imposed; (2) the trial court reviewed the relevant Boykin questions; and (3) the defendant had ample time to discuss the plea with counsel and was not rushed or forced to enter the plea, the trial court did not err in denying withdrawal of the guilty plea. Brown v. State, 285 Ga. App. 119, 645 S.E.2d 606 (2007).

In light of the record which showed that the defendant: (1) was well advised during the guilty plea hearing that the sentence recommended by the state was without the possibility of parole; (2) was given the option to enter the plea or proceed to a jury trial; (3) discussed the entry of the guilty plea with counsel; and (4) chose to accept the negotiated plea offer, the trial court properly rejected the defendant's claim that the state failed to show that the plea was entered intelligently and voluntarily; thus, the defendant's post-sentence motion to withdraw the guilty plea was properly denied. Moore v. State, 286 Ga. App. 99, 648 S.E.2d 451 (2007).

Because the defendant failed to show sufficient evidence of a psychological impairment, due in part by ceasing to take needed medication, sleep deprivation, racing thoughts or other psychological turmoil, or that trial counsel was ineffective as to counsel's advice regarding sentencing as a recidivist under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-7, the appeals court agreed that a guilty plea was intelligently and voluntarily entered; thus, the trial court properly denied a motion to withdraw the guilty plea. Frost v. State, 286 Ga. App. 694, 649 S.E.2d 878 (2007).

Because the defendant failed to show that counsel's ineffectiveness warranted an order allowing the withdrawal of a guilty plea, or that a manifest injustice resulted due to counsel's ineffective assistance, but the record amply demonstrated that the defendant's plea was knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily entered, the trial court properly denied a motion to withdraw the plea; moreover, the defendant's position ignored the state's other evidence that the state would have presented supporting the defendant's guilt had the case gone to trial. Sallins v. State, 289 Ga. App. 391, 657 S.E.2d 309 (2008).

Trial court properly denied withdrawal of the defendant's guilty plea because the record sufficiently showed that: (1) the defendant entered a guilty plea to two counts of child molestation both knowingly and voluntarily, and in recognition of the rights being waived, absent any coercion or hope; and (2) the sentence was properly imposed, absent any proof that defense counsel was ineffective. Geyer v. State, 289 Ga. App. 492, 657 S.E.2d 878 (2008).

Defendant voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently entered into a plea of guilty to, inter alia, aggravated stalking because while the defendant thought the plea involved a reduced charge with no prison time, the defendant's trial counsel gave contradictory evidence, which was supported by the plea proceeding record; additionally, although the prosecutor conducted the plea colloquy and questioned the defendant about the waiver of the defendant's rights, such was not a ground for reversal. Ransom v. State, 293 Ga. App. 651, 667 S.E.2d 686 (2008).

Failure to advise of rights. — Because an inmate was not advised at a plea hearing of the right to confront witnesses and to avoid self-incrimination by either the defense attorney or the sentencing court, the inmate did not make a knowing and intelligent waiver of those rights; therefore, the trial court erred by denying the inmate's petition for habeas corpus. Johnson v. Smith, 280 Ga. 235, 626 S.E.2d 470 (2006).

Counsel ineffective for failing to inform defendant of right to withdraw plea. — Defendant's conviction based on a guilty plea was properly set aside because the defendant did not waive a statutory right to withdraw the guilty plea at any time prior to sentencing as there was no indication in the sentencing transcript that such a waiver was made; no reasonable attorney providing constitutionally effective representation would fail to inform the defendant of an absolute statutory right to withdraw a plea when the attorney had obtained new information that changed the attorney's assessment of the defendant's case and had not yet fully discussed that information and its relevance with the defendant; and there was prejudice as the defendant would have withdrawn the guilty plea prior to sentencing and continued with trial. Nelson v. Wilkey, No. S20A0013, 2020 Ga. LEXIS 468 (June 29, 2020).

Grounds for discretionary withdrawal of plea generally. — After sentence, the judge may permit a guilty plea to be withdrawn upon meritorious grounds addressed to the judge's discretion. Welch v. State, 63 Ga. App. 277, 11 S.E.2d 42 (1940).

Defendant should be permitted to withdraw the defendant's plea, even after sentence is pronounced, upon reasonable grounds being timely shown and when the ends of justice dictate such a course, and the discretion vested in the trial courts in such matters should always be exercised in favor of innocence, liberty, and justice. Calloway v. State, 115 Ga. App. 158, 154 S.E.2d 291 (1967).

Trial court erred in refusing to allow the defendant to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea since the court did not inform the defendant personally that: (1) the trial court was not bound by any plea agreement; (2) the trial court intended to reject the plea agreement presently before the court; (3) the disposition of the present case could be less favorable to defendant than that contemplated by the plea agreement; and (4) the defendant could then withdraw the defendant's plea as a matter of right. Gordon v. State, 190 Ga. App. 414, 379 S.E.2d 221 (1989).

Trial court abused the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea when, even though the defendant gave the attorney power of attorney to enter a plea, there was no showing that the defendant knew the defendant was waiving specific federal rights, or that the defendant understood the nature of the charges against the defendant or consequences of the defendant's plea. Parks v. State, 223 Ga. App. 694, 479 S.E.2d 3 (1996).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to withdraw defendant's guilty plea to the offense of first-degree homicide by vehicle as the evidence showed that the plea was knowingly and voluntarily made, and that the defendant understood the nature of the offense and the consequences of the defendant's plea; moreover, the evidence did not show that the defendant's plea was made due to any ineffective assistance rendered by the defendant's counsel who properly prepared the defendant's case and advised the defendant about the sentence the defendant might receive. David v. State, 261 Ga. App. 468, 583 S.E.2d 135 (2003).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea in a case where the defendant pled guilty to charges of voluntary manslaughter and aggravated stalking involving the death of a woman who was stabbed 24 times as the trial court first determined that there was a factual basis for the plea and, thus, the record showed that the defendant knowingly and voluntarily pled guilty to the charges. Brown v. State, 261 Ga. App. 448, 582 S.E.2d 588 (2003).

When the defendant, at the defendant's sentencing hearing, presented evidence on the defendant's behalf without objection and with knowledge of the maximum possible punishment the defendant might face by entering a guilty plea, and had an opportunity to address the trial court but said nothing to indicate that the defendant had doubts about entering the guilty plea, the trial court's finding that the defendant did not demonstrate ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's failure to move to withdraw the guilty plea was affirmed. Voils v. State, 266 Ga. App. 738, 598 S.E.2d 33 (2004).

Fraud in obtaining plea as basis for withdrawal. — Exception to the rule that withdrawal is in the court's discretion occurs in cases where fraud has been practiced to obtain the plea of guilty. Griffin v. State, 12 Ga. App. 615, 77 S.E. 1080 (1913); Sanders v. State, 18 Ga. App. 786, 90 S.E. 728 (1916). See also Woodward v. State, 13 Ga. App. 130, 78 S.E. 1009 (1913); Polston v. State, 15 Ga. App. 632, 83 S.E. 1101 (1915).

Unawareness of waiver of privilege against self incrimination. — While Boykin does not command the use of any precise "magic words" in establishing that a defendant understands the rights the defendant is waiving by pleading guilty, the habeas court erred in finding that the state met the state's burden of establishing that the defendant's guilty plea was made voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently because the record failed to show that any comment by the trial court, or by the defendant's counsel, informed the defendant that by pleading guilty the defendant would waive the privilege against compulsory self-incrimination. Arnold v. Howerton, 282 Ga. 66, 646 S.E.2d 75 (2007).

Misunderstanding or being misled by counsel. — Defendant's mere contention that the defendant did not understand or was misled by the defendant's own counsel affords no basis for withdrawal of the defendant's plea of guilty. Marshall v. State, 128 Ga. App. 413, 197 S.E.2d 161 (1973).

When counsel's testimony contradicted the defendant's testimony regarding the nature and quantity of consultation and counsel's decision not to consider a coindictee as a valuable witness was strategic or tactical, the defendant's guilty plea was not void due to ineffective assistance of counsel. McCutchen v. State, 276 Ga. 532, 579 S.E.2d 732 (2003).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea on grounds that the defendant's attorney failed to inform the defendant that the defendant's plea was open-ended as opposed to negotiated, where the plea transcript showed that the defendant was well aware that the plea was open-ended; that the defendant understood the consequences of the plea; and that the defendant entered the defendant's plea freely, knowingly, and voluntarily with a full understanding that the defendant was subject to the maximum sentence. Dudley v. State, 266 Ga. App. 336, 596 S.E.2d 772 (2004).

Defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea was properly denied as the defendant failed to show that the defense counsel's performance was deficient in advising the defendant to enter a non-negotiated plea without a recommendation from the state; the defendant did not overcome the presumption that the defense counsel's conduct was reasonable. The defendant's testimony that the defense counsel led the defendant to believe that the defendant's sentence would be no more than ten years was contradicted by the evidence. Brown v. State, 280 Ga. App. 767, 634 S.E.2d 875 (2006).

Defendant failed to show that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel with regard to being coerced or deceived by counsel as to length of sentence that could be imposed, and the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea entered into because the record did not support the defendant's claim that counsel deceived the defendant about the length of the sentence as the defendant was advised of the maximum possible sentence and was told that there was no guarantee as to the length of sentence that would be imposed. Brantley v. State, 290 Ga. App. 764, 660 S.E.2d 846 (2008).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea to a charge of malice murder because sufficient evidence was presented to support a finding that: (1) counsel did not render ineffective assistance in advising the defendant as to the plea; (2) counsel attempted, albeit unsuccessfully to pursue a voluntary manslaughter defense and plea deal with the state; (3) the defendant was generally competent at the time of the murder; (4) a statement by a proposed expert witness in support of said defense would have been inadmissible as an opinion on the ultimate issue and could not, in any event, have helped the defendant's case; and (5) the viability of any type of voluntary manslaughter defense was highly unlikely. Trauth v. State, 283 Ga. 141, 657 S.E.2d 225 (2008).

Effective assistance of counsel supported denial of motion to withdraw guilty plea. — Because the defendant failed to show that prejudice resulted from counsel's failure to convey that the state's negotiated plea offer had a time limit, but the evidence instead showed that the defendant had no intent to accept the offer and immediately and strongly rejected the offer, the trial court properly denied a motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea based on an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Burch v. State, 289 Ga. App. 388, 657 S.E.2d 294 (2008).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying a defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea because the defendant failed to prove the prejudice prong of the defendant's ineffectiveness claim since, at the hearing on the motion to withdraw the plea, the defendant proffered no evidence that a deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) test pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 5-5-41 would have rebutted the state's evidence, regarding the defendant's incest conviction pursuant to

O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22, that the defendant and the victim were half-siblings; in addition, counsel's strategy to forego a DNA test was one of trial tactics and did not provide a basis on which to find that counsel's representation was deficient. Hunter v. State, 294 Ga. App. 583, 669 S.E.2d 533 (2008).

Since the record did not support defendant's claim that the defendant was coerced into pleading guilty and the defendant did not show that the trial court erred in requiring a new bond, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to reduce or modify the sentence. Crumpton v. State, 267 Ga. App. 332, 599 S.E.2d 297 (2004).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's plea withdrawal motion as the court fully informed the defendant that the sentence the court intended on imposing would be without parole, despite failing to advise the defendant of that factor prior to the acceptance of the plea. Thomas v. State, 287 Ga. App. 500, 651 S.E.2d 801 (2007).

Because the defendant failed to present the testimony of either trial counsel to support a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel and, thus, the record of the new trial hearing was silent as to what actions were taken by counsel to prepare for the plea or to investigate the ramifications of the previous plea, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's withdrawal of the plea. Jackson v. State, 288 Ga. App. 742, 655 S.E.2d 323 (2007).

Showing of reason for disavowing statement. — Defendant should not be permitted to disavow a statement reflecting the consequences of a guilty plea without a showing demonstrating a good reason to disregard it. Anderson v. State, 194 Ga. App. 395, 390 S.E.2d 637 (1990).

Erroneous denial of motion to withdraw plea. — See Rowland v. State, 72 Ga. App. 793, 35 S.E.2d 372 (1945); Strickland v. State, 199 Ga. 792, 35 S.E.2d 463 (1945).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal of the denial of the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea. It was obvious that the defendant had attempted to appeal the denial of the defendant's motion to withdraw and that the defendant's request for counsel to help the defendant pursue the defendant's appeal had never been ruled upon; prejudice was presumed and the harmless error analysis did not apply since there had been a total denial of the assistance of counsel. Stockton v. State, 298 Ga. App. 84, 679 S.E.2d 109 (2009).

Motion to withdraw plea properly denied. — As counsel did not render ineffective assistance, denial of the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea, which argued that the defendant was forced to plead guilty to possession of a firearm by a convicted felon due to defense counsel's ineffective assistance, was not an abuse of discretion. Johnson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 641, 618 S.E.2d 716 (2005).

Denial of a motion to withdraw a guilty plea was proper because: (1) the record showed that the defendant knowingly and voluntarily withdrew the pre-sentencing motion to change the plea to not guilty; (2) the trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance in failing to obtain a psychiatric evaluation as there was no showing that the evaluation would have shown the existence of a psychiatric defense; and (3) speculation was insufficient to satisfy the prejudice prong of Strickland. Terrell v. State, 274 Ga. App. 539, 618 S.E.2d 175 (2005).

Probationer, who elected to plead guilty and underwent alternative treatment in a Drug Court program offered under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-2(a), was not entitled to credit for time spent in treatment when the probationer was subsequently terminated from the program and sentenced on the original crime; moreover, a defendant in the probationer's position, who pled guilty and utilized the benefits of a rehabilitative option in order to avoid an adjudication of guilt, could not withdraw the plea as a matter of right under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b). Stinson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 107, 630 S.E.2d 553 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's extraordinary motion to set aside a plea, which was treated as a motion to withdraw the guilty plea, as the state met the state's burden of showing that the defendant entered the plea knowingly and voluntarily, and there was no manifest injustice shown by the denial of the post-sentence request to withdraw pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b). Williams v. State, 279 Ga. App. 388, 631 S.E.2d 417 (2006).

Defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea was properly denied since: (1) the defense counsel was not ineffective; (2) the state showed that the plea was knowing, intelligent, and voluntary; (3) the trial court was entitled to discredit contradictory testimony given by the defendant at the motion to withdraw the plea hearing; and (4) the defendant's claim that the defendant had nothing to gain by entering a "blind" plea failed as even assuming merger of the charges, for sentencing purposes, the defendant still would have faced an additional five years' to serve if the defendant had not pled guilty. Brown v. State, 280 Ga. App. 767, 634 S.E.2d 875 (2006).

Trial court did not err by denying a motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea due to ineffective assistance of counsel at the plea hearing as: (1) counsel met with the defendant several times prior to the plea hearing, reviewed the district attorney's file, and discussed with the defendant the state's evidence; (2) counsel moved to suppress the defendant's statements to the police and discussed the options available with the defendant after the motion was denied, including the state's offer of a plea recommendation; and (3) the defendant failed to show how additional communication with counsel would have changed the defendant's decision to enter a guilty plea. Rios v. State, 281 Ga. 181, 637 S.E.2d 20 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's post-sentence motion to withdraw a guilty plea because the defendant failed to show the ineffective assistance of trial counsel in incorrectly assessing the strength of the state's case and recognizing the existence of exculpatory evidence; moreover, any coercion the defendant experienced did not manifest itself from counsel's actions, but arose from the circumstances the defendant felt during the entire hearing process. Collier v. State, 281 Ga. App. 646, 637 S.E.2d 72 (2006).

Trial court's order denying the defendant's motion to withdraw a nolo contendere plea was upheld on appeal as the court was authorized to reject the defendant's self-serving evidence to find that the plea was freely, knowingly, and voluntarily entered; moreover, the defendant's coercion claims did not trump the court's authority to find the same. Patel v. State, 283 Ga. App. 181, 641 S.E.2d 184 (2006).

Because no evidence was presented to support the defendant's claims that a guilty plea was involuntarily entered, made as a result of duress or threats by the state, entered while the defendant was under the influence, or because trial counsel was ineffective, the trial court properly denied the defendant's amended motion to withdraw the plea. Schlau v. State, 282 Ga. App. 460, 638 S.E.2d 895 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0424, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 147 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's plea withdrawal motion on ineffective assistance of counsel grounds as the evidence showed that trial counsel made a reasonable strategic decision, based on the defendant's own statements that failed to show standing, not to move for suppression of the evidence seized pursuant to an allegedly defective warrant affidavit, and as a result, the defendant failed to show prejudice based upon that failure. Lawton v. State, 285 Ga. App. 45, 645 S.E.2d 571 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1244, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 670 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court properly dismissed the defendant's motion to correct an allegedly void felony sentence as the sentence was authorized by the law in existence at the time of the defendant's statutory rape convictions, and the defendant failed to seek withdrawal of the guilty pleas which led to the same as a prerequisite to challenge the sentence imposed; thus, any further relief had to be sought through a petition for habeas corpus. McClendon v. State, 287 Ga. App. 515, 651 S.E.2d 820 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0222, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 174 (Ga. 2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal based on a withdrawal of a guilty plea since the record sufficiently showed that despite initially withdrawing the plea, the defendant negotiated another plea with the state and never again moved to withdraw the plea. Robertson v. State, 287 Ga. App. 271, 651 S.E.2d 198 (2007).

Because the defendant waived issues concerning the effectiveness of the plea attorney's representation, and failed to make a strong showing that a motion to suppress would have been meritorious, the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea on grounds that counsel was ineffective was properly denied. Hammett v. State, 288 Ga. App. 255, 653 S.E.2d 852 (2007).

Order modifying the trial court's prior banishment order imposed as a condition of the defendant's probation was upheld on appeal as was the denial of the defendant's motion to withdraw a negotiated plea, because: (1) the defendant's sentence was independent, and thus, not part of the negotiated plea agreement; and (2) the trial court adequately considered that the defendant's crimes were likely motivated by the relationship the defendant had with the victim, the defendant's ex-spouse, where the ex-spouse resided and worked, as well as where the ex-spouse's immediate family lived, by determining that the banishment order was issued to protect those affected, but also served a rehabilitative purpose by removing a temptation by the defendant to re-offend. Hallford v. State, 289 Ga. App. 350, 657 S.E.2d 10 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's withdrawal of a plea of guilty to a charge of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon on grounds that the plea was involuntarily entered as the record adequately showed that the trial court informed the defendant of all the constitutional rights that would be waived upon the entry of that plea. Davis v. State, 289 Ga. App. 526, 657 S.E.2d 609 (2008).

Based on the plea hearing transcript and the testimony of the defendant's attorney, the trial court was authorized to reject the defendant's claim that the defendant's Alford plea had not been knowing and voluntary and therefore properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the plea. The fact that the defendant's interpreter did not testify at the plea withdrawal hearing provided no basis for reversal. Luviano v. State, 291 Ga. App. 677, 662 S.E.2d 770 (2008).

Defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea was properly denied when the defendant claimed that trial counsel was ineffective by misinforming the defendant that the defendant's sentence would run concurrently with any imposed by Tennessee for a parole violation and that the sentence would be served in Tennessee. The motion had been filed well beyond the term of court in which the defendant was sentenced and thus was outside the trial court's jurisdiction; furthermore, the trial court was entitled to give credit to counsel's testimony and documents indicating that the Georgia and Tennessee sentences were indeed running concurrently and to counsel's testimony that the defendant had been forewarned that the defendant might not be able to serve the sentence in Tennessee. Maples v. State, 293 Ga. App. 232, 666 S.E.2d 609 (2008).

As the transcript of a guilty plea hearing showed the defendant knew the rights the defendant was waiving and the possible consequences of a guilty plea to child molestation, the defendant's former counsel testified the defendant expressed no doubts about the guilty plea, and only the defendant's self-serving testimony indicated the defendant was impaired or under duress when the guilty plea was entered, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the plea. Likely v. State, 293 Ga. App. 484, 667 S.E.2d 648 (2008).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea based on ineffective assistance under the Sixth Amendment. The record showed that trial counsel, who obtained discovery materials, investigated the case, spoke to the victim and other eyewitnesses, and met with the defendant, was adequately prepared to try the case; moreover, the defendant did not show that additional trial preparation would likely have changed reasonable counsel's advice regarding the guilty plea or the outcome of a trial. Hammett v. State, 297 Ga. App. 235, 676 S.E.2d 880 (2009).

There was no merit to the defendant's argument that a guilty plea was invalid because the defendant, who was 17 at the time of the offense and entered the plea over a year later, did not have the opportunity to speak to the defendant's parent before entry of the plea and because the parent was not present in the courtroom. The defendant cited no authority for this contention, and the trial court made careful inquiry showing that the defendant fully understood the nature of the charges and the rights the defendant was relinquishing; accordingly, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's plea on this ground. Robertson v. State, 297 Ga. App. 228, 676 S.E.2d 871 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1300, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 406 (Ga. 2009).

Because the defendant failed to show the manifest injustice necessary to authorize post-sentence withdrawal of the defendant's guilty plea, the trial court did not err when the court denied the defendant's motion to withdraw. Among other evidence, the transcript showed that the assistant district attorney informed the defendant that the defendant was pleading guilty under the repeat offender statute. Leonard v. State, 297 Ga. App. 515, 677 S.E.2d 726 (2009).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea to voluntary manslaughter. Pretermitting whether counsel's performance was deficient, the defendant failed to establish a reasonable probability that the defendant would have insisted on a trial if the defendant had always known the defendant could be sentenced to serve 15 years instead of ten; furthermore, the defendant would have been tried for felony murder had the defendant gone to trial. Johnson v. State, 298 Ga. App. 197, 679 S.E.2d 763 (2009).

Because the defendant failed to preserve an argument that the defendant's guilty plea was voidable as a matter of law under O.C.G.A. § 13-3-20, and because the transcript from the plea hearing showed on its face that the plea was entered knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the plea. Boykins v. State, 298 Ga. App. 654, 680 S.E.2d 665 (2009).

Because a police officer was authorized to stop the defendant's vehicle based on a suspicion that the defendant had illegally dumped trash, and because the defendant consented to a search of the vehicle, the items seized from the vehicle would not have been suppressed; accordingly, the defendant's ineffective assistance claim failed, and the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's Alford plea. Bishop v. State, 299 Ga. App. 241, 682 S.E.2d 201 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea because the state met the state's burden by showing from the record that the defendant was cognizant of the rights the defendant was waiving and of the possible consequences of the defendant's plea, and the defendant confirmed that the defendant had read and fully understood the charges pending against the defendant and understood that by pleading guilty the defendant gave up the defendant's right to trial by jury; the defendant understood that while the defendant's attorney would make a sentence recommendation, the trial court could sentence the defendant up to the maximum permitted by law, and the defendant testified that no one used force, threats, or promises to make the defendant plead guilty against the defendant's will, that the defendant was satisfied with the services of the defendant's attorney, that the defendant's decision to plead guilty was made freely and voluntarily, that the defendant committed the offenses, and that the facts outlined by the state were accurate. Lavendar v. State, 306 Ga. App. 257, 701 S.E.2d 892 (2010).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty pleas because the defendant failed to show that withdrawal of the defendant's pleas was necessary to correct a manifest injustice, and the trial court determined that a factual basis existed for the pleas pursuant to Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 33.9 and that the defendant understood the nature of the charges to which the defendant was pleading pursuant to Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 33.8(A); the district attorney did not misstate the law when the district attorney advised the defendant that a defendant in a case when the state was seeking the death penalty did not have an absolute right to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea before judgment was pronounced. Loyd v. State, 288 Ga. 481, 705 S.E.2d 616, cert. dismissed, 565 U.S. 971, 132 S. Ct. 474, 181 L. Ed. 2d 309 (U.S. 2011).

Because the defendant declined the opportunity at a plea hearing to discuss any concerns with counsel's representation, the defendant failed to demonstrate that counsel was ineffective; therefore, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's plea on that basis. Norwood v. State, 311 Ga. App. 815, 717 S.E.2d 316 (2011).

Defendant's contentions provided no basis for reversing the trial court's denial of the motion to withdraw the guilty plea because the record authorized the trial court to reject the defendant's claim that the defendant's counsel's performance was deficient and that there was a reasonable probability that, absent the deficiency, the defendant would have not pled guilty. The trial court expressly found that the defendant's testimony as to counsel's alleged promise regarding the sentence to be imposed lacked credibility and was contradicted by the testimony of defense counsel and the evidence of record. Davis v. State, 317 Ga. App. 157, 730 S.E.2d 30 (2012).

Defendant had no right to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea, because the defendant's first appeal only invalidated a discrete provision of the sentence, expressly leaving all other provision intact, and the plea thereon ineligible for withdrawal in the instant action, and the out-of-term motion was untimely. Humphrey v. State, 299 Ga. 197, 787 S.E.2d 169 (2016).

While the Georgia Court of Appeals has held that one's right to withdraw a guilty plea before sentencing under the terms of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b) can never be waived, the Georgia Supreme Court is not bound by those decisions, and it hereby expressly overrules Thompson v. State, 462 S.E.2d 404 (1995) and Ware v. State, 196 S.E.2d 896 (1973). Blackwell v. State, 299 Ga. 122, 786 S.E.2d 669 (2016).

Waiver or right to withdraw guilty plea. — Criminal defendant's right under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b) to withdraw a guilty plea prior to sentencing is a right that can be waived as there is no federal or state constitutional provision stating that a criminal defendant may withdraw a plea as a matter of right prior to sentence being pronounced; there is no express language in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b) itself indicating that, although the right to withdraw a guilty plea before sentence is pronounced exists, the right cannot be waived; and there is no public policy prohibiting the waiver of that right as the waiver of the right to withdraw a guilty plea after entering the plea fosters the interests of the state and the defendant by allowing the parties to avoid the uncertainty of a jury trial. Blackwell v. State, 299 Ga. 122, 786 S.E.2d 669 (2016).

Defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea before sentencing was properly denied because a criminal defendant's right to withdraw a guilty plea prior to sentencing was a right that could be waived; and the defendant waived that right as the exchange between the defendant and the prosecutor at the defendant's guilty plea hearing showed that the defendant understood that the defendant would not be allowed to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea once it had been entered; and a later exchange with the trial court itself at the guilty plea hearing underscored the fact that the defendant understood and affirmatively agreed that the defendant would not be able to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea once the plea had been entered. Blackwell v. State, 299 Ga. 122, 786 S.E.2d 669 (2016).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the guilty plea because the language of the form allowing a defendant to change a plea was too imprecise and too vague to establish that the defendant made a voluntary, knowing, and intelligent waiver of the right to withdraw the plea before a sentence was pronounced. Rice v. State, 354 Ga. App. 103, 840 S.E.2d 508 (2020).

Overruling of motion to withdraw is not reversible error. — It is not reversible error to overrule the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's plea of guilty after sentencing. Sears v. State, 45 Ga. App. 344, 164 S.E. 458 (1932).

Effect of withdrawal of sentence and postponement of pronouncement. — When the defendant initially enters a guilty plea and subsequently the judge orally pronounces a sentence, but on the defendant's motion withdraws the sentence and postpones pronouncement, at which time the defendant moves to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea and enter a plea of not guilty, it is error for the court to refuse to allow the defendant to do so. Clark v. State, 72 Ga. App. 603, 34 S.E.2d 608 (1945).

Withdrawal may not be accomplished through motion for new trial. — Neither before nor after sentence can a motion for a new trial be employed as a means of withdrawing a plea of guilty. Welch v. State, 63 Ga. App. 277, 11 S.E.2d 42 (1940).

When waiver of right to withdraw guilty plea valid. — Right of the defendant to withdraw the defendant's plea of guilty and plead not guilty is effectively waived only when the waiver is wholly voluntary and comes from the defendant without any solicitation or coercion whatsoever from either the state or the court. Farmer v. State, 128 Ga. App. 416, 196 S.E.2d 893 (1973).

Withdrawal of guilty plea when state seeks death penalty. — Guilty plea, voluntarily and knowingly entered in a capital felony case other than treason or aircraft hijacking, wherein the state seeks the death penalty, may not be withdrawn as a matter of right. Fair v. State, 245 Ga. 868, 268 S.E.2d 316 (1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 986, 101 S. Ct. 407, 66 L. Ed. 2d 250 (1980).

Defendant does not have the right in a case in which the state seeks the death penalty to withdraw a guilty plea voluntarily and knowingly entered. Browner v. State, 257 Ga. 321, 357 S.E.2d 559 (1987).

Consideration against the defendant of a withdrawn plea of guilty was prohibited by this section. Ward v. State, 123 Ga. App. 216, 180 S.E.2d 280 (1971).

This section applied to nolo contendere pleas. Fair v. State, 245 Ga. 868, 268 S.E.2d 316, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 986, 101 S. Ct. 407, 66 L. Ed. 2d 250 (1980).

Nolo contendere pleas stand on the same footing as a plea of guilty under this section. Marshall v. State, 128 Ga. App. 413, 197 S.E.2d 161 (1973).

Nolo contendere plea may be withdrawn. — Defendant who has entered a plea of nolo contendere may as a matter of right withdraw the plea after an oral announcement of sentence but before sentence is properly pronounced, i.e., in writing. Wright v. State, 75 Ga. App. 764, 44 S.E.2d 569 (1947).

Voluntary nolo contendere. — State met the state's burden of showing that the trial court expressly found that the defendant understood the nature of the charges and consequences of entering a nolo contendere plea; that no promises, force, or threats were used to obtain the plea; and that the defendant knowingly, freely, and voluntarily entered the plea; moreover, to contradict the defendant's claims, the state further presented evidence that prior to the plea, no form of coercion was imposed, and defense counsel expressly acquiesced to the sentence entered by the court with no objection from the defendant. Patel v. State, 283 Ga. App. 181, 641 S.E.2d 184 (2006).

Withdrawal of nolo contendere plea properly denied. — Because the defendant's appointed counsel conducted a sufficient investigation of the case to determine that the defendant had a viable defense and to advise the defendant to adhere to the nolo contendere plea the defendant entered, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the plea. Hopkins v. State, 274 Ga. App. 872, 619 S.E.2d 368 (2005).

Withdrawal after term of court when guilty plea entered. — Trial court properly held that the court lacked jurisdiction to entertain a defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea because the term of court at which the guilty plea was entered had expired; moreover, authority to modify sentences under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-1(f) did not include power to vacate a conviction on which the sentence was based. Ellison v. State, 283 Ga. 461, 660 S.E.2d 373 (2008).

Withdrawal of guilty plea not allowed. — Defendant could not withdraw the defendant's guilty plea after defense counsel kept the defendant informed of plea negotiations and recommended that the defendant not go to trial, and the defendant's verified acknowledgement of the plea hearing indicated that the defendant knowingly and voluntarily pled guilty. Weeks v. State, 260 Ga. App. 129, 578 S.E.2d 910 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's post-sentencing motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea to several offenses given that: (1) the record contradicted the defendant's claim of coercion by showing that the defendant was fully informed of the charges and the sentence, that the defendant waived the defendant's various trial rights and the right to remain silent, and that the defendant stated at the plea hearing that the defendant was acting voluntarily and was not coerced; (2) there was no support for the defendant's alleged fear that defense counsel would not defend the case if the defendant pled not guilty; (3) the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in finding on the facts of the case that the recommendations of defendant's counsel and defendant's family to proceed with the guilty plea did not constitute coercion; and (4) contrary to the defendant's ineffective assistance claim, in which the defendant asserted that defense counsel gave confusing advice about the sentence and failed to inform the defendant that the defendant could withdraw the plea before sentencing, the record supported the trial court's findings that the defendant was well aware of the sentence which the trial court intended to impose and that defense counsel told the defendant of the opportunity to withdraw the plea before sentencing. Johnson v. State, 260 Ga. App. 897, 581 S.E.2d 407 (2003).

Denial of the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea was affirmed on appeal when the defendant's purported statements of the case and the facts were not supported by proper record citations, the defendant was cognizant of all the rights the defendant was waiving, along with the possible consequences of the defendant's plea, and the defendant's plea was knowing and voluntary. Colbert v. State, 264 Ga. App. 519, 591 S.E.2d 364 (2003).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea as the plea was entered knowingly, intelligently, or voluntarily; the defendant did not show that the plea was the result of ineffective assistance of counsel since the record showed that defense counsel fully advised the defendant in all aspects of the plea and no evidence existed to show that defense counsel was unprepared, unresponsive, or otherwise incompetent to represent the defendant. Payne v. State, 271 Ga. App. 619, 610 S.E.2d 572 (2005).

Defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea to possession of cocaine was properly denied because the record revealed that the defendant entered the plea freely and voluntarily with a full understanding of the nature of the charges, the consequences of the plea, and the rights that the defendant was relinquishing; the defendant replied cogently to the trial court's inquiries during the guilty plea colloquy and made a reasoned decision to plead guilty, and the trial court's failure to inform the defendant that the defendant was waiving the right to appeal the denial of the motion to suppress and the right to appeal any issue regarding the sufficiency of the evidence was not error because the trial court twice advised the defendant that, by pleading guilty, the defendant was giving up the right to any determination by a jury as to guilt or innocence. Covin v. State, 272 Ga. App. 65, 611 S.E.2d 729 (2005).

Because the defendant's guilty plea and waiver of counsel were both knowing and voluntary, and because the delay in the appeal was caused by the defendant, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the plea. Smith v. State, 274 Ga. App. 568, 618 S.E.2d 182 (2005).

Because defense counsel went over the voluntary manslaughter statute with the defendant and explained intent to the defendant, the defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective; because the defendant's plea was freely and voluntarily made, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. Howard v. State, 274 Ga. App. 861, 619 S.E.2d 363 (2005).

Because the record showed that the defendant's plea was freely, voluntarily, knowingly, and understandingly made and entered, the trial court did not err in finding the defendant guilty of armed robbery and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime. Isaac v. State, 275 Ga. App. 262, 620 S.E.2d 182 (2005).

Denial of a defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea was not an abuse of discretion as the plea was made voluntarily and intelligently since the transcript revealed that the defendant: (1) understood the nature of the charges; (2) understood that by pleading guilty the defendant was waiving the defendant's rights to a jury trial, to cross-examine witnesses, to testify or to present other evidence, and not to incriminate the defendant; (3) knew the possible sentence; (4) was not promised special treatment in exchange for the guilty plea; (5) was not coerced; and (6) admitted that the defendant was offering the plea freely and voluntarily with a full understanding of all of the facts; moreover, defense counsel fully informed the defendant of the potential consequences of entering a non-negotiated plea. Price v. State, 280 Ga. App. 869, 635 S.E.2d 236 (2006).

Plea erroneously withdrawn absent formal defense motion. — Trial court erroneously dismissed an accusation charging the defendant with possession of alcohol by an underage person in violation of O.C.G.A. § 3-3-23(a)(2) based solely on the defendant's completion of an alcohol education course, without providing notice to the state or the defendant, and without conducting a sentencing hearing as such impermissibly interfered with the state's right to prosecute and no defect on the face of the accusation existed; moreover, the trial court erred in withdrawing the defendant's no contest plea absent a formal defense motion seeking the plea. State v. Carr, 287 Ga. App. 691, 652 S.E.2d 597 (2007).

Inapplicable to pleas resulting in first offender status. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea, since the state presented a sufficient factual basis for the crimes, the trial court iterated a sufficient allocution on the record, and sentenced the defendant pursuant to the agreed plea; furthermore, O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93 was inapplicable to pleas resulting in first offender status. Johanson v. State, 260 Ga. App. 181, 581 S.E.2d 564 (2003).

Duress is question of fact for trial court to resolve. — With respect to the voluntariness of a guilty plea, duress is a question of fact for the trial court to resolve, and an appeals court will only reverse the trial court's decision on this matter upon a showing of an abuse of discretion; a defendant was proven not to be under family pressure to plead guilty by the defendant's statements that the defendant was under no pressure to plead guilty. Jones v. State, 268 Ga. App. 101, 601 S.E.2d 469 (2004).

Motion to withdraw guilty plea could not be construed as habeas corpus petition as the motion was filed in the county in which the defendant was convicted, rather than against the warden in the county in which the defendant was incarcerated. Curry v. State, 274 Ga. App. 19, 616 S.E.2d 225 (2005).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion and amended motion to withdraw a guilty plea as the entry of the plea waived any right to assert a speedy trial issue on appeal. Moreover, given the fact that the defendant was represented by counsel at the time both pro se speedy trial motions were filed, and absent evidence that counsel filed or adopted the motions, no viable demand for a speedy trial existed in the record. Wallace v. State, 288 Ga. App. 480, 654 S.E.2d 442 (2007).

Sentence proper when Alford plea withdrawn. — Defendant's claim that the defendant was improperly sentenced on additional counts because those counts were to be dismissed as part of a negotiated plea was disingenuous. While the defendant initially entered an Alford plea to two counts in exchange for the state's agreement to drop the other charges, it was clear that the defendant changed the defendant's mind; while looking for the original indictment at trial, the parties mentioned that the last time the parties saw the indictment was when the defendant entered the plea, and no one said that the defendant wanted to continue with that plea, and the defendant admitted at the first hearing on the defendant's motion for a new trial that the defendant withdrew the guilty plea. Ellis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 17, 637 S.E.2d 729 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0324, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 66 (2007), overruled on other grounds by State v. Lane, 308 Ga. 10, 838 S.E.2d 808 (2020).

Failure to advise of effect on immigration status was not basis to set aside plea. — Denial of the defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal was proper because the defendant failed to show that the defendant's guilty plea was not knowingly and voluntarily entered, and, inter alia, the record showed that the defendant understood the rights the defendant was waiving and the possible consequences of the plea; the effect of the plea on the defendant's immigration status was a "collateral consequence" of the plea, and any failure to advise the defendant of this effect pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(c) was not a basis to set aside the plea. The state was not required to show that Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 33.8 was recited to the letter to rebut an attack on a guilty plea. Smith v. State, 298 Ga. App. 458, 680 S.E.2d 516 (2009), aff'd, 287 Ga. 391, 697 S.E.2d 177 (2010).

Although a trial court did not comply with O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(c) and Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 33.8(C)(2) when the court failed to advise a resident alien that the alien's guilty but mentally ill plea could have an impact on immigration status, the immigration consequences were collateral consequences, the asserted fact that the defendant was not a citizen was not apparent from the record, there was no record evidence that the defendant was not aware of the potential immigration consequences from some other source and, therefore, the defendant did not show resulting harm or manifest injustice. Smith v. State, 287 Ga. 391, 697 S.E.2d 177 (2010), overruled on other grounds by Collier v. State, 834 S.E.2d 769, 2019 Ga. LEXIS 708 (Ga. 2019).

Evidence of withdrawn guilty plea improperly admitted. — Defendant testified to having no knowledge of a syringe or methamphetamine found by police; the codefendant's counsel impeached the defendant on cross-examination with evidence of the defendant's withdrawn guilty plea to possession of methamphetamine. As evidence of a withdrawn guilty plea was inadmissible under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93(b), and it could not be said that this evidence did not affect the verdict, the defendant was entitled to a new trial. Bertholf v. State, 298 Ga. App. 612, 680 S.E.2d 652 (2009).

Merger waived when defendant voluntarily pled guilty. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's request to merge the defendant's convictions for statutory rape and fornication for the purpose of sentencing because the defendant waived the issue of whether the offenses should have been merged when the defendant knowingly and voluntarily pled guilty to each of the crimes. Osborne v. State, 318 Ga. App. 339, 734 S.E.2d 59 (2012).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Entry of Alford plea by juvenile. — Juvenile court erred by denying a juvenile's request to enter an Alford plea since the Georgia General Assembly did not expressly prohibit the entry of Alford pleas in juvenile court, and the juvenile court was required to construe O.C.G.A. § 15-11-580 liberally to ensure the juvenile's best interests. In the Interest of B. C., 333 Ga. App. 763, 777 S.E.2d 52 (2015).

Plea of not guilty forms issue to be tried by jury. — Under this section, the defendant's plea of not guilty to the first indictment forms an issue to be tried by the jury, and it is the duty of the state to try the defendant upon that issue alone without in effect announcing to the prospective jurors that there also exist other indictments against this defendant for other crimes. Sides v. State, 213 Ga. 482, 99 S.E.2d 884 (1957).

Defendant's refusal to plead. — Felony murder defendant asserted that the trial court erred in directing the clerk of court to enter a plea of not guilty for the defendant when the defendant declined to enter a plea, stating instead, "I want to plead mute." However, under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-94, if a defendant stands mute, the clerk is required to enter a plea of not guilty. Johnson v. State, 300 Ga. 252, 794 S.E.2d 60 (2016).

Charges to jury that indictment and plea form the issues. — Charge of the court to the jury that: "neither the indictment nor the plea of not guilty is evidence, and is not to be considered by you as evidence," and that: "the indictment and plea of not guilty form the issues which you, the ladies and gentlemen of the jury, are to determine," is a correct charge of the law. Zilinmon v. State, 234 Ga. 535, 216 S.E.2d 830 (1975), overruled by Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006).

Identification of defendant. — Since the defendant appeared at arraignment and entered a plea of not guilty, but had not raised the objection that the defendant was not the person named in the indictment, it was reasonable for the jury to infer that the defendant was the person so named. Robinson v. State, 231 Ga. App. 368, 498 S.E.2d 579 (1998).

Charge to jury regarding fact that defendant stood mute at defendant's arraignment. — Charge to the jury that "to this indictment the defendant has stood mute, which has the same effect as entering a plea of not guilty," when counsel stated that the accused stood mute and waived a jury, and the solicitor (now district attorney) objected to waiving a jury, is not erroneous on grounds that the court failed to inform the jury that the accused also sought to waive the jury, and that the charge could cause the jury to believe that the accused admitted guilt by not pleading not guilty. Bloodworth v. State, 216 Ga. 572, 118 S.E.2d 374 (1961).

Clerk's recordation controls as to when issue is joined. — It is the clerk's recordation on the minutes which controls as to when issue is joined for purposes of determining whether there has been a denial of the right to a speedy trial. State v. Fly, 193 Ga. App. 190, 387 S.E.2d 347 (1989).

By formally denying the charge, the defendant's plea formed the issue of whether the defendant was or was not guilty of the charge. The prosecutor's initial failure to record it and later refusal to do so did not avoid the issue being joined de jure. State v. Fly, 193 Ga. App. 190, 387 S.E.2d 347 (1989).

(a) The defendant in all criminal cases other than capital felonies in any court of this state, whether the offense charged is a felony or a misdemeanor, may, with the consent and approval of the judge of the court, enter a plea of nolo contendere instead of a plea of guilty or not guilty.

(b) Should the judge allow a plea of nolo contendere to be entered, he shall thereupon be authorized to impose such sentence as may be authorized by law as to the offense charged.

(c) Except as otherwise provided by law, a plea of nolo contendere shall not be used against the defendant in any other court or proceedings as an admission of guilt or otherwise or for any purpose; and the plea shall not be deemed a plea of guilty for the purpose of effecting any civil disqualification of the defendant to hold public office, to vote, to serve upon any jury, or any other civil disqualification imposed upon a person convicted of any offense under the laws of this state. The plea shall be deemed and held to put the defendant in jeopardy within the meaning of Article I, Section I, Paragraph XVIII of the Constitution of this state after sentence has been imposed.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Purpose of plea of nolo contendere. — O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95 was designed to prevent the state from introducing a nolo contendere plea as evidence of a prior similar crime. Corbitt v. State, 190 Ga. App. 509, 379 S.E.2d 535 (1989).

Origin. — Privilege of entering a plea of nolo contendere is statutory in origin, and it was designed to cover situations when the side effects of a plea of guilty, in addition to the penalties provided by law, would be too harsh. Fortson v. Hopper, 242 Ga. 81, 247 S.E.2d 875 (1978).

Legislative intent. — General Assembly intended for the plea of nolo contendere to stand upon the same footing as a plea of guilty in all respects, except when otherwise specially provided, to constitute the remedy of the evil of the old law when only a plea of guilty or not guilty was available, and intended that the right to withdraw the plea be accorded any time before pronouncement of judgment, as provided in former Code 1933, § 27-1404 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-7-93), as to a plea of guilty. Wright v. State, 75 Ga. App. 764, 44 S.E.2d 569 (1947).

Pleas of nolo contendere in this state are entirely of statutory origin. — Prior to Ga. L. 1946, p. 142, no such procedure was embraced in the law, although pleas of nolo contendere had been in use in the federal district courts. Nelson v. State, 87 Ga. App. 644, 75 S.E.2d 39 (1953).

Licensing laws excepted from prohibited use. — Words "except as otherwise provided by law" in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95(c) apply to except both state laws and local ordinances dealing with professional licensing from the provisions limiting the use of a nolo contendere plea; thus, a taxi driver's license could be revoked based on the driver's plea of nolo contendere to a charge of driving under the influence brought under city ordinances. City of Atlanta v. Okonkwo, 216 Ga. App. 821, 456 S.E.2d 58 (1995).

Construction with § 40-5-58. — Effect of O.C.G.A. § 40-5-58(d) is to create an exception to the rule of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95 concerning the consequences of a plea of nolo contendere. O.C.G.A. § 40-5-58(d) does not run afoul of the prohibition in Ga. Const. 1976, Art. III, Sec. VII, Para. IV (Ga. Const. 1983, Art. III, Sec. V, Para. III) against the passage of laws referring to more than one subject matter or containing matter different from what is expressed in the title. Smith v. State, 248 Ga. 828, 286 S.E.2d 709 (1982).

O.C.G.A. § 40-5-58(d) does not constitute an amendment to or repeal of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95 within the meaning of Ga. Const. 1976, Art. III, Sec. VII, Para. XII (Ga. Const. 1983, Art. III, Sec. V, Para. IV). Smith v. State, 248 Ga. 828, 286 S.E.2d 709 (1982).

Construction with § 40-5-63. — Ga. L. 1946, p. 142, §§ 1-3 (see O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95) refers generally to the effects of pleas of nolo contendere as compared with pleas of guilty and makes no reference to the suspension of licenses. Since former Code 1933, § 6813-312 (see O.C.G.A. § 40-5-63(a)(2)) referred not to crimes generally, but only to the specific offenses of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs, the two statutes have concurrent efficacy. Howe v. Cofer, 144 Ga. App. 589, 241 S.E.2d 472 (1978).

Plea of nolo contendere defined. — Plea of nolo contendere is defined as an assertion by the defendant that the defendant does not desire to contest the truth of the charges against the defendant. Thus, it is not a plea of not guilty, nor is it a plea of guilty. Rather, it lies approximately midway between the two extremes. Fortson v. Hopper, 242 Ga. 81, 247 S.E.2d 875 (1978).

Plea of nolo contendere constitutes a plea of guilty except that the plea cannot work any civil disqualification on the defendant. Fortson v. Hopper, 242 Ga. 81, 247 S.E.2d 875 (1978).

Conditional pleas not accepted. — Because the conditional plea procedures established in Mims v. State, 201 Ga. App. 277, 410 S.E.2d 824, (1991), are disapproved, pleas in which the accused attempts to condition upon the preservation of the rights to raise non-jurisdictional errors by the trial court will not be considered by the appeals court. Hooten v. State, 212 Ga. App. 770, 442 S.E.2d 836 (1994).

When plea may be entered. — Subject to the approval and consent of the judge of the court, a plea of nolo contendere may be entered in any criminal case in any court of the state, except in capital felony cases. Fortson v. Hopper, 242 Ga. 81, 247 S.E.2d 875 (1978).

Plea admitted as harmless error. — Despite the prohibition in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95(c) of the admission of a nolo contendere plea as evidence of a prior similar crime, given that evidence of five other similar drug transactions was properly submitted to the jury, the defendant's plea was admissible as not having contributed to the judgment of conviction. Parrott v. State, 206 Ga. App. 829, 427 S.E.2d 276 (1993).

Entering a plea of nolo contendere is a privilege rather than a right. Fortson v. Hopper, 242 Ga. 81, 247 S.E.2d 875 (1978).

Privilege of entering plea is in court's discretion. — Privilege of a defendant to enter a plea of nolo contendere is within the discretion of the trial court. Bennett v. State, 153 Ga. App. 21, 264 S.E.2d 516 (1980).

Right to petition. — Trial court's refusal to consider the defendant's petition to enter a plea of nolo contendere based on a blanket policy foreclosing any consideration of the propriety of the plea in all cases was an abdication by the court of the court's judicial responsibility. Furthermore, if the right to tender a petition to enter a plea of nolo contendere is to be preserved on appeal, the record must reflect an objection and ruling thereon to avoid waiver. Vanegas v. State, 249 Ga. App. 76, 547 S.E.2d 718 (2001).

Defendant need not be informed of all possible consequences of plea. — While it is unquestioned that a guilty plea or a nolo contendere plea must be knowingly and voluntarily made after proper advice and with a full understanding of the consequences, the trial court is not required to inform a defendant of all the possible collateral consequences of the defendant's plea including those at the hands of a different sovereign. Davis v. State, 151 Ga. App. 736, 261 S.E.2d 468 (1979).

Daughter's recantation of accusations. — Defendant's daughter's recantation of the accusations made against the defendant could not serve as a basis for a claim that there was clear and convincing proof of the defendant's innocence at the time the court accepted an Alford plea as such was known to the defendant before the guilty plea was entered. Schlau v. State, 282 Ga. App. 460, 638 S.E.2d 895 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0424, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 147 (Ga. 2007).

Father's nolo contendere plea to family violence battery inadmissible in custody proceeding. — In a child custody modification pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 19-9-3(a)(2), the trial court erred in considering evidence of the father's nolo contendere plea of family violence battery against the child; the plea was not admissible pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95(c), and the conduct reflected in the plea occurred prior to the parties' most recent custody order. Wilson v. Perkins, 344 Ga. App. 869, 811 S.E.2d 518 (2018).

Good faith reliance on advice of counsel. — Person cannot avoid the legal consequences of a plea even if based on good faith reliance on the advice of counsel. Davis v. State, 151 Ga. App. 736, 261 S.E.2d 468 (1979).

Defendant who has entered a plea of nolo contendere may withdraw the plea after an oral announcement of sentence but before sentence is properly pronounced, i.e., in writing as a matter of right. Wright v. State, 75 Ga. App. 764, 44 S.E.2d 569 (1947).

Authorized sentence may be imposed upon acceptance of plea. — When the judge accepts the plea of nolo contendere, the judge is empowered to impose whatever sentence is provided by law for the crime, just as if the defendant has been convicted by a jury or entered a plea of guilty. Fortson v. Hopper, 242 Ga. 81, 247 S.E.2d 875 (1978).

Civil disqualification may be made a condition of a suspended sentence under a plea of nolo contendere. Falkenhainer v. State, 122 Ga. App. 478, 177 S.E.2d 380 (1970).

Validity of sentence imposed on basis of unauthorized nolo contendere plea to capital felony. — See Fortson v. Hopper, 242 Ga. 81, 247 S.E.2d 875 (1978).

Double jeopardy bar when indictment not stating specific date or transaction. — When a case belongs to the class of cases, such as possession of liquor on which taxes have not been paid, when the state by the generality of the indictment need not be confined to proof of any specific date or transaction within the period of limitation, the result is that a plea of nolo contendere for a prior particular crime will usually operate as a bar for any such offense committed within the period of limitation previously to the second indictment, since to hold otherwise would twice place the defendant in jeopardy. Key v. State, 83 Ga. App. 839, 65 S.E.2d 278 (1951).

Reinstatement of guilty plea by judge after return from absence. — Sentencing judge did not err in vacating and setting aside allowance of change of plea of guilty and acceptance of a nolo contendere plea by judge acting in judge's absence and in reinstating plea of guilty. Hall v. State, 163 Ga. App. 59, 293 S.E.2d 874 (1982).

Disqualification from public office. — When defendant pled nolo contendere in Florida to a felony, which was a felony under Georgia law, the defendant was exempted from disqualification to hold public office by O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95(c) as the nolo plea could not be deemed a guilty plea for the purposes of effecting a civil disqualification of defendant to hold public office. Hardin v. Brookins, 275 Ga. 477, 569 S.E.2d 511 (2002).

In a case in which the defendant appealed a conviction for false swearing, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-10-71(a), challenging the sufficiency of the evidence, the state failed to prove that the defendant had the requisite criminal intent to support the conviction when the defendant signed a declarations of candidacy for county commissioner as set forth in O.C.G.A. §§ 21-2-132 and 21-2-153. Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95(c), a judgment imposing a sentence following a plea of nolo contendere was considered a conviction for some purposes; however, such a conviction did not disqualify the defendant from holding public office or otherwise deprive the defendant of any civil or political rights, and there was no evidence that the defendant intended to deceive the election board or the voters as the defendant believed that the 1986 nolo contendere conviction to a charge of aggravated assault was generally known in the county. Spillers v. State, 299 Ga. App. 854, 683 S.E.2d 903 (2009).

Judge who enters plea of nolo contendere to crime involving moral turpitude is guilty of conduct which brings the judicial office into disrepute. This is so even though the question of guilt is not formally adjudicated by such a plea. In re Judge No. 491, 249 Ga. 30, 287 S.E.2d 2 (1982).

Judicial Qualifications Commission may investigate judge's nolo contendere plea. — Consideration by the Judicial Qualifications Commission of a judge's nolo contendere plea to a felony involving moral turpitude, pursuant to

Ga. Const. 1976, Art. VI, Sec. XIII, Para. III (Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. VII, Para. VII), is not a denial of equal protection and due process to the defendant under either state or federal Constitutions. In re Judge No. 491, 249 Ga. 30, 287 S.E.2d 2 (1982).

Admission of conviction on plea as impeachment evidence. — Trial court, in an action for conversion, was authorized to admit a properly certified copy of the plaintiff's shoplifting conviction on a plea of nolo contendere for consideration by the jury as impeachment evidence, subject to the plaintiff's right to explain the circumstances surrounding the conviction. Tilley v. Page, 181 Ga. App. 98, 351 S.E.2d 464 (1986).

On appeal from a conviction for driving under the influence of alcohol, the state's use of a previous conviction entered on a nolo contendere plea entitled the appellant to a new trial because the nolo contendere plea was not admissible for impeachment under previous exceptions provided by law. Rocco v. State, 191 Ga. App. 655, 382 S.E.2d 391 (1989).

It would violate rules of evidentiary law, and contravene the purpose of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95(c), to allow the prosecution to elicit testimony from a criminal defendant on cross-examination and then impeach such testimony through use of a prior criminal conviction entered on a plea of nolo contendere. State v. Rocco, 259 Ga. 463, 384 S.E.2d 183 (1989); Waters v. State, 210 Ga. App. 305, 436 S.E.2d 44 (1993).

State may use the conviction of the defendant entered on a nolo contendere plea to disprove the testimony of a defense witness that no charges had been brought against the defendant as a result of the crime which was the subject of the plea. In such case, it is the fact that the nolo contendere plea had been entered, and not the defendant's guilt of the crime charged, that is used to impeach the witness' testimony. State v. Rocco, 259 Ga. 463, 384 S.E.2d 183 (1989).

Simple battery, a misdemeanor, has been recognized to be a crime not involving moral turpitude, and a plea of nolo contendere to a charge of simple battery is admissible for impeachment of the defendant in the subsequent trial of the civil suit stemming from the battery. Jabaley v. Mitchell, 201 Ga. App. 477, 411 S.E.2d 545 (1991).

Trial court properly did not permit the defendant to impeach a crime scene investigator's testimony by inquiring into the fact that the officer pled nolo contendere to a misdemeanor criminal trespass charge because: (1) defense counsel failed to lay a proper ground for the conviction's admission as no certified copy of a conviction was tendered; (2) criminal trespass is a misdemeanor and not a crime of moral turpitude; as such, it cannot be used for impeachment purposes; and (3) a plea of nolo contendere cannot be used against a defendant in any other court as an admission of guilt or for any purpose. Armour v. State, 265 Ga. App. 569, 594 S.E.2d 765 (2004).

Allowing the use of a plea of nolo contendere for impeachment purposes is in direct conflict with O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95(c). Pitmon v. State, 265 Ga. App. 655, 595 S.E.2d 360 (2004).

Defendant was properly prevented from impeaching the credibility of the victim's friend as a witness based on the witness's nolo contendere plea to misdemeanor shoplifting because when the legislature enacted O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95(c), which prohibited the use of such a plea in any other court for any purpose, the statute did not carve out an exception for impeachment. Hooper v. State, 284 Ga. 824, 672 S.E.2d 638 (2009).

Nolo contendere plea could not be used as proof of prior conviction under recidivist statute. — Trial court erred in considering the defendant's nolo contendere plea as proof of a prior conviction under the recidivist statute because the plain language of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-7-95 and 17-10-7(c) indicated that such a plea could not be used against the defendant in sentencing the defendant as a recidivist. Miller v. State, 353 Ga. App. 518, 838 S.E.2d 602 (2020).

Evidence of similar crime resulting in nolo contendere plea. — State may use as a similar transaction, evidence of an independent crime committed by the accused that resulted in a plea of nolo contendere, provided that no evidence of the actual nolo plea is introduced. Proulx v. State, 196 Ga. App. 303, 395 S.E.2d 668 (1990); Hansen v. State, 205 Ga. App. 604, 423 S.E.2d 273, cert. denied, 205 Ga. App. 900, 423 S.E.2d 273 (1992).

Evidence of a prior driving under the influence offense that culminated in a plea of nolo contendere was not rendered inadmissible under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95(c) because the state made no reference to the plea in presenting evidence of the offense as a similar transaction. Harris v. State, 210 Ga. App. 366, 436 S.E.2d 231 (1993).

Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence a no contest plea and in "making reference" to the plea with regard to the similar transaction evidence as the defendant's failure to object to the introduction of the evidence precluded review of the issue on appeal; further, the plea was admissible to show a conviction for purposes of the defendant's alleged failure to register as a sex offender under former O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12 and the jury was permitted to consider the plea as similar transaction evidence. Bryson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 36, 638 S.E.2d 181 (2006).

Admission of no contest plea not plain error. — Pretermitting whether the second defendant showed that the admission of the evidence of the second defendant's no contest plea to disrupting a public school and affray was obviously erroneous, the second defendant did not even allege that the outcome of the trial was likely affected by its admission, especially considering that other, independent evidence was presented that the second defendant was involved in fighting at the second defendant's public school. Anthony v. State, 303 Ga. 399, 811 S.E.2d 399 (2018).

Nolo contendere plea not admissible to establish probation violation. — Under the plain and unambiguous language of O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95(c), a nolo contendere plea cannot be used to establish a probation violation. Bolden v. State, 275 Ga. 180, 563 S.E.2d 858 (2002).

"Alford plea" not a plea of nolo contendere. — Defendant's plea of guilty under North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25, 91 S. Ct. 160, 27 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1970), was not a plea of nolo contendere because the plea required a court determination that there was a factual basis therefor and such plea could be used as evidence of a similar act. Dixon v. State, 240 Ga. App. 644, 524 S.E.2d 734 (1999).

Sentence proper when Alford plea withdrawn. — Defendant's claim that the defendant was improperly sentenced on additional counts because those counts were to be dismissed as part of a negotiated plea was disingenuous. While defendant initially entered an Alford plea to two counts in exchange for the state's agreement to drop the other charges, it was clear that the defendant changed the defendant's mind; while looking for the original indictment at trial, the parties mentioned that the last time the parties saw the indictment was when the defendant entered the plea, and no one said that the defendant wanted to continue with that plea, and the defendant admitted at the first hearing on the defendant's motion for a new trial that the defendant withdrew the guilty plea. Ellis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 17, 637 S.E.2d 729 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0324, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 66 (2007), overruled on other grounds by State v. Lane, 308 Ga. 10, 838 S.E.2d 808 (2020).

Counsel not ineffective for failure to anticipate change in law. — Because defense counsel could not have been held to a duty to anticipate changes in the law regarding the use of a nolo plea to impeach a witness, the defendant's allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel lacked merit. Martin v. State, 281 Ga. 778, 642 S.E.2d 837 (2007).

Punitive damages. — O.C.G.A. § 17-7-95 prohibits use of a prior plea of nolo contendere as evidence relevant to the issue of punitive damages. Holt v. Grinnell, 212 Ga. App. 520, 441 S.E.2d 874 (1994).

In an action for injuries arising from an automobile accident, after the defendant pled guilty to driving under the influence of alcohol, evidence that the defendant twice previously committed the offense of DUI was admissible for the purpose of determining punitive damages as long as there was no reference to prior pleas of nolo contendere, or to the disposition of DUI charges resulting from such pleas. Holt v. Grinnell, 212 Ga. App. 520, 441 S.E.2d 874 (1994).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Plea does not forfeit qualification for license to carry a pistol. — Plea of nolo contendere to a felony is not deemed a plea of guilty to the felony so as to prevent the individual from qualifying for a license to carry a pistol. 1974 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U74-67.

Plea does not forfeit right to possess firearm. — Plea of nolo contendere in a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence does not take away the right to possess a firearm under the Gun Control Act of 1968, 18 U.S.C. § 921 et seq. 1998 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 98-2.

Consideration of the plea by the Board of Regents in appointment to teaching position. — Since a plea of nolo contendere may not be raised in another proceeding as a basis for any civil disqualification, the Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia is not legally prohibited by the plea from appointing an individual to a teaching position. 1963-65 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 566.

Conviction resulting from a nolo contendere plea cannot be used to impose any disability including disqualification from voting, holding public office, and jury service. 1983 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 83-33.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

District attorney is ordinarily the prosecuting officer. — In criminal proceedings initiated by indictment by the grand jury, the solicitor general (now district attorney) is ordinarily the prosecuting officer for the state. Curtis v. State, 99 Ga. App. 732, 109 S.E.2d 868 (1959).

Signature of the defendant is not required on the plea entered on the indictment because the signature by the solicitor general (now district attorney) is sufficient. Brantley v. State, 121 Ga. App. 79, 172 S.E.2d 852 (1970).

Signature of the defendant is not required on the plea entered on the indictment. When the indictment showed clearly that the district attorney entered and signed this statement: "The Defendant Vaughn Baker waives being formally arraigned and pleads not guilty," this satisfied the requirements of the statutes and the rights of the defendant at trial. Baker v. State, 202 Ga. App. 892, 416 S.E.2d 295, cert. denied, 202 Ga. App. 905, 416 S.E.2d 295 (1992).

Entries made when arraignment waived. — When arraignment is waived, the solicitor general (now district attorney) may enter this fact and the plea of not guilty on the indictment and an issue is made for trial. No further pleading need be done by the defendant. Tarver v. State, 95 Ga. 222, 21 S.E. 381 (1894).

Effect of entry when arraignment and plea have not actually taken place. — When the solicitor general (now district attorney) enters on the indictment arraignment and plea when by inadvertence there has been neither arraignment nor plea, and as a result there is really no issue before the court, the solicitor general (now district attorney) may enter a nolle prosequi at any time before the introduction of evidence. In such a case, there being no issue, the defendant is not entitled to a verdict of not guilty. Bryans v. State, 34 Ga. 323 (1866).

If the clerk of the court shall fail or neglect to record the arraignment and plea of the person accused of committing a crime at the time the arraignment and plea are made, the recordation may be done at any time afterward by order of the court; and this shall cure the error or omission of the clerk.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Waiver for failure to timely call court's attention to defects. — Law of this state is well settled that a defendant may waive arraignment and plea by failure to call the attention of the court to this defect in the proceedings at the proper time, and when it does not appear that the defendant made any mention of the fact until after the verdict the defendant is conclusively presumed to have done so. Sellers v. State, 82 Ga. App. 761, 62 S.E.2d 395 (1950).

Prima facie proof of guilty plea. — When there is an entry on the accusation of waiver of arraignment and plea of guilty, signed by the acting solicitor (now district attorney), such record entry furnishes prima facie evidence of a plea of guilty by the defendant. Jackson v. Lowry, 171 Ga. 349, 155 S.E. 466 (1930).

Presumption that guilty plea has been made and entered. — In the absence of anything to the contrary, it will be presumed that the accused orally plead guilty, and that the clerk of the court entered the plea of guilty upon the minutes of the court as required by the Code. Jackson v. Lowry, 171 Ga. 349, 155 S.E. 466 (1930).

GENERAL PROVISIONS

17-7-110. Time for filing pretrial motions.

All pretrial motions, including demurrers and special pleas, shall be filed within ten days after the date of arraignment, unless the time for filing is extended by the court.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Construction of ten day period. — While there may be a constitutional or other right to make a certain motion after the time period set forth in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-110, that does not mean ruling that a motion filed within the time period set forth in § 17-7-110 is untimely; under the plain language of the statute, any pretrial motion will be considered timely if made before ten days after the date of the arraignment, and some motions may be cognizable after that time, but determining the timeliness of such must rest upon other authority. State v. Dempsey, 290 Ga. 763, 727 S.E.2d 670 (2012).

O.C.G.A. § 17-7-110 provides that all pretrial motions, including demurrers and special pleas, shall be filed within ten days after the date of arraignment, unless the time for filing is extended by the court. The failure to file a timely special demurrer seeking additional information constitutes a waiver of the right to be tried on a perfect indictment. Strickland v. State, 349 Ga. App. 673, 824 S.E.2d 555 (2019).

Motion untimely and no extension sought. — Trial court did not err in refusing to consider the defendant's motion to suppress because the motion was untimely, the defendant failed to hire private counsel as was indicated and, even after court-appointed counsel was provided, the defendant failed to seek leave to file a motion for an extension after the ten day filing period. Taylor v. State, 326 Ga. App. 27, 755 S.E.2d 839 (2014).

Trial court did not err in refusing to hear the defendant's motion to suppress on the ground that the motion was untimely because the defendant failed to move for and obtain an extension of time; the defendant's proffered amendment of the motion to suppress, which was tendered more than one month after the defendant waived arraignment, was untimely; and, although the defendant had the benefit of testimony from the state's witnesses regarding the issues in the case at the probation revocation hearing in July 2010, the defendant failed to take timely advantage of the opportunity to challenge the traffic stop. Gonzalez v. State, 334 Ga. App. 706, 780 S.E.2d 383 (2015).

Failure to file motion to suppress to challenge evidence. — Because the defendant did not file a timely motion to suppress any physical evidence in the case, the defendant waived any right to claim that the underlying search which produced the physical evidence was unconstitutional; thus, the defendant was not entitled to exclusion of testimony describing the physical evidence on the basis that the testimony was the fruit of an unconstitutional search. Riley v. State, No. A20A1376, 2020 Ga. App. LEXIS 431 (July 21, 2020).

Motion to quash indictment properly denied. — Defendant's motion to quash an indictment and a subsequent motion to quash a failure to register as a sex offender count under former O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12 were properly denied as whether the rule on the timing of a motion to quash had been changed by O.C.G.A. § 17-7-110 was not reached because the trial court also properly denied the motion on the merits; the defendant waived the right to challenge the form of the failure to register count of the indictment because the defendant's motion was not made before entry of a not guilty plea and even if § 17-7-110 applied to the filing of the defendant's motion, it was untimely under that statute. Bryson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 36, 638 S.E.2d 181 (2006).

Motion to quash indictment should have been granted. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to quash an indictment because the motion was filed before the statutory deadline contained in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-110; no arraignment occurred when the defendant filed the motion. State v. Dempsey, 290 Ga. 763, 727 S.E.2d 670 (2012).

Oral motion to dismiss indictment properly denied. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's oral motion in arrest of judgment or motion to dismiss or general demurrer, made after the jury was sworn but before the trial began, as while the nolle pros of the coindictee could have been drawn more explicitly, considering it in context and in light of a subsequent indictment, which only contained one count against the coindictee, there was no intent shown that the charges against defendant required reindictment. Atkins v. State, 291 Ga. App. 863, 663 S.E.2d 286 (2008).

State waived claim that motion was untimely. — State waived the state's claim that the defendant's motion to suppress, filed two months after arraignment, was untimely as the state failed to raise the issue or object to the motion on that basis before the trial court; moreover, the state's failure to object was particularly significant in light of the express provision in O.C.G.A. § 17-7-110 allowing the trial court to extend the time for filing. Hicks v. State, 287 Ga. App. 105, 650 S.E.2d 767 (2007).

Untimely pretrial motions properly denied. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by denying the defendant's motion to file untimely pre-trial motions because it was within the court's discretion to refuse to consider the motion since the defendant failed to use reasonable diligence to obtain counsel prior to the arraignment. Preston v. State, 327 Ga. App. 556, 760 S.E.2d 176 (2014).

Special demurrers to indictment. — Defendant's special demurrers to an indictment charging the defendant with 24 counts of sexual exploitation of children were improperly dismissed as untimely under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-110 because the plain language of a 2003 amendment allowed special demurrers to be filed within ten days of arraignment as the defendant had done; the court of appeals improperly interpreted case law decided after the statute's effective date as the defendants in those cases had been convicted and arraigned prior to the effective date of the statute. Palmer v. State, 282 Ga. 466, 651 S.E.2d 86 (2007).

Accusation was not fatally defective because the accusation informed the defendants of the charges against the defendants and protected the defendants against another prosecution for the same offense, and the defendants could not admit that the defendants passed in an area defined by markings as a no-passing zone without being guilty of the crime charged. Moreover, to the extent that the defendants' attack on the accusation could be read as a special demurrer, seeking greater specificity, the attack was waived by the defendants' failure to raise the issue within ten days after the defendants pled to the accusation. Haynes-Turner v. State, 289 Ga. App. 652, 658 S.E.2d 203 (2008).
